Crawford, Freelton, to Clifford Davidson Graham, Stratford, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Graham, Ottawa. The church was prettily decorated in delphiniums and roses with a background of daisies. The bride entered the church with her father to the strains of Lohengrin's Bridal Chorus, played by Mrs. A. G. Laking, Freelton. Miss Mary Graham, Ottawa, sister of the groom, acted as bridesmaid, in a gown of pink lace and net, with hat and shoes to match. She carried a bouquet of pale blue delphiniums and pink roses. Master Kenneth Moore, Dundas, cousin of the bride, was ringbearer, dressed in a white satin suit, carrying a pillow to match decorated with orange blossoms. The groom was supported by Ian McLeod, Clinton, who acted as groomsman. During the signing of the registar, Miss Elmira King, Aberfoyle, cousin of the bride played a violin selection. Messrs. Frank Graham and Russell Wise were the ushers.

The reception was held at Mapledale Farm. The bride's mother received in a gown of brown georgette with a corsage bouquet of Talisman roses and the groom's mother in black georgette and lace with corsage bouquet of pink roses. The happy couple left on a motor trip to Ottawa and Montreal, the bride travelling in a brown and eggshell ensemble with linen accessories. They will reside in Stratford on their return.

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS

Sheila O'Shay, formerly a popular actress, and now the wife of the young millionaire Don Ellsworth, disappears, leavin. no trace behind her. Don visits Dr. Cavanaugh the famous criminologist and confesses that his married life has been unhappy. Dr. Cavanaugh agrees to investigate the case. Peter Piper, reporter of The Herald, is sent to Dr. Cavanaugh's home. By accident he meets the Doctor's adopted daughter, Barbara Cavanaugh, and learns she is interested in the case. She confesses she was engaged to Don Ellsworth before his marriage, and persuades Peter to leave without seeing Dr. Cavanaugh.

And meanwhile? Meanwhile Peter had a great "follow" story. Dr. Cavanaugh, when he had moved west from New York, officially retired—though his reputation made complete retirement impossible—had introduced Barbara as his daughter, which, indeed, she legally was. The romantic, Cinderella story of her adoption from a foundlings' home, her secret engagement to Don Ellsworth, the spectacular young multi-millionaire—a great story! And written as Peter Piper would write it—delicately, with the fairytale quality in it.

"There's a little thing like loyalty." Peter found that, remembering her words, he remembered almost audibly the tone of her voice, like a little wind in the trees.

But his loyalty was to the paper, not to a girl whom he had seen only once, just as hers was to her father, not to him. Personalities must not interfere. That was the code. He remembered the legend of "Big Joe" McCullen, owner of a paper in Sacramento, who had refused to suppress the story in his own paper when his boy went wrong and was picked up for stealing an automobile in the course of a drunken spree. That was the honor of newspaperdom.

And yet—was it all warped, perverted, narrow, this code that the paper came before all else? There was more to life than the newspapers. This girl's life—

Peter shot across a boulevard stop sign, and listened with unaccustomed meekness to the irate words of the traffic cop. The neatly printed "Press Car" sign on Bossy's grimy windshield goaded the policeman to fury.

"You reporters think you own the earth!" he bellowed.

But Peter did not respond with the expected "comeback," and the policeman, somewhat disappointed by a too complete success, retired to his corner.

However, the encounter served to clear Peter's mind. He found that, unawares, he had arrived at a decision. It was a compromise decision, and he admitted with wry honesty that it marked his first divigation from the singleness of his newspaper code. Nevertheless, he knew what he would do. He would "hold" the story, but he would keep an eye on Barbara Cavanaugh. He gave that hostage to his gods. And if it "broke big"—then there would be no question. If there was a direct connection between Barbara Cavanaugh and the disappearance of Sheila O'Shay, he would have no choice but to act. For the present, Jimmy would have to be satisfied with a report of "nothing doing," and if he didn't like it, he could jolly well do the other thing! At the thought of facing Jimmy Sears, Peter felt unaccountably, and most unjustifiably, like a champion defending with his body a damsel in distress. And Barbara would have no inklings of this sacrificial heroism—she did not know Jimmy Sears!

When Peter banged open the door of the local room, however, he was immediately aware of fresh hurricanes.

"My God, Piper, I thought you were dead!" The city editor's eye-shade was pushed far up on his bristling red hair—a sure sign of excitement. "Where have you been—to Los Angeles? Copee bo-oy!" He snatched the telephone with one hand and thrust a bundle of copy paper across the desk with the other. "Shoot this down. More to come on the tule marsh story!" he shouted over his shoulder to the semi-circle of the copy desks, where metal cylinders bearing copy and galley proofs spouted clattering out of their long black tubes, or were sent rumbling down those some tubes to the composing room below.

"You, Piper, get busy on this. Unidentified body found in the tule marsh beyond El Cerrito. Go over to the city hall and get Camberwell of the identification bureau. Find out what, if anything, they know. I've been waiting for you. You're the only man sure to get Camberwell, thanks to that story you wrote when he was being razzed by the department. Tell him we won't print without permission, of course, but get him to give you something. It looks like murder!"

The city editor pushed his eye-shade even farther back on his brow, at the angle, though far from the effect, of a mediaeval halo. His harsh voice was jubilant. Any one would have thought that murder to him was a joyous occasion—as indeed it was.

Peter exhaled a tremendous breath of relief. After all, he had not let the paper down. With a new front-page story breaking, the affairs of Barbara Cavanaugh could well afford to wait.

"Hoo-oo-oo, hu-hu-hu-hoo," whistled Peter in a wailing minor, and darted crosswise to the traffic to the city hall.

CHAPTER IX.

An air of triumph was plainly discernible in The Herald local room. It manifested itself in the demeanor of the managing editor, who popped in and out of his private office at frequent intervals to confer with Jimmy; in the rushing to and fro of photographers carrying large sheets of cardboard, whereon were spread still wet prints; in the Jack-in-the-box materialization of a smudgy-faced boy from the composing room, waving a damp page proof over which Jimmy and the managing editor bent with heads that almost touched.

Jimmy jerked the receiver from the jangling telephone at his elbow.

"I don't care what it is!' he snapped. "Unless one of them's murdered, don't bother me. Here, Andy, take this call! Our east side man wants to unburden his mind about a kid elopement."

Peter had returned from the city hall and gone straight to his typewriter.

"Got it!" he flung laconically over his shoulder to Jimmy as he passed the desk.

"I'll give you twenty minutes—keep it down to three-quarters of a column," Jimmy called after his retreating back.

A copy boy stood at Peter's elbow, seizing each page to be set into type as Peter ripped it from the carriage. When he had finished, he strolled over to the city desk, his hands in his pockets.

"Nobody else had got there. It's an 'exclusive' all right—and it's straight. Camberwell told me with his own ruby lips that Cavanaugh's to be called in. In fact, he was waiting for him to arrive for a conference when I left."

"It's a pretty fair yarn," said Jimmy.

The managing editor darted out of sight again. The local room subsided to a pretense of ordinary routine. Jimmy's watch lay open on the desk, and he consulted it at frequent intervals until a boy appeared with an armful of still sticky papers, the single red line, "Extra," in view across the top. The city editor snatched one of the papers from beneath the boy's arm but his eyes continued to stray to his watch until, a quarter of an hou later, the cries of the newsboys were wafted up from the street below.

"We beat 'em on the street by fifteen minutes!" Jimmy announced in a tone of deep and almost prayerful gratification.

The contentment of The Herald office was by no means shared by the two men who sat chatting in a book-lined room on the top floor of the city hall—the room from which Peter had made a whistling exit not long before. The chat was not an ordinary chat, the two men were not ordinary men and the books, for that matter, were not ordinary books. Several shelves were given over to volumes nearly two feet high, labelled with yearly dates instead of titles and containing lists of arrests. Their size and warn covers gave a certain mediaeval atmosphere to a room by no means devoted to mediaeval concerns.

Camberwell, head of the identification bureau, sat tilted far back in a swivel chair which squeaked rhythmically as he rocked to and fro. His frame was large, but his head was set forward above stooping shoulders—the ineradicable stoop of the farm boy whose strength has been early overtaxed by heavy physical labor. His hands, with their twisted fingers and enlarged knuckles, still bore the marks of that boyhood toil. But his eyes were the eyes of a student. Since that day when, as a lanky youth, an idea had been born in his mind from a chance thumb mark in a farm house album, he had pursued that one idea with the zeal which only the born specialist can know. He still looked like a middle-aged farmer—but he faced Dr. Cavanaugh with the unassuming equality of a fellow-expert.

"I'm not jumping at conclusions," he protested. "I'm just suggesting a possibility to be tested. I wouldn't have bothered you about a mere highway bum, who wandered off into the marsh while drunk, or crept away to die of exposure. There's no doubt at all about it's being a woman. We have mighty little else to go on. There's just one encouraging bit that I'll show you later. It's only a chance I know—but it's the first chance we've had, and we can't afford to overlook it."

"It was a mute inglorious psychoanalyst living before his time who coined the phrase, 'The wish is father to the thought'." Dr. Cavanaugh smiled. "However, that's nothing against the thought. I'm quite willing to take it up— nly I don't promise anything."

It was Camberwell's turn to smile, a reminiscent smile. He knew from past experience that Dr. Cavanaugh never did promise anything; but the psychiatrist's modesty had not shortened the long list of successful performances, some of them quoted internationally, others—and these included some of the most remarkable—known only to the families of his patients or hidden in the files of police records.

Frost Thwarted

The farmer may now get a chance to fool Jack Frost. Experimental work at Morden, Man., by the Dominion Department of Agriculture shows conclusively that on a soft crop like tomatoes this can be done. With the advance of the season tomatoes ripen more slowly, and the use of ethylene gas speeds up the process from late August on. Fruit in danger of frost damage can be picked and quickly ripened by the use of this gas.

Expert Gives Advice To Future Salesmen

"It is essential that you should like to meet people and possess the ability to get along well with them if you are to become a salesman," says an expert in giving his idea of how youths should pick their life job.

"You don't necessarily have to be of the hail-fellow-well-met type, but you do need to be agreeable and have personality.

"But above those qualifications you should have another. You must make people have confidence in you. If you make people have confidence in you, you will find that you will have an asset greater than any other. If business men can believe in you they will trade with you. Confidence breeds respect.

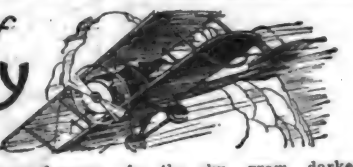
"Then you will need self-confidence and poise, and if you are to get ahead you can't be of the type that is easily discouraged. You should be a good judge of human nature in order to size u pthe people with whom you deal.

"You should realize at the outset that your job will be to sell what the buyer can use profitably, or can dispose of in turn. You will not be approaching your task in the proper light if you try to dispose of your wares for the cake merely of an immediate sale. To be a good salesman you must think in terms of your customer's problems as well as your own.

"Get all the education you can. It isn't necessary that you have a college education to be successful as a salesman. But if you can obtain the advantage of such training, do so by all means. There is only one good place for you to start, and that is the bottom."

The Way o fthe Scot

Sandy entered the saddler's shop.



"I want one spur," he ordered.

"One spur, sir!" said the saddler. "Of what use is one spur?"

Sandy shrugged his shoulders impatiently, and went on to explain.

"Can't ye see, mon," he said, "if I can get one side of the horse to go with one spur, the other side will have to come with it."

The Adventures of Captain Jimmy and his Dog Scottie

What came before: Captain Jimmy and his friend Lieut. Jed Stone plan to rescue Guy Stone from the cruel Chinese bandits. They bargain with General Fu for his assistance, in exchange for flying him over to Japan.

We worked secretly on our plane for several days, changing it to look like a fire-eating dragon. The body, we covered with phosphorus paint, which would glow green in the dark, while a long dragon tail was attached behind. We painted bat-like marks on the wings, and wicked-looking claws spread out underneath. Even in the daytime our plane looked horrible enough, but at night, it was enough to freeze any ignorant bandit camp with fear.

Of course, that is just what we intended our plane to do. While the bandits fled in terror, we would have a chance to rescue Guy Stone, the brother of Lieutenant Stone, who had been held captive for many weeks.

Just for safety, we mounted a machine gun in front of our plane. If any Chinese proved too hardy to be afraid of our dragon, he would certainly understand enough not to fool with a machine gun.

As the sun sank toward the western sky line, we wheeled our plane out of the hanger, and soon were heading full speed toward the cruel Chinese bandits' camp. We timed our raid so we would arrive just after dark, while the bandits were still astir.

As we passed over the countryside, the poor Chinese families hearing the drone of our motor rushed to the doors of their hovels. Seeing our dragon glimmering in the sky, with its bat-like wings spread out, and long tail flying behind in the wind, they fell on their knees and buried their faces in their hands.

We followed the railway tracks, and soon we came to the siding where we hid from the bandits in the string of freight cars. Due East from that point, we followed the trail into the mountains. The campfire of the bandit guards at the notch in the cliffs proved a welcome beacon, for the sky grew darker every minute, and thunder rumbled in the distance.

Soon the main camp became visible. The little tents looked like Chinese lanterns far below, as we circled slowly down, and red campfires dotted the ground. Somewhere down in the pit of darkness was Guy, Jed Stone's younger brother. As we circled overhead, there flashed before my minds eye a picture of the days when as boys together, we played on the old ranch out near Winnipeg.

Suddenly the bandits saw us. Panic broke loose in the camp. Black forms rushed about—tripped, fell and fought each other, frantic with fear. I switched on the landing lights and turned on the siren whistle. The sound wailed and echoed through the mountain pass. The terror was complete!

Landing on the ground, we roared down toward the tents. The entire force of bandits seemed to have deserted and taken to the forest. Then a dark form rushed toward the tents with a flaming brand from the fire.

One bandit, braver than the rest, was attempting to set the tents ablaze. we fired a few rounds from the machine gun, and evidently winged him in the foot, for he dropped the brand, and limped into the darkness.

"Hurry," I cried, "we must search the tents before they are burned. Keep the motor idling while I search. Use the machine gun if the bandits return."

Over the side I went and dashed into the first tent. The crack of rifles sounded far away in the darkness. Spat! Spat! went the bullets in the sand, but the range was wide. Then I heard Jed Stone open fire with his machine gun.

Modern Palate Not So Spicy

Survey Shows Spices Less in Demand in Today's Menu

One result of changing taste in food and of a marked decrease in home cooking in America has been a sharp drop in the consumption of spices. Americans are using one-fifth less spices today than they did in 1923, and although consumption of vanilla beans, paprika and mustard has increased recently, the general loss has been heavy. Pepper, cassia, cloves, ginger root and cinnamon are among those whose popularity seems to be waning.

How can this decrease in consumption be accounted for? First of all, according to Albert H. Doolittle, who conducted a survey for the American Spice Trade Association, there is evidence that the public taste for spices is changing again. When they were first introduced into Europe from the East they were considered a decliacy, but their popularity increased rapidly until by the end of the fifteenth century they lured Columbus and others to risk the unknown Atlantic in the hope of finding an ocean route to their source, the Indies. Thus the desire for spices and other Oriental luxuries, such as silks, perfumes and jewels, led to the discovery of America and six years later induced Vasco da Gama to make his pioneer voyage around the Cape of Good Hope.

Spices were and continued to be in great demand because they gave variety to food. Until comparatively recent years most housewives relied upon a few foods and were therefore dependent upon spices to give zest to a diet that might otherwise have become monotonous. Today they vary the foods rather than the spices.

Another cause of the decreased use of spices is said to be a falling off in pickling and preserving because of the development of transportation and of processing, rapid freezing and vacuum methods of preserving natural flavors.

His Strong Point

"What's a genius, mum?" asked little Ernest.

"Well," pondered his mother, "I suppose a genius is a very clever person."

"I'm one, then," went on the boy. "My teacher said so."

His mother smiled.

"Of course you are, my son," she said encouragingly. "But what did your teacher say?"

"She said I had a genius for inventing," explained Ernest.

"And what did she say you could invent?" asked the fond parent.

"New ways of spelling words," came the reply.

Twilight Hour Story

Chicks and Other Little Friends

No. 27

I can tell you, Billy got up early the next morning, for he couldn't think of anything but those little kittens of Fluffy's hidden under the floor in the attic.

After breakfast Mamma Lady got the hammer and a big screw driver and some other tools she thought might be useful, and they went upstairs. First thing they did was to get Fluffy and carry her down cellar and shut her in away from her kittens so she wouldn't get excited about all the noise.

They had put a big pencil mark on the board over the place where they heard the kittens, so they didn't need to hunt it all over again.

Then Mamma Lady started trying to pry up the board. Well, they worked and worked and it just wouldn't budge. You see, Mamma Lady wasn't a very good carpenter.

"I don't care if we do break the old board away over here where it is dark. It can easily be nailed down again, but I can't get it started," she said as she poked and worked away at the tight boards.

However, if you keep at a thing long enough, something has to happen, and all at once it started to move a little.

"There, now that I've got the screw driver in, perhaps I can pry it up a little," she said, puffing from the exertion.

A little was right. That old board would only come up about an inch or so. You couldn't see down or put your hand down. In fact it was just as bad as before, almost.

"Billy, if I had a match now we could see if they are still here. We don't want to do any more if they are over farther." You see, the kittens kept as still as could be, because all the noise so near them perhaps frightened them. I guess they thought it sounded like thunder, eh?

Billy went down to get the match and was back in a jiffy. It didn't take him long, I can tell you.

The board was up just about two inches. Mamma Lady was on one side of the board and Billy on the other. Mamma Lady struck the match and held it under the board as far down as she could.

"There they are," cried Billy, as they caught a glimpse of soft fur. "Oh, there they are!" and he got so excited he accidentally pushed his mother's arm so that she dropped the match, and oh, how dreadful, it dropped right onto a little kitty. They could smell the burning fur.

"Oh, what will we do?" said Mamma Lady, for it was a long way downstairs to the water. There was hardly even time to think. All at once she got right down on the floor and said quickly, "Billy, you do what I do," and she bent down and—well, you can't guess what she did. She expectorated through the crack on to the burning fur. Billy spat too on his side, and say, wasn't it a good thing the fire was really out, because Mamma Lady and Billy felt they just couldn't make any more saliva. Their mouths felt all dried up inside.

Oh, Mamma Lady and Billy were strong then. They pulled up that old board which wouldn't move before. It cracked and broke this time all right and then when the board was up high enough she reached down and, say, she brought up four lovely little soft, woolly kittens, and the little one that was burned was grey. Wasn't it a good thing it had thick fur? Anyway, the fire didn't get through to its tender skin. It just burned the fur.

"Billy," laughed Mamma, "we'll call this kitty Bobby Burns, shall we? So Bobby Burns he was.

Flowers Dislike Music

London—Some flowers are deeply affected by music or, to put it more bluntly, carnations and cyclamen do not like it at any price writes a correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor. This is the discovery of a student of botany here who says, "Where there is a constant volume of sound for some hours, certain sensitive blossoms develop a leaning tendency away from the direction from which the music comes. Floral decorations close to a stand where a dance band was playing were affected to an astonishing degree. After a few hours it was discovered that all the blossoms had deliberately turned their backs on the source of the music. Even when they were placed facing the stand it was not long before each carnation bloom reversed its position. Although little is known at present of this phenomenon, there is no doubt that blossoms of several kinds are affected by the vibrations which are set up when music is performed." The phenomenon certainly seems to invite further investigation. If flowers do not like jazz, will they tolerate Bach or even show their appreciation of Beethoven by gracefully bending toward the source of melody? A new type of musical critic may have been discovered and "trying it out on the carnations" may become a recognized criterion for music publishers.

Houses

These are the things that houses will remember:
The covetous, swift rain
Beating its futile hands through gray November
Against the windowpane—

And dawns—with April all herself revealing
When the first robin calls—
Her frail bright spirit magically stealing
Within four sturdy walls—

Lost footsteps on the stair—lost laughter drifting—
Whisper of pain and tears—
Intimate moments fraught with beauty lifting
Out of the lonely years.

And shrill sweet music of young voices blending—
An dthe one hour which brings
The old-new dreams—and love that has no ending—
These are the things!

Canada's Forest Land

According to the Forest Service of the Dept. of the Interior commercial forests can be grown on 555,000,000 acres of Canada's domain, and that on 182,000,000 acres the forests are either at present inaccessible or are of value mainly for their ameliorating effect on climate, the control of water flow, prevention of erosion or their scenic attractions.

Sunday School Lesson

July 19. Lesson III—Social Service in the Early Church—Acts 4:32-35; 6:1-4; 2 Corinthians 9:1-7. Golden Text—He said, It is more blessed to give than to receive.—Acts 20:35.

ANALYSIS

I. VOLUNTARY SHARING, Acts 4: 32-35.
II. SYSTEMATIC SHARING, 6:1-7.
III. SERVICEABLE SHARING, 9: 36-39.
IV. INTELLIGENT AND WHOLE-HEARTED SHARING, 2 Cor. 9: 1-15.

INTRODUCTION—The early Christians were like members of a family. They were the Brotherhood. The Holy Spirit, which is the spirit of their Master, was now in them. It began to reveal itself in their attitude toward each other.

I. VOLUNTARY SHARING, Acts 4: 32-35.

Does v. 32 tell of a short-lived experiment in Communism? Dr. Moffatt's Translation helps one to an answer: "Not one of them considered anything his personal property, they shared all they had with one another. There was not a needy person among them, for those who owned lands or houses would sell them and bring the proceeds of the sale, laying the money before the feet of the apostles; it was then distributed according to each individual's need." The right to hold property was unquestionable, for example, Joseph Barnabas, v. 36. Ananias (5:1) was condemned, not because he did not turn in all the money, but because he pretended that he did.

The Brotherhood included many poor people—"slaves and washerwomen," as they were contemptuously called. A Poor Fund was created. The people counted it a privilege as well as a duty to help the unemployed and the poor. It was considered unworthy for a man to hold for himself more than he needed, while another was in want. Some of the poorer members were known even to go without food for two or three days in order to give to some one poorer than themselves. While modern Christians abandon tithing because it means too much, these early Christians abandoned it because it meant too little.

That spirit still lives here and there. Fritz Kreisler, perhaps the world's greatest living violinist, said: "I never look upon the money I earn as my own. It is public money. It is only a fund intrusted to my care for proper distribution. . . . I am constantly endeavoring to reduce my needs to the minimum. In all these years of my so-called success in music we have not built a home for ourselves. Between it and us there stand all the homeless in the world." What would happen if the spirit of Christ had a similar chance with all of us?

II. SYSTEMATIC SHARING, 6:1-7.

At first the apostles preached, taught, administered the fund, attended to all the work of the Christian community. As the number of believers increased, so did the number of the poor and widows. The apostles found themselves involved in too many activities. At the same time the Grecians, those Jews who were foreign-born and spoke Greek, complained that their widows were being neglected in the daily "dole." The Hebrews, the native-born Jews who spoke Aramaic, perhaps held the view that "our own people should be attended to first." There was probably some jealousy between the two groups which gave rise to the trouble.

The Church, at the request of the apostles, appointed seven men to administer the fund. To avoid any possibility of discrimination, they selected them from among the complaining Grecians. The names of the seven are Greek names. One was a proselyte, a convert from outside the seed of Abraham. A "foreigner" was thus recognized as a "brother." The Spirit of Christ was beginning to obliterate racial snobbery. This was the beginning of organization in the Church.

III. SERVICEABLE SHARING, 9: 36-39.

The Church has room for varied gifts. Tabitha, whose Greek name was Dorcas, is the type of the Christian woman devoted to good works. Others could pray in public; she could sew for the poor. Unostentatiously she worked and gave. On the day of Lord Shaftesbury's funeral the poor of London lined the streets, paying their tribute of love to one who had been their friend. So, when Dorcas died, the widows whom she had befriended gathered at her home. "Look at the dress she gave me," said one, pointing to the dress she was wearing. "And mine, too!" said another. "And mine!" She was always doing work like this," they told Peter.

Holds Records

Miss Edna Rudolph, 18-year-old St. Louis stenographer, recently established world altitude record for light planes—15,200 feet.

IV. INTELLIGENT AND WHOLE-HEARTED SHARING, 2 Cor. 9: 1-15.

The Corinthians were to give with a smile. God loves a cheerful giver, so does the collector.

What New York Is Wearing

BY ANNEBELLE WORTHINGTON

Illustrated Dressmaking Lesson Furnished With Every Pattern

Here's a jaunty wrapped model that solves the problem of what to wear for mornings and sports.

It is slim and straight. A plaited inset provides the important flare without interfering with the slenderness of the silhouette.

The vestee with a rolled collar buttoned down the front adds a sportive air.

It is military blue candy stripe silk shirting with plain white vestee.

Style No. 2660 may be had in sizes 16, 18 years, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust.

Silk pastel, pique cotton, pique print, pastel flat crepe shantung and linen are suitable smart fabrics for its development.

Size 36 requires 3⅝ yards of 39-inch material with ¾ yard of 27-inch contrasting.

HOW TO ORDER PATTERNS

Write your name and address plainly, giving number and size of such patterns as you want. Enclose 20c in stamps or coin (coin preferred; wrap it carefully) for each number, and address your order to Wilson Pattern Service, 73 West Adelaide St., Toronto.

The lazy man makes much ado about nothing.

Happy Days

Having the house re-decorated is recommended as one way of curing depression.

The parlor's in utter confusion,
Hugo trestles encumber the hall;
If you're apt to feel faint at the odor of paint
Don't enter the kitchen at all.
The room that I commonly work in—
Though later it may appear posh—
Is forbidden to me, since I don't want to see
The way in which whitewashers wash.

The landing and most of the bedrooms
Are dressed in a similar guise,
And it's useless to seek an escape from the reek
Of varnish, distemper, and size.
To make the ascent of the staircase
Ic treading a perilous path,
And I'm taking my drink and my food at the sink
And have made up a bed in the bath.

But Jane, who decreed the upheaval,
Is deaf to my every appeal;
There's reproach in her eye whensoever I try
To tell her the things that I feel.
She tells me I'm hurting her badly
And filling with sorrow her cup
When I won't understand that the work has been planned
With the object of cheering me up.

—Theda (Humorist).

Anaesthetic Used By Hospitals Tested

Ottawa.—A decided improvement in the quality of anaesthetic ether used in Canadian hospitals is noted by the Department of Pensions and National Health following a survey by departmental inspectors. Of all samples taken only eight per cent. were inferior as compared with 65 per cent. in 1925, 26 and 25 per cent. in 1927-28.

According to a report issued by the department, all the larger hospitals in Canada were visited and 257 samples taken for analysis. The inspectors also investigated the system of purchase and methods of storage. Two leading brands constituted 93 per cent. of the samples and of these eight packages were found to be inferior. Of the remaining 19 samples, representing seven lesser known brands, 11 were inferior.

Samples of ethyl chloride were also taken, and the product found to be excellent in quality. "Recent fatalities during anaesthetia caused suspicion to fall on ethyl chloride as being responsible for the trouble," the report states. "This led to a survey of available supplies. The collection consisted of 10 samples of English, American and German brands. It is a pleasure to be able to testify to the excellence of every one of these."

Anticosti Island

Anticosti Island is situated in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and has an area of over 3,000 square miles or one and a half times the size of Prince Edward Island. It has been owned for some years by the Menier family of France, and was recently sold to the Anticosti Corporation, Limited, for its pulp and paper resources. It is capable of providing 350,000 tons of newsprint paper annually in perpetuity. The island was discovered by Jacques Cartier in 1534 and was visited later by Roberval, Champlain, and other French explorers. After the capture of Canada by Wolfe, in 1759, the island became British territory.

Brazil's Economic Condition Improving, President Reports

Rio de Janeiro.—The economic condition of Brazil "is on the sure road to betterment," President Getulio Vargas said in a recent interview.

"We have reduced the government's administrative expenses by the equivalent of $40,000,000 and increased revenues more than $30,000,000," the President said. "This makes a total difference of about 800,000 contos, which, I believe, is considerable in view of the present world situation."

A scientist says that the mosquito is capable of very long flights. The trouble is, whenever he looks down on a bald-head runway, he is tempted to land for refreshments.

Anecdotes

Visiting Rudyard Kipling at his home in Sussex, Kinsey Peile, the actor and playwright, discovered a large deal table, which had evidently been planed down to ensure a very smooth surface.

"On this surface," he calls (in "Candied Peel"), "I saw numerous scraps of writing, notes and scribbles in pencil—the entire surface was almost covered. I noticed that Mr. Rudyard Kipling used this table as his writing block, and I presume that when it was covered entirely with his writing it was planed down again for further use.

Told by Anatole France:

A certain learned man had the reputation of being the most skilful cartographer (map maker) in England. He had published a universal atlas and knew the Globe like his pocketbook. One evening, having drunk a glass or two extra, he lost himself in a wood close to his native town.

"What!" cried his harsh-tongued simpleton of a servant. "You write about the whole world, and you don't know where you are three miles from home?"

Napoleon said to Pinel, his doctor:

"Between a genius and a madman, there is no more than the thickness of a two-sous piece."

Then he added—declared Anatole France:

"I must take care not to fall into your hands."

Reflections of an old woman outside the Abbey Theatre, Dublin—the home of the Irish Players—set down by L. A. G. Strong in "Dublin Days."

"In this theatre they has plays
On us, and high-up people comes here
They'd run like hades from in the slums."

What undoubtedly is the shortest letter on record was written by Victor Hugo, who was always impatient and impetuous. On the very evening of the day on which one of his new works was published, he could not resist the temptation to inquire how the sales were going. So he wrote to his publishers as follows:

"? Victor Hugo."

The publisher was equal to the occasion, for his reply was:

"!"

Elinor Mordaunt, globe-trotter and novelist—her last story is "Gin and Bitters," written under the nom de plume, "A Riposte," tells of an adventure in Constantinople. It seems she was constantly followed by a Turkish gentleman. After two weeks of this he approached her one day, and all of a sudden, out of a clear sky, as it were, proposed marriage. Mrs Mordaunt countered with:

"But why don't you choose a Turkish woman?"

"Oh," said the gentleman, airily, "I have had nine of them already, but never an Englishwoman."

Grass Heritage

(From Harper's Magazine)

How many ages did my lean forebears
Stretch limbs along warm grass, when food was done?
How many youths dreamed dreams of love where none
But nibbling sheep could watch them fling their prayers
Upon the wind—or by the whirled, red flares
Of camp-fires heard old battles lost and won?
How many women, hoping for a son,

OBITUARY

Miss Edith M. Hustler

Miss Edith Mersella Hustler, daughter of the late Francis and Jane Ann Hustler, passed away at her home, West Street. Miss Hustler was born in Trafalgar and had resided in that township up to six years ago, when she came to Brampton. She was a member of the United Church. Three brothers, Elwood, Toronto; Frank, Norval, and William Trafalgar, and one sister, Miss Jane Ann, Brampton, survive. The funeral was held on Tuesday afternoon to Norval Cemetery.

Mrs. Alfred Harris

Death came suddenly to Mrs. Alfred Harris, resident on Dundas Highway, Cooksville, at St. Joseph's Hospital, where she had been admitted on Friday. Mrs. Harris had been ill for some time, from diabetes, which, it was claimed, was the cause of her death. She had been a resident of Cooksville for 25 years. Surviving are her husband and one daughter, Loretta, at home. The funeral was held on Tuesday from the home.

PORT CREDIT

Butter Price Low

Creamery butter came to a new low level Saturday when a retail store in the village sold this commodity for 19 cents a pound. It is 20 years since butter sold at this price in this neighborhood.

Gas By-Law Approval

Toronto Township Council gave the third reading to the by-law giving the Consumers' Gas Company of Toronto permission to operate in the township. It is expected that work on the main will begin immediately. Port Credit has already approved the by-law.

CLARKSON MAN CAN LOCATE WATER

By Using Apple Branch for Divining Rd.—Well Digger Surprised

"Believed by some to possess uncanny powers, Albert E. Dennison, of Clarkson, has earned considerable fame locally by his remarkable success for many years in locating water, and some hundreds of wells in the district were sunk after he had pointed out the spot after making tests with his divining-rod. Not only has he been successful in every case, but he prides himself on the fact that he has been able to point out the exact spot, within one foot, without a single exception, and almost invariably has foretold the depth at which water would be found.

Apple Twig Only Good Once

Using an apple crotch for his diviner he adheres strictly to the rule of not using the same twig twice, claiming that when the sap dries up in a twig its potency for divining is considerably reduced.

"Skipper" Denison, as he is known in the district, related that many different species of wood are known to have divining qualities, but he held a distinct preference for the apple tree. "I remember on one occasion a well-digger, who was working at a spot which I had marked out to be drilled 35 feet, and when he had reached within six inches of that he told me that he had been fooled," remarked Mr. Denison. "He wanted me to accept a wager that he would not strike water six inches deeper."

Not saying whether the wager was actually made or not, Mr. Dennison drew a vivid picture of the digger a few minutes later, when he had reached the 35-foot depth. "He was shouting for help, and begging that haul line be dropped to rescue him," declared the diviner.—The Globe.

VILLAGE COUNCIL

Streetsville Council met Monday evening. Reeve Hope presided and all members were present.

The following motions were passed:

Hardy-Johnston—That the Standard Paving Co. be charged $1.00 per day for use of water, while road below village is under construction.

Drennan-Johnston—That the following accounts be paid: C. Stewart, time, $16.45; C.P.R., freight, $20.00; Streetsville Review, $11.00; Can. Line, material, $7.59; Northern Electric Co. $53.30; Alf. Crawford, time, $16.45.

Drennan-Johnston—That the application of J. E. Baily for water be granted.

Hardy-Johnston—That the clerk be instructed to reply to the Communication of S. H. Foster.

LET US SMILE

A negro woman walked into an insurance office and asked whether they dealt in fire insurance.

"We do," a clerk replied. "What do you want insured?"

"Mah husband."

"Then you don't want fire insurance," smiled the clerk, as he reached for another application form. "What you want is a life insurance policy."

"No, Ah don't," exclaimed the woman. "Ah wants fire insurance. Mah husband been fired fo' times in de las' two weeks."

Will Widen the Road

Councillor James E. Bailey, who bought the Goodison property at the corner of Queen and Main Streets, is having alterations made in the old store. We hear he has a tenant for the building and the public will know who it is when they move in.

The good roads committee of the Peel County Council were here on Wednesday looking over the new Streetsville — Erindale road. Our village Council had a consultation with them over re-surfacing the road on Queen Street and continuing the curb to the limits of the corporation. The ditches would have to be tiled and filled in, the sidewalks moved back to where they used to be (and where they should have been left) so that the road can be widened, extra pavement will have to be laid from the curb to the present paved part of the road. This work seems to be absolutely necessary to take care of the increased traffic which will pass through Streetsville when the new road to the south of the village is completed..

Eden Garden Party

About 400 people enjoyed the garden party of Eden United Church on Tuesday evening, on the grounds of D. Sinclair, Lisgar Station. The weather was ideal and the program was excellent. Jamie Reid and his company were well received. This is Jamie's second year in succession. When he comes again he will be sure to have a large and appreciative audience. The following can truly be said of him: As a humorous entertainer and singer of sentimental songs, he has few equals. As a Scotch comedian he is a great success, without the slightest suggestion of vulgarity. The gate and booth receipts were very satisfactory

Harvey's Funeral

The funeral of the late Harvey Sibbald, only son of Mr. Emory Sibbald of Hatchley last Saturday was largely attended, many coming from vicinity of his home. Service was conducted in Streetsville United Church by Rev. Geo.H. Purchase who spoke of the good qualities of the deceased and his ambitions in life and urged those present to so live this life that when the summons comes they too will be ready for the great change. The floral tributes were very beautiful. The remains were then taken to the Streetsville cemetery and placed in the family plot, beside those of his mother who passed away about ten years ago.

Rita plans her vacation in a hurry

Evening rates on "Anyone" (station-to-station) calls begin at 7 p.m. (local time). Just give "Long Distance" the number you want — it speeds up the service. If you don't know the distant number, "Information" will look it up for you.

Rita had to arrange her vacation trip in a hurry. A sudden turn of events at the office made it a matter of now or never . . . and Rita chose "now".

After seven o'clock that evening (when evening rates over Long Distance were in force) she called her old school chum Helen to ask her suggestion as to the best place to go.

"Wonderful", said the happy voice at the other end of the line after she had explained everything. "We are all going to Seabeach for two weeks tomorrow. Now you will be able to come with us."

And so Rita spent the most enjoyable vacation she ever had, thanks to her call over Long Distance.

And the cost of that call was less than the tip she gave to the colored porter.

Deceased is survived by her husband, her father, Mr. John Caton, a brother, John, West Lorne, one married sister, and sister Miss Lottie at home.

The funeral took place this Thursday afternoon from the home of her father, Mr. John Caton, Dundas St. Erindale, to St. Peter's Church and cemetery and was conducted by the Rev. H. V. Thompson.

TORONTO TP. COUNCIL

The Township Council in session here on Saturday, finished by 12.30, and beyond the third reading of the Consumers' Gas by-law, had nothing on their hands all afternoon, which they spent in inspection of township roads.

A sequal to the bills paid by Council for sheep killed by dogs appeared in the billing of a Britannia man for $17 for sheep killed by a dog, which shot by W. C. Dennis, owner of the sheep, proved to be a dog owned by a neighbor.

The Council felt that the Township should not be called to pay for a fire at the Rifle Ranges, for which they were billed by the Port Credit Fire Department, as the ranges are government property, and do not pay taxes in the Township.

Negotiations will be made with the Cooksville Brick Co. for stone to be hauled and spread on township roads next winter as an unemployment relief measure.

Only $1 was brought in for brake tests for the past month by Township officers for tests made on non-resident motorists. The cost of the ballot on the Consumers' Gas by-law was remitted by the company in a cheque for $357.71. L. H. Pallet was appointed in the place of J. H. Pinchin, resigned, as Township representative on the Farm Loans Association.

A resolution was passed to forward to the County $16,952.81 for High school pupils, and $174.54 for pupils resident in Cooksville, but not attendant at the continuation school there. $1,237.80 was paid to the Toronto Township Hydro System for street lights.

Ontario Waters Claim Score of Ontario Lives

Eight Meet Death as Rowboat Upsets in Ottawa River —Undertow Cause of Deaths at Hamilton and Roudeau

Thousands dared rough lake waters in their quest for relief from the torrid weather and scores were pulled out by lifeguards, unable to fight their way back to shore against the combination of east wind and current.

Ottawa, July 5.—The wind-roughened waters of the Ottawa River swamped a rowboat and sent eight young persons to death near here Sunday.

The party had been invited out for a pleasure spin in the rowboat and were in the middle of the broad stream when the outboard motor with which the craft was equipped stalled and left them at the mercy of the waves.

The Dead

George Racicot, 28, Ottawa, owner of the boat.

Maurice and Charles Laliberte, brothers, 8 and 10 years, respectively, Ottawa.

Theresa and Lillian Racicot, sisters, 5 and 2½ years, respectively, Ottawa.

Alice Talbot, 17, Ottawa.

Calvin Frith, 17, Cummings Bridge, near Ottawa.

Bernard Gosselin, 17, Montreal Rd., near Ottawa.

Two Save Themselves

Two young boys saved themselves by clinging to the upset boat. They are Roland La Croix, 11, and his brother Leo, 9, of Ottawa.

An act of heroism cost Alice Talbot her life. Miss Talbot, a domestic in the employ of the Racicot family, managed to grasp Lillian and placed the child on her shoulders. She swam several strokes, but the burden proved too great for her strength, and both sank in the waves.

Meanwhile, people on the shore were trying frantically to break fastenings that held two rowboats at a dock. Wilfrid Verdon at last succeeded in loosening one of them and got to the ill-fated craft in time to rescue the two La Croix lads. The boys had succeeded in retaining their hold as the craft capsized and had climbed upon it.

Seven More Lives

Western Ontario paid with seven lives over the week-end for the efforts to find relief from the heat in various watering-places.

Six persons, including three children, were drowned, and the seventh, a 15-year-old boy, died from a broken neck, suffered when he dived into shallow water at the Hamilton Beach.

Heroic efforts at rescue featured the death of Thomas Staton of Hamilton Sunday night, when five other men swam out into the lake to his aid, and all were in peril, one being brought ashore unconscious. The dead:

Thomas Staton, 45, Hamilton, drowned at Hamilton Beach.

John T. Preston, 45, Ottawa,, drowned at Old Orchard Beach, Maine.

Hubert Mason, Jr., 30, Detroit, drowned at Rondeau Park.

Raymond Graichet, 12, Sault Ste. Marie, drowned at Sault.

Gordon Peters, 8, Sydenham, drowned at Sydenham.

Arnold Britton, 11, Sarnia, drowned at Sarnia.

George Deacon, 15, Hamilton, fatally hurt diving.

Rescue Efforts Fail

Hamilton.—Thomas Staton, of 1251 Main Street East, was drowned in the lake off Station Nine late Sunday afternoon and Charles McKeown, a beach resident who went to his rescue, was taken from the water unconscious after he battled the high waves for 10 minutes in an effort to reach the victim's side.

J. Lewis, Thomas Allan, Nelson Brown, Gordon Duff and George Male, all resients of the beach, brought Mckeown to shore.

An able swimmer, Staton ventured out in deep water against the high waves, and was 150 feet from shore when he turned and attempted to swim back. Exhausted after battling the rough sea for five minutes, he cried for help, and the young men who were bathing near the shore, struck off in his direction.

5 Torontonians Drown

Toronto.—Five Torontonians were drowned and five women and a man rescued from drowning while bathing Sunday afternoon on the beaches of Lake Ontario. A wild sea from a heavy east wind, with the current travelling in the same direction, formed a powerful undertow, which swept bathers beyond their depth. Despite their efforts to match their strength against the heavy breakers, three youths and a man were carried to death. The body of John Willoughby, aged 21, 55 Munro Park Avenue, drowned more than two weeks ago, was washed ashore.

Heroic efforts of friends of the drowned persons and members of the Life-Saving crews, were witnessed by hundreds of persons who lined the beaches on the waterfront thrilled at the daring of the bathers going out in such a rough sea, which had precluded most of the small boats venturing out in the lake.

Drowned

James Hastie, aged 17, 504 Merton Street.

William Biron, aged 16, 101 Seaton Street.

Yesta Frederickson, aged 17, 33 Ladykirk Avenue.

Archie Winning, aged 35, 74 Nealon Avenue, East York.

Orval Laderoute, aged 17, of 129 Cameron Street, Fort William.

Rescued

Agnes Leask, aged 16, 106 Edgewood Avenue.

Kay Hunter, aged 19, 209 Fairview Avenue.

Jean Hainsworth, 66 Bastedo Ave.

Minnie Stein, 15 Cedar Avenue.

Agnes Neilson, 39 Iroquois Avenue, Centre Island.

Canadians Sixth In Jumping Event

France Wins Important Event at London International Horse Show

London—France won the contest for the Prince of Wales Cup, one of the most important jumping events in the International Horse Show at the Olympia on June 25th.

One Ontario team from the Governor-General's Body Guard competed along with horsemen from a number of other countries.

Holland placed second and Great Britain, holder of the cup, was third. The Canadian team was sixth, consisting of Lieut. Donald Hunter, Toronto, on Sun Dart; Lieut. E. R. Eaton, of Toronto, on Cuchalain, and Lieut. Marshall Cleland, of Hamilton.

The result was: France 13½ faults; Holland, 19 faults; Great Britain, 21 faults; Irish Free State, 23 faults; Belgium, 30 faults; Canada, 36½ faults.

The French team was composed of veterans who have been jumping at international horse shows for years.

The competition provided plenty of thrills. In the first round one of the Canadians crashed into a gate so heavily that it was broken and at the last jump the same officer was thrown from his saddle, but luckily landed on his feet and was not hurt.

C.P. Liner Breaks Atlantic Record

Reaches Father Point in Four Days, Twelve Hours

Father Point, Que. — Making the fastest transatlantic crossing ever recorded by the mercantile marine of any country, the new 42,500-ton Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Britain on June 22nd recaptured the blue riband of the Atlantic for British shipping, establishing a new world's record of 4 days 12 hours and 30 minutes. The crossing was made from Cherbourg to Father Point, where mails were landed and the pilot was taken on, in four hours and 26 minutes better time than the previous record of 4 days 17 hours and 6 minutes made between Cherbourg and Ambrose Light, where pilots are taken aboard New York bound ships.

The new record brings back to British shipping the mercantile supremacy on the Atlantic, symbolized by the mythical blue riband, which, in recent years, has twice changed hands, but which, for so long, was previously held by a British vessel.

It also gives to Canada, and the Canadian Pacific Steamships, the title for the first time, and added to this it marks the first instance that a steamship company has held the blue riband of the Atlantic and the Pacific oceans together.

Buckingham Palace To Be Illuminated

Buckingham Palace will be, literally, in the spotlight next September, during the sitting of the triennial Inernaional Illumination Congress in London. Not only in the spotlight but in flood-lights festooned with thousands of fairy lamps. These latter are now being manufactured at Wembley, in Middlesex, and are providing quite a lot of employment. Engineers have spent days working out, mathematically, the great scheme of flood-lighting, and of concealing the apparatus as much as possible so that it will not be an eye-sore in the day-time. They are checking their plans carefully for, as may be understood—there will be no rehearsal.

Babies are said to show their first smile about the sixty-eighth day.

WITH THE LONE SCOUTS

Those Lonies who attended the Lone Scout Camp at Ebor Park, in August, 1930, will be very sorry to hear of the sudden death of Assistant Scoutmaster Charlie Boyle, of the 87th Toronto Troop, which occurred on June 22nd last.

Charlie, it will be remembered, was one of the senior scouts who helped to make that camp such a success, and the quiet and efficient manner in which he carried out the duties allotted to him, and the wholehearted way in which he entered into all our activities made him a favorite with all members of thecamp.

For some years past he had suffered from heart trouble, and it was thought that he was growing nicely out of it, so that his passing was a great shock to us all.

We sympathize sincerely with his parents and his comrades in the 87th Toronto Troop, and we know that all those Lonies who knew him will endorse this.

Now that school holidays are in full swing, and the out of doors is calling us all, whether of school age or over, time should be found to study for one or more of those Proficiency Badges whic hare eminently connected with the open air.

For the next few weeks we will outline the requirements for one of these badges each week, and we hope that this will stimulate some Lone Scout to quality for them. You will recollect that if you are in possession of your Second Class Badge, you are eligible to qualify for and wear six Proficiency Badges, but if you are studying for the Second Class Test, and reasonably hope to pass the test in the near future, it would be good policy to spend a little time preparing for some of these badges, so that after the Second Class Badge is safely sewn on your arm, you can quickly pass those tests which will qualify you to wear some proficiency badges also.

This week's Proficiency Badge will be The Naturalist Badge. The test for this is as follows:

1. Explain: (a) The fertilization and development of a wild flower; or (b) The development of a bird from an egg; or (c) The life history of an insect or a fresh or salt water fish; or (d) A month's observation of pond life.

2. Keep a diary, illustrated by sketches of the animals, birds, trees, plants, insects, etc., recorded; this diary to contain the dates and places of: (a) The first appearance of 12 spring or autumn migrants; (b) First flowering of 18 wild flowers, or description of the appearance and habits of six water fowl; (c) First appearance of six butterflies or moths, or description of six wild animals; (d) Make a carbon or other impression of 18 leaves of common trees.

There is quite a little work attached to the above test, but to the average country or village boy it should not be very hard, and will provide a number of hours of very interesting and instructive occupation to keen Lonies.

The following is the method of making carbon impressions of leaves: 1, Press the leaf evenly on a new sheet of carbon paper.; 2, remove leaf from carbon, and press it evenly on a clean sheet of paper. Sometimes it will be found that a cleaner imprint will be obtained by pressing the leaf a second time on clean paper without using the carbon paper for the second imprint.

When finished, a collection such as the above will be a permanent record and will be a splendid addition to your Patrol or Lone Scout Den decoration sche[illegible]

Next week we will outline the requirements of the Pioneers Badge.

Boys between the ages of 12 and 18 years, who live in places where there is no Scout Troop and who are interested in the Lone Scouts should write for particulars to "The Lone Scout Department, Boy Scouts Association, 330 Bay Street, Toronto 2.—Lone E.

Holiday Claims 354 Lives in U.S.

Drownings Account for 139 —Auto Fatalities 118— Fireworks Only 8

New York—At 354 lives the United States counted the cost of its 155th Independence Day celebration.

With all sections of the country sharing in the inevitable price of the annual independence observance, the highest loss of recent years was reached.

The Mid-Western States led with 86 lives lost but Mid-Atlantic States were but a step behind with 84.

Fireworks, once the major cause for fatalities on the holiday, this year accounted for only eight lives.

The lakes and rivers exacted the grimmest reckoning. Though much of the country was free from the severe heat wave which last week counted its victims at nearly 1,300 dead, it was warm enough that rivers and lakes were thronged. One hundred and 39 lives were lost in drownings. The Pacific coast reported 27 of this number, 17 occurring at Los Angeles alone where a surging rip tide swpt over crowded beaches. Four men drowned in Lake Michigan near Gary, Ind., in an attempt to rescue a youth caught in a vicious undertow. The youth was saved by lifeguardsmen.

The jammed highways of the nation took 118 lives in automobile accidents as compared with 81 last year. Airplane fatalities, however, increased to eight—three in mid-Atlantic, the same number in the mid-west and two in the mountain states.

Claims Wheat Record

Chatham—Gilbert Reaume, Dover Township farmer, believes he has established a record for early wheat-cutting. Last Friday he commenced cutting an 18-acre field of wheat, and declares that it is one of the best crops he has harvested in his forty-odd years' experience as a farmer. "I have never heard of wheat-cutting in this istrict on July 3," Mr. Reaume said.

Soviet Organizes Five Expeditions

Party to Conduct Arctic Researches—River Systems to be Explored

Leningrad.—Five arctic expeditions are being organized this year by the All-Union Arctic Institute.

The first will operate on Franz Joseph's Land and Hooker's Island. It will replace the winter expedition and will conduct hydrological and oceanographical explorations for purposes of navigation in the Kara Sea. The second expedition will go to the Tchukotsko-Anadyr district to study the river systems and the slopes of the central plateau of his region.

A third group is going to the lower part of the Lena River to explore the coal region in the districts of the coasting fleet bases. At the same time it will search for deposits of mercury, iron and other minerals. Another expedition will be sent out this winter to the White Sea for investigaing hunting in that region.

The fifth party will operate on the southern island of Nova Zembla and will study the feasibility of restoring the Aphua fishing trade. (The aphua is one of the salmon species).

Chinese Use Clay for Salt

Shanghai.—The poverty of the peasants of Southern Shantung Province, according to letters received in Shanghai from missionaries, has become so extreme that they can no longer afford to buy salt and are using salty clay to season their food. There is a large area of arid land between the cities of Pohping and Liaocheng, and the peasants have discovered that this clay soil contains a small quantity of salt. Day after day women and children go there by the hundreds and dig up the clay. Fuel is scarce and very costly, and only the moderately well-to-do can afford to boil the clay and extract a salt brine.

Where Traffic Problem Is Easily Solved

Simla, India.—Those who are impatient of modern traffic should dwell in Simla, India's summer capital, writes a correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor. There are only three motorcars in this town—that is, three which have the rights of the roads within the municipal limits; there are other cars, for many of the residents in the hill station come by car from the plains. But only Lord Willingdon, Viceroy; Sir Philip Chetwode, Commander-in-Chief of the Army in India, and Sir Geoffrey de Montmorency, Governor of the Punjab, have authority to use an automobile on the winding, narrow thoroughfares cut from the steep sides of the Himalayan hills. Other inhabitants of the city have to use the ricksha, drawn by four coolies, a horse, or "shank's mare."

Goodbye To Shaving Mug

Victoria.—The barber shop shaving mug is a thing of the past in British Columbia. Under new regulations barbers must use shaving soap in the form of powder, liquid or paste, fresh from the container for each customer. Mixing lathers in a common mug to serve more than one customer is forbidden.

Fatal Week for Ontario; Death List Totals 113

Last week was a black week for Ontario. One hundred and nine persons have died in the week ended as the result of accidents or of heat prostrations. And never before in the history of this province has heat and water taken such a terrific toll.

Since last Sunday night 63 persons were drowned in the province. Heat deaths numbered 30 in the same period. Automobile accidents were responsible for 10 deaths. Aviation claimed six lives. Four persons died from other causes. And, in addition, two bodies were recovered this week-end.

The terrific heat wave which reigned over the province during the past four or five days was, of course, greatly responsible for the toll of death. But two major accidents took 13 lives. Five were killed on Dominion Day in an airplane crash at Hamilton. Eight were drowned in the depths of the Ottawa River when a boat capsized. And hundreds have been injured this week in automobile and other accidents.

As tabulated by the Canadian Press, the week's fatalities were as follows:

Monday—1 killed in aviation accident; three in auto accidents; three drowned; one struck by train.

Tuesday — Four dead in car crashes; one drowned.

Wednesday—Five in air accident; 16 drowned; 8 heat deaths; two in auto accidents; one in fall.

Thursday—Sixteen drowned; 11 killed by heat.

Friday—Seven drowned; eight killed by heat.

Saturday—Four drowned; two heat deaths; one killed in fall; one killed by auto.

Sunday — Sixteen drowned; two killed by heat.

Total deaths during week—113.

British Live Stock Importations Barred

Ottawa—As a consequence of outbreaks of foot and mouth disease among cattle in the British Isles the Canadian Department of Agriculture has cancelled all permits for the importation of livestock from the Old Country as from June 20, excepting only shipmnts actually embarked as of that date.

Formal notice issued by the department states: "The department will not in the circumstances be in a position to consider issuing permits for the importation of animals of the species involved (cattle, sheep, goats, other ruminants and swine) for an indefinite period."

Other orders issued prohibit the importantion into Canada of fertilizers containing animal products, bone meal and food stuffs containing animal matter, and second-hand bags or bagging from all foot and mouth infected countries; and provide for consular and other certification restricting the importation of grains, milfeeds, and food stuffs for livestock feeding from foot and mouth infected countries.

Little Josie flew into the house one evening very late for the evening meal and hurried to her mother's chair.

Little Josie—"Oh, mother, don't scold me, for I've had such a great disappointment. A horse fell down in the street and they said they were going to send for a horse doctor, so of course, I had to stay. And after I waited and waited he came, and oh, mother, what do you think? It was only a man!"

And the next generation will hear dad tell about roughing it in the old days when a fellow had to feed the furnace by hand.

Business Man (after interviewing his daughter's suitor)—"I regret I cannot see my way to allow you to marry my daughter at present, but give me your name and address; then, if nothing better turns up in the near future, you may hear from us again."

How Times Have Changed

"You must wake and call me early,
Call me early, mother dear,"
That was often said to mothers
By the girls of yesteryear.

But the girls now tell their mothers,
As they go out for a spin,
"You must wake up early, Mother, Someone's got to let me in"

Neighbor—"Has your wife made home happier since she went to cooking school?"

Mr. Michael—"Much happier; we have both learned to deeply and properly appreciate plain, simple restaurant food.

The mother who spoils her child may be foolish but the mother who doesn't is unnatural. There was a time when a doctor couldn't figure much on success unless he was able to grow whiskers. Several exclusive tea rooms are now serving paper weights with their meals to keep the sandwiches from blowing off the table. Every man should have a hobby, declares someone. Perhaps, but it is better not to let your wife see you with her. The wise man never stops to argue with a sharp-tongued wife—He beats it. Some wise man says: "A hundred hurry to catch up where one hurries to get ahead.

Carl—"Honey, I'm knee-deep in love with you."

Winifred—"All right, I'll put you on my wading list."

Mrs. Huller—"Your husband looks like a brilliant man; I suppose he knows everything?"

Mrs. Keeper—"Don't fool yourself. He doesn't even suspect anything."

Caller—"Does your husband get what he earns?"

The Wife—"Yes; that's why we are always hard up."

Miller—"That man is so honest he wouldn't steal a pin."

Strauss—"I never thought much of the pin test. Try him with an umbrella."

If you are grouchy about being dunned, there is a way to avoid it.

Old Ragson Tatters tro. Brushvills, who recently returned from a long tour in his flivver, said: "When I got back and looked in the mirror I thought I must be awfully tanned. But after I shaved and washed up I found it was just dirt."

The judge who passed, exclaimed:
What fun!
Think what that hay is worth a ton."

Indian Coolies Declared Expert Piano Movers

Simla, India.—Among the remarkable sights to be met with on the roads of the Simla hills, according to a correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor, is the unexpected appearance of a piano, borne aloft on the shoulders of six or eight coolies, who are conveying the instrument to some remote English home among the hills. The narrowness and steepness of the roads hereabout preclude all vehicular traffic, except the rickshaw, with the consequence that the most amazing loads are seen along he roads, apparently under their own violition. The pahari (hillmen) who carry these loads appear to be endowed with remarkable strength and endurance, as many of their loads are carried for the distance of a "day's journey." Hotels six and seven miles from Simla have all their requirements carried out daily by these coolies, who leave Simla in the mornings with loads of bread and fish on their heads, snatch a noonday sleep under the deodars which clothe the hills, and return in the cool of the evening with their empty baskets. The men who carry pianos, however, offer the most striking picture. Their progress made up and down steep hills is made with a long, slow, rhythmic stride quite fascinating to watch.

Countryman and Townsman

Quebec Action Catholique (Ind.)—It is strange that an ordinary farmer who will finish the year with a hundred dollars, with a bigger establishment than he had the year before, with improvements made to his farm, after having paid all his debts and filled his cellar and barn with provisions, will envy the lot of a commercial traveller in the town who earns $125 a month. He loses sight of the progress accomplished to compare the number of dollars which the townsman can handle. Yet what a difference between the lot of each of them, even if the farmer has not put a penny aside.

An Easy Way To Save Clippings

Many women have discovered the value of saving articles clipped from newspapers and magazines. But the time and effort spent in laboriously pasting them into unwieldy scrapbooks, which later become white elephants, often seems to overbalance the worth of the articles. So after a few spasmodic efforts at schapbooks, they give up and ruthlessly throw away that would prove of value if it were kept.

A simple way to keep articles culled from such sources is by means of individual or cross-reference folders, which may be had in various sizes for a few cents a dozen. A convenient size is 9½ by 11½ inches. Write plainly across the front what the folder contains. Clippings are just laid in these loose.

A suggestive list of folders is as follows: Recipes, interior decoration, flower garden, furniture, dressmaking, cleaning, serving, mending, entertainment.

Keep a pair of scissors in the living room and when reading have them at hand. Like everything else the value of the clipping habit depends a great deal on the spstematic perseverance of the individual. It will not be necessary to read through carefully an article that is for use only in the future. For instance, one need not spend much time in July poring over suggestions for a Christmas dinner. Glance through them and make sure they will be of value; then cut out the article and slip it into its proper folder to await its day of usefulness.

To keep these folders, office supply houses carry what are called transfer cases; sometimes lawyers' transfer cases. These usually cost about $2. But they are neat looking, strong and large enough to hold the cullings of several years' reading—that is, if one is an ordinary clipper. If one prefers to make her own transfer case she can do so by covering a very heavy pasteboard or very light wooden box with wall paper or cretonne. In the case of a wooden box, fasten the cover on with hinges.

The transfer case must be kept in a place which is convenient both for filing the articles and for consulting them. The utility of the whole idea lies in having the "scrapbook" easily available. The clippings all being loosely laid in the folders, may be thrown away at any time that their day of usefulness seems to be over, a decided advantage over the ordinary scrapbook.

A method for further taking care of new recipes has been found very satisfactory. After the recipe has been taken from the folder and tried out on the family appetite it can easily be thrown away if the verdict is against it. If, however, the family is in favor of having it again, it can then be pasted on a card and put in its place in the ricipe filing case, which many housekeepers use. Sometimes the recipe will need cutting down for a small family or stretching out for a large one. Or again, the consensus of opinion will be for a few alterations before it makes another public appearance. In these cases, when the recipe is finally adapted to one's particular need, copy it on a card in its corrected form before placing it in the file, without further trouble. This may where it will be ready for instant use sound like considerable labor to an already busy housewife but actually it is much easier than it sounds. It will save one the disappointment of searching in vain for some favorite recipe which ahs been carelessly tucked away somewhere and which refuses to come to light at the needed moment.

To illustrate this method, a pudding recipe, cut from a magazine, was tried by one housekeeper and received with loud acclaim by her hungry brood. But all decided that next time they would prefer "mother's own" special sauce to go with it. When the recipe was copied the original sauce was omitted and "mother's own" substituted. On another occasion the same housekeeper found what she thought would be a delicious menu for a home dinner. It proved, however, that the dessert was too heavy for her family after the prescribed first course. So in copying the menu she added another dessert more to their liking.

To housekeepers, to whom the drudgery and sameness or housework often get very irksome, an occasional visit to their box of clippings may prove full of inspiration as well as of useful ideas.—The Christian Science Monitor.

"Keep up Wages"

New York World-Telegram: The richest man in the world cannot use more that half a dozen or so automobiles and radio sets in a year, and, therefore, can contribute little to the prosperity of the concerns manufacturing these commodities. But if the rich man's profits for a year are a little smaller, and the wages of his 5,000 employees are maintained at a standard which will permit the purchase of one radio set and one automobile each, the radio and automobile industries are kept on a profitable basis, they keep men at work who are in turn able to buy the commodities of the rich man—so goes the endless chain of industrial well-being. Business men who understand this principle of enlightened selfishness will never need to be urged by the administration of any one else to refrain from wage cuts.

Recording Speeds Of Fast Trains

Indicators Keep Close Guard Against Bursts of Speed

London.—On the Continent of Europe it is a common practice to equip passenger locomotives with speed indicators to make certain that the speed limits are being observed and that no excessive bursts of speed are made by trains trying to make up for lost time, says the Daily Express.

One of the most successful speed indicators used is of the Flamand type, so called after its inventor, the chief designing engineer of the Eastern Railway of France.

This speed indicator not only shows the speed at which the locomotive is travelling from second to second, but also provides reliable data in the form of a chart record of the actual performance of any engine on which it is fitted, these logs being used for checking and research purposes.

The indicator and recorder consist of a semi-circular glass-covered speed scale with two movable hands, one operated mechanically and the other, painted red, which is movable from the outside as in the case of a barometer.

Marked By Moving Pen

This second hand is set to mark the highest speed allowed, and the machine also includes a small clock with a single small hand making a complete revolution every ten minutes.

Below the indicator there is a recording mechanism by which the speed travelled is marked by a moving pen on a travelling roll of paper.

A vertical transmission shaft is fitted from the dials and recording pen through the footplate into a gear box, a further more slender transmission shaft connecting with another gear box fitted on a small bracket by the rear driving wheel of the engine.

Connection is also made with the connecting rod, and the mechanism is so fitted that four impulses are given during each revolution of the driving wheel.

Measured Accurately

The speed is thus measured accurately to within a quarter of a revolution of the driving wheel, and the resulting chart of the run appears as an undulating line on a long strip of lined paper, with a separate trail for the time taken on the journey.

Several of the latest L.N.E.R. locomotives are being fitted with these speedometers and recorders for research purposes, but the usual methods of ascertaining the speeds of express trains by closely watching the time taken in passing the small quarter-mile posts along the line-sides with the help of a stop watch is not likely to be superseded at present.

TYPHOID FEVER

One of the most encouraging achievements in the field of public health is the elimination of typhoid fever in those places where the means of prevention have been applied.

Typhoid fever was formerly responsible for much sickness and many deaths. Hospital wards were filled with cases of the disease, and severe epidemics occurred from time to time. All this has been changed, and in those places, where a properly organized health department watches over the water, milk and food supplies, a case of typhoid fever is of comparatively rare occurrence.

Because it is easier to control the water and milk supplies of a city than it is those of the country, cities with an efficient health department are more free from typhoid fever than are the rural areas.

The cases which do occur in the cities are, in very many instances, contracted outside of the city. Conditions which prevail during the holiday season are responsible for much of this typoid. People are apt to forget that when they leave the city, they leave behind them its safe water and milk supplies.

We stress the water and milk supplies because typhoid fever is most commonly spread by water and milk which have been contaminated with the secretions from a case. Uncooked vegetables may also be contaminated, and unless they are washed most thoroughly, they spread the disease.

The common house-fly has been called the typhoid fly. It spreads typhoid fever because of its filthy habits. Feeding on filth, it becomes smeared with secretions which may contain the germ of typhoid fever. Flying from place to place, it deposits some of this germ-laden filth wherever it settles, which is, in many instances, on food which is later eaten.

For these reasons, it is a matter worthy of attention to make sure that on short or long trips out of the city, enquiries should be made as to the purity of the water and milk which are to be used, the cleanliness of uncooked vegetables, and the absence of flies from the kitchen and dining-room.

By the use of typhoid vaccine, as was clearly shown during the Great War, it is possible to secure protection against typhoid fever. The person who travels from place to place and who is almost forced to use water and foods of questionable purity would be well advised to safeguard himself against this disease by securing the protection given by inoculation.

Typhoid fever is a long drawn out illness. It is a disease which has many complications. It may be fatal, and, in any case, it is serious and may damage the body to a considerable extent. Because of its duration, it is an expensive disease to treat, and it is responsible for lost time and wages. There is one thing to do about typhoid fever and that is to avoid it. Unless you can be sure of the water, milk and food you use, it is better to be inoculated rather than to take the chance of contracting a serious disease.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

The editors of local newspapers are often blamed for partiality in their notices for churches, societies and even families, when the fact is the parties most interested are the ones to blame. The local newspaper does not possess a sufficient number of reporters to send to every church service in the range of its circulation, and it must needs depends upon some person to send in the news. Many pastors or leaders of the congregation do this and their items are gladly printed. Many societies appoint one of their members to attend to this important work.

The Government of Canada will take the census in June of this year. Every ten years the government takes this census to determine the population of the Dominion. In June Government representatives will set to work to cover every section and make a count of the number of people resident in Canada. Government statisticians will then determine just what is Canada's population.

Canada has grown rapidly since the last census in 1921. Just to what extent her population has increased is the problem of this contest.

The splendid cash awards shown on this page go to those who can most closely estimate what the Government will find our 1931 population in Canada to be.

Orange Celebration Held in Milton

Milton was in gala array Saturday as 40 Orange lodges from Halton, Peel, Wentworth, Dufferin and Wellington counties swung through the main streets to the stirring, martial music of their bands. The Orange Young Britons, Loyal True Blues, and Loyal Orange Benevolent Associations brought cheers from the spectators as they swept beneath the green arches on the main street. Upwards of 3,000 took part in the celebration, while the route of the parade was crowded with onlookers.

William McCready, marshal for Halton county for many years, riding his cream white charger, led the parade from the high school grounds through the main streets to the fair grounds where Mayor J. M. Mackenzie delivered the speech of welcome.

The advance guards of the parade arrived safely by bus, train and motor car, marching and counter-marching behind the bands which accompanied them.

Included in the parade were lodges from Brampton, Guelph, Oakville, Burlington, Toronto, Cooksville, Streetville, Port Credit, Acton, Georgetown, Campbell's Cross, Bolton, Hornby, Campbellville, Carlisle, Waterdown and Bronte.

At the park aims and work of the Orange order were outlined in addresses delivered by Rt. Hon. Wor. Bro. T. L. Church, ex-M.P., Toronto; Bro. R. K. Anderson, M.P., Milton; Captain Riddeford, grand organizer; Rt. Wor. A. A. Gray, past grand master, Toronto; Bro. S. Charters, M.P., Brampton; and Wor. Bro. A. Munro, past county master, Wentworth.

Eleven silver cups were awarded for the appearance of the various lodges on parade, as well as the oldest lady and the oldest Orangeman in the march. Sports featured the afternoon program.

Following are the winners of the silver cups awarded at the Orangemen's celebration: Best appearing L. T.B., No. 393, Georgetown; best appearing L.O.B.A. No. 47, Brampton best appearing Orange lodge, Campbell's Cross best appearing O. Y. Marchand; oldest Orangeman on parade, William Johnson, aged 87 years, of Peel County, member of L.O.L. No. 1031, for 66 years. Mr. Johnson walked every inch of the distance in the procession. The celebration concluded with a dance in the town hall.

The engagement is announced of Ruth Evelyn, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Edward McCann, to Robert Andrew Brownridge, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Brownridge of Omagh, the marriage to take place quietly, the middle of July.

THOMPSON FAMILIES HOLD SECOND REUNION

The second annual reunion of the descendants of the late Major George Thompson and William Thompson was held in the Georgetown Park Saturday afternoon. Two hundred members assembled. Mayor McKenzie of Georgetown, on behalf of the town, welcomed the guests. The remainder of the afternoon was spent in races and contests in which many participated. About 530 gathered for lunch in the drill shed, which was beautifully decorated for the occasion. After a short program of community singing, addresses were heard. The President, Rev. Griffin Thomson, outlined the history of the two pioneer families. Speeches were also given by Mayor Bowman of Whitby, Frank Thompson of Milton and several others. The following officers were appointed: Honorary President, Rev. Griffin Thompson, Hamilton; President, G. Frank Thompson, Milton; Secretary, J. Lawrence Thompson, Toronto; Assistant Secretary, Christopher Rutledge, Jr., Toronto.

LET US SMILE

The new hardware clerk prided himself on always having a snappy come-back.

"Do you keep refrigerators?" the timid looking woman inquired quietly.

"No," he snapped, "we sell them."

"Anyway," she said, as she strolled toward the door, "you'll keep the one you were going to sell me. Good morning."

COOKSVILLE

Two cars figured in a crash on the Centre road at the Middle road intersection yesterday and resulted in Philip Leachman, Toronto, receiving cuts about the face. The name of the driver of the second car has not yet been ascertained. Mr. Leachman was taken to St. Joseph's Hospital.

Earl Harrison was summoned to Mono by the death of his mother, Mrs. George Harrison, a native of England and a resident of Caledon Township for many years, who passed away in her 83rd year. She was living at the home of her daughter, Mrs. John Reed, her husband having predeceased her 12 years ago. Another daughter also survives, Mrs. Samuel Edwards, South Bellingham, Washington.

A very unusual find was made by Wm. Copeland, Cooksville, storekeeper, when he opened up a bunch of bananas. A tiny bird's nest of dried grass tumbled out from among the fruit, and in it was a little egg, about the size of a Meadow Lark's egg. It was yellowish tan in color with a very slight sprinkling of pale brown spots. Had the egg not been exposed to the killing cold of refrigerator car during its long journey from the south. Mr. Copeland would have tried artificial incubation to see what sort of feathered creature had made the entrance to Canada, careless of the quota and in embryo.

The late George William Turner, of Cooksville, who died in the Kingston General Hospital, Saturday, as the result of an automobile accident near Kingston, was a son of Wm. J. Turner. He was born on the Burnhamthorpe road 30 years ago. He is survived by his widow, formerly Viola Harris, a daughter, Beryl; a brother, Albert, of Cooksville, and a sister, Mrs. W. J. Foster, Brampton. His father, with whom he was in business at Cooksville, also survives. The late Mr. Turner was a member of the Masonic Order, an Orangeman and a member of Cooksville United Church.

Interment took place Tuesday afternoon at Dixie Cemetery.

Not one out of 181 pupils of Port Credit Public Schools who wrote entrance examinations failed. This is said to be a new record for the Public schools of this district.

Kaye Don Beats Own Record

Drives His Motor Boat at 110.23 Miles an Hour Speed

Gardone, Riviera, Italy—Kaye Don, British sportsman, broke his own world's speedboat record on July 8th by piloting the Miss England II over a measured course at a rate of 110.223 miles an hour. Don set the previous record of 103.49 miles an hour in Argentina earlier this year.

Don made two runs over the Lake Garda course at speeds of 107.878 miles per hour and 112.569 to smash the record.

This record-breaking run marked the end of nearly three months of efforts here by the British sportsman. Don brought the Miss England here May 5 to compete in the International Speedboat Regatta sponsored by Gabriel D'Annunzio, but motor trouble balked every attempt he made then to set a new record.

A new engine was installed in the boat recently and other mechanical adjustments were made. In the tryout he averaged 109.43 miles an hour over a measured course, but motor trouble prevented him from making the run in the other direction as required in record attempts. But last Thursday, with perfect conditions prevailing, Don brought his boat to the course and 13 minutes later had established his new mark.

Rockefeller, 92, Receives Felicitations of World

Tarrytown, N.Y.—Inside the walls of his 8000-acre Pocantico Hills estate, John D. Rockefeller on July 8th observed his ninety-second birthday in excellent health.

Messages of congratulations poured in from the world's leaders in business, finance and philanthropy, but the actual celebration was a family affair.

In a birthday message to the world, Mr. Rockefeller said:

"These occasions offer me a very welcome opportunity; first, to express my gratitude to the many, many friends who not only at this time, but through the year have shown their kindly regard to me, and, second, to wish them and theirs and all the world a large measure of health and contentment, which are the basis of real happiness."

The program mapped out for Mr. Rockefeller included his bit of golf, a little work with his secretary, a motor ride in the estate and a dinner in the evening. Only members of the immediate family were invited to the dinner. A birthday cake was baked.

There is one anniversary more important to Mr. Rockefeller than his birthday, friends say, the day he got his first job as an assistant bookkeeper in Cleveland in 1855. He earned $50 in the first three months. That day is September 26, which he usually observes by giving away a bushel of shiny dimes.

Twenty years ago Mr. Rockefeller turned over $1,000,000,000 in capital holdings to his son John D. Rockefeller Jr., who was to spend it "for the benefit of all mankind." Since that time the oil king has lived in content and increasing health.

Bird in Hand

Two men met at the races. One was seedy-looking. He passed to his more prosperous acquaintance a tip which duly came home. The other was delighted.

"Thanks awfully," he said. "One good turn deserves another. I hope to have some rather special information to-morrow, and if you happen to be here I'll pass it on to you as a quid pro quo."

"Bob," replid the seedy-one, "if it's all the same to you, I'd sooner have a quid pro tem."

Northland Claims Another Victim

Frontier Clergyman's Wife, Brought Out by Plane, Dies

Hamilton.—Typhoid fever, contracted in the heart of the Northland where she was engaged in Anglican missionary work among the Cree Indians, caused the death in the isolation ward of the General Hospital early Sunday of Mrs. Mary Caroline Garrett, wife of Rev. Leslie Garrett, who is now stationed 500 miles north of Sioux Lookout.

Unable to withstand the hardships of the north country, Mrs. Garrett became ill last December. Dog sleighs in Winter and canoes in Summer were the only means of transportation available, and so weak was the victim that her husband found it impossible to move her. She remained in a critical condition until June 19, when a plane, owned by the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company, found the little family at the northern outpost when a forced landing was made.

Mr. Garrett immediately arranged for his wife's transportation to Sioux Lookout, where she was transferred to a train the following day. Mr. Garrett and their three children accompanied the victim, and she was taken to the home of her mother, Mrs. E. F. Gomme, of 70 Alanson Street. Two weeks ago typhoid fever developed.

Radio appeals were made from several stations and Mrs. Gomme received a wire from the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company, informing her that her message had been picked up by an official, who promised to arrange for the special flight of a company plane. Rev. Mr. Garrett will return to Sioux Lookout in the machine and should reach Hamilton early Friday.

Mrs. Garrett was 40 years of age and was a graduate of the Toronto Bible College. She was the daughter of the late Rev. George Gomme.

Air Travel Becomes Increasingly Safe

Hartford, Conn.—Airway travel is more than four times as safe as it was three years ago, according to the committee on aviation of the Actuarial Society of America.

The committee's third annual report stated that during 1930 the chance of death among passengers in planes on scheduled flights was one in 17,000. In 1929 it was one in 10,000 and in 1928 one in 4,000.

The improvement is attributed by the report to the close supervision exercised over such flying by the aeronautics branch of the Department of Commerce, to extension of radio beacon service and weather information, to close co-operation of operating companies and to the excellence of United States aircraft and engines.

Pilots, the report states, lead a far more hazardous life than passengers, the mortality rate among holders of transport licenses, the highest type issued, being 24 per 1,000. When these were subdivided into groups with varying hazard no group of commercial pilots was found by the committee tin which the mortality rate was lower than 19 per 1,000.

Homicide Records Shattered in New York

New York—There were 698 homicides in New York state in 1930, of which New York City contributed 494. Both figures break all previous records.

Dr. Thomas Parran, jr., Commissioner of the State's Department of Health, issued the statistics with the statement that New York City accounts for nearly two-thirds of the state's homicides.

The city's killings increased from 425 to 494 in 1930 while the rest of the state dropped from 220 in 1929 to 204 in 1930.

Attractive Girls Rare Cancer Cases

Pretty women are almost immune from cancer of the skin, according to Dr. Joseph C. Bloodgood, clinical professor of surgery at Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore. "Pretty women," he said in an address before the clinical conference of St. Louis clinics recently, "usually pay particular attention to the skin over their bodies, especially that which is exposed with low-neck dresses. It has virtually come to the point that less clothes mean a lesser chance for cancer. In the last ten years I have not seen a woman who smokes, but cleans her teeth regularly, become a victim of cancer of the mouth."

Blimp Takes Fire Two Are Killed

Goodyear Airship Blown by Storm Against High Tension Wires

Kansas City, Mo.—At least two persons, the pilot and co-pilot, were burned when the Goodyear Zeppelin airship Mayflower, of Akron, Ohio, was destroyed after being blown by a wind and rain storm into high tension electric wires at the Kansas City Airport.

Capt. C. E. Brannigan, 35, Akron, Ohio, the pilot, was dangerously burned, and physicians said he might not live.

R. H. Hobenfack, co-pilot, was less seriously burned.

Hobenfack said the airship, moored at the port, weathered the first storm shortly after 6:30 o'clock, but was blown into the wires by a second gust of wind and rain.

Hobenfack said he htought the Hobenfack said he thought the hangar, breaking the gasoline tanks and that the fuel ignited when the ship was blown into the wires.

Farmer Used Airplane To Trace Truant Cows

Buffalo, N.Y.—The airplane is not usually thought of as an adjunct to agriculture. Its possibilities, however, for locating stock that has strayed from its home pasture, writes a correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor, were proved recently by a farmer in the township of Hinsdale, south of Buffalo. This farmer had lost four of his cows.

Unwilling to tramp for hours through the forest-covered hills searching for the delinquent bovines, Howard A. Crosby, when they disappeared on July 2, sought the services of a barnstorming airplane, which was making its headquarters in a plain near his farm. Chartering the airplane and the services of the pilot, the farmer was soon scanning the near-by valleys from the sky. Within a few minutes he saw the cows wandering in a ravine, and it was a comparatively simple matter to track them down and bring them back to the farm.

Tidal Power Plan Before Bay of Fundy Commission

Ottawa—An international commission is to determine whether the high tides of the Bay of Fundy can be harnessed without harm to fishing along the coasts of New Brunswick and Maine.

Canada will be represented by W. A. Found, Deputy Minister of Fisheries, and Dr. A. G. Hunstman, senior director of the Dominion Biological Board. United States representatives are Henry O'Malley, Commissioner of Fisheries at Washington, and O. E. Sette, officer of the United States Bureau of Fisheries.

For several years attempts have been made to obtain the consent of the Canadian government to build dams in Passamaquoddy and Cobscook Bays to utilize the enormous potentialities for power development provided by the high tides. So far applications have been refused. Fishermen have objected. The commission will begin its work next month. Mr. Found has been named chairchairman.

French Fliers Pass Over Moscow

Progress of French Aviators Enthusiastically Hailed in Paris

Paris.—The French aviators, Joseph Lebrix and Marcel Dorect, with their mechanic, Rene Mesin, passed over Moscow at 6.30 p.m. Moscow time (11 a.m. E.S.T.) Sunday, in their airplane "Hyphen," according to word which reached here after 9 o'clock.

The news was immediately flashed on electric signboards in the central boulevards and a great shout went up from the Parisian throngs, who were celebrating the eve of the second day's anniversary of the fall of the Bastille, one of France's most important holidays.

It was the first news of the fliers which had reached here since they were reported over Belgium at 6 a.m., a little over an hour after they took off from Le Bourget airdrome.

The news indicated that the fliers were making slightly better time than their original schedule plans.

The fliers left Le Bourget at 4.43 in the morning. They hoped to reach Tokio in 62 hours, flying directly across Russia.

The plane carried fuel enough for 7 hours of flying.

New Type Merchant Ship Devised for British Trade

London—As certain conditions in Germany demanded and produced a special type of craft from the naval architects, so havo trade conditions led to a demand for an economical cargo vessel from the merchant shipbuilders.

A big shipbuilding firm in the north of England recently was asked for a ship of light draft which should have a service speed of 10 knots or of nine knots, with proportionally reduced fuel consumption. The vessel of 6650 tons was built and carried out a long voyage at over the agreed speed with a coal consumption of 17.9 tons a day.

The builders, profiting by the lessons learned in building this pioneer vessel, are now offering to build ships with less tonnage and less fuel consumption.

Wheat Prospects Good

Preston—The wheat crop in the district is above the average, being free from rust due to remarkably good weather. Too much rain from now on, it is said, would be disastrous however.

Summer Costumes Vary in Color

Brilliant Combinations of One or More Colors With White Favored for Sport

New York.—Color contrasts continue to sweep fashion, across the stable white background of the summer mode. For though this summer is distinctly a time of play upon color, it is just as definitely a white summer. In the spring we talked much of black with a touch of white and colored frocks with a touch of white. Now the talk has reversed itself and the chatter is about white with a touch of color, and sometimes more than a touch.

In the realm of sport clothes this color accent on white is of the most brilliant tones. For city and street wear it is a bit more discreet, but it is ever present in the mode as worn in smart restaurants at luncheon and tea time.

White Furs For Summer

All the colors so enthusiastically talked about achieve chic through consorting with white. To further amplify this mode there are jackets of white fur, such as broadtail and pony skin, jackets of white chiffon and of white crepes and corded silks. Gloves that are white and white hats of paper panama, of white velvet, felt or even suede also are among the high spots of summer fashion news.

Dresses of sheer white woolen and those of white cotton fabrics are seen on city streets as well as on country club piazzas. Recently we have seen many wool suits of chiffon weight lunching at smart places and at the matinee. How color sets off white is proved by the short bright-colored jackets which often are worn with these costumes, or the scarfs which supplement them when the suit itself is all white.

The bright colored beret worn with so many of the white sports frocks is another favored method of introducing color.

National Colors Everywhere

Hand-knitted sweaters introduce brilliant hues to suits of white lightweight wool. The white flannel suit is good, too, worn with a bright-hued blouse, and the white skirt with a blue flannel coat and red scarf is another favorite. Whether it is patriotism or just a liking of lively shades, the national colors are appearing everywhere that smart sportswomen gather this season. Bathing beaches, tennis courts and golf links, all are flooded with costumes showing red, white and blue combined in a multitude of smart ways.

China to Form Council For Economic Welfare

Nanking, China.—Establishment of a national economic planning commission, patterned after the Soviet planning body, has been decided upon by the Chinese government.

The organization will formulate economic projects and will co-ordinate activities of the central and local government organs.

T. V. Soong, Minister of Finance, who proposed the commission, said that government departments at Nanking do not co-ordinate their finances now and spend large sums each month, obtaining a minimum of benefit.

The commission will have the power to investigate all work undertaken by the governmental departments and all plans for economic reconstruction must be submitted to it for approval.

In the body will be the government ministers and eleven members designated by the government.

Canadian Plane Tour Arrived at Regina

Regina, Sask.—Canada's 13-plane air tour, travelling by stages across the Dominion, rested here on Sunday after shooting over 350 miles of prairie from Winnipeg. In speeding procession the machines settled to earth here after an uneventful trip from the Manitoba capital, where rain prevented the fliers from staging their aerial display.

Getting the Laughs Is Hard Task

By JESSE L. LASKY

(Condensed from The American Legion Monthly, April, 1931, by The Magazine Digest.)

The hardest thing for a showman to manage is the laugh. This treacherous and indispensable factor has some of the best of us guessing after a lifetime in the business of entertainment. Pathos, mystery, thrills, tense drama and even a pleasing combination of qualities that sends an audience away with the warm glow of satisfaction that is the object of the theatre are, by comparison, simple to execute.

There is more in every comedy situation than meets the eye. We can make a picture in the script and judge with fair accuracy the ultimate possibilities in every particular except humor. This we are never certain of until the long (and costly) road of production has been travelled and the film is shown before a pay audience. Playbacks of individual scenes and projection room showings of the whole after it has been cut and made ready for release do not tell what we wish to know. It takes an audience that has come to be entertained to decide whether the laugh spot brings laughs or not. And no failure in the realm of film entertainment is more devastating than the laugh which doesn't come off.

Two years ago one of the finest comedians in filmdom made his first talkie. After all the time and money and labor had been spent, the last shot made and the last set struck, the film arrived in New York for a preprojection showing to a small and critical cluster of insides—executives, salesmen, bookers, theatre owners, and so on. The actor in question had never made a failure, but we sat there in that bare projection room, without music or any of the things that garnish a motion picture performance, and were dumbfounded. Not a laugh, not a chuckle. The picture was a flop.

So we insiders thought. The country's verdict was otherwise. That picture made two and a half million dollars. Three out of five who read these remarks say it and the chances are they laughed their heads off. And there you are. Laughter is contagious. You must have an audience to tell if the germ is there.

Laughter is a serious business with us. On the stage a good actor controls his audience. He can start and end laughs almost at will. But in pictures you can't suspend the dialogue until a laugh is over. Sometimes the length of a laugh is miscalculated and either the following lines are drowned out or there is a dead spot where the laugh didn't last as long as expected. Sometimes it is necessary to cut out a good laugh in a talkie because it lasts so long that it spoils a necessary bit of dialogue.

We never can tell for sure when, at what and how long they're going to laugh. Some comedians believe the life of a joke seldom exceeds fourteen days, but Al Herman's line about how to divide three apples equally among four persons (the answer is to make apple sauce) has been in use for eighteen years to my knowledge. Why this should hold and it must have been two other fellows should go in eighteen months is more than I can say.

The talkies made the funny line, or gag, a part of our stock in trade. The producing companies have a corps of "gag men" thinking them up all the time. A sure-fire formula is reversing English on an accepted answer. This is how Oscar Wilde did his epigrams, speaking, for example, of a man who had a lavish funeral as "dying beyond his means." Groucho Marx is a master of this. In "Animal Crackers" his brother Chico, playing a weird-looking instrument, says how much he intends to charge for a performance of one hour, two hours and so on. "How much would you charge for not playing at all?" asks Groucho. "Oh, that would run into real money," says Chico, which is what we call topping the gag. Those lines scored one hundred per cent. laughs. So did the one where Groucho turns to his hostess with "Do you mind if I don't smoke?" As I write them they are nothing to fall out of your chair about, but that is because I lack Groucho's art—which establishes another point in this laugh-producing business.

There is less talk in the talkies now than there was at first. The eye remains the quickest messenger to the brain and the funny-bone. A great deal of the technique developed in the silents is coming back. This centres about the art of pantomime, one of the oldest forms of humor, of which Charlie Chaplin is the greatest modern exponent.

The oldest and surest device of the pantomimist is the trick fall. In the Middle Ages when jesters were obliged to make royalty laugh on penalty of death their ace in the hole was the fall. Maurice Chevalier gets a laugh when he falls on roller skates in his haste to reach the beautiful blonde in one of his plays.

All physical comedy is akin to pantomime. Our fathers laughed at pie-throwing, exploding cigars and falling bricks in burlesque. As boys we laughed at them in the silents. With certain refinements they're in the talkies and will remain because their principle is as old as humor itself. So is the principle of racial ego. A funny Negro must be lazy, a Scotchman parsimonious, a Swede stubborn, an Irishman belligerent, and an Englishman slow to get the point—and all must mispronounce the language.

Less widely known is the fact that children and animals nearly always add a light touch, and can take out some of the stiffness.

It is very much simpler to make audiences cry than to make them laugh. Grief is a common denominator of mankind. The difficulties which we find in producing laughter are present in the delineation of pathos, but in a smaller degree. Crowd reaction is not so essential to tell us where we stand. One person can usually get the reactions which will touch thousands to tears. Ruth Chatterton plays emotional roles perfectly, because she is a perfect actress.

Contrition, repentance, sacrifice, loss, compunctions of honor or duty, courage with which one takes arrows off adverse fortune—these invariably touch well-springs. One of the most effective scenes on the screen last year depicted the fortitude with which an old charwoman (Beryl Mercer) went about her homely tasks when the waif of a Canadian soldier whom she had adopted was killed in battle.

But mistake me not, the volume of laughs or tears or the number of times our hair stands up over a thrill is not the standard by which the success of a picture is measured by that lion-tamer of us producers, the audience. It's the glow of satisfaction that a fellow feels on the way home. No one thing gives him that glow, but a combination of many things, running the gamut of the theatre's technique as applied to the human species in search of recreation.

"Our Re-Union Day"

The attendant at the gas station was busy filling the tank of the automobile.

"I have used twenty gallons of gas since I left Havergil" exclaimed the driver.

"Havergil? why that's my home town," said the attendant and his face lighted up with an added interest in the stranger.

"I left home last Fall in search of work. It was a hard pull to leave the old folks but there was no work there. They have a telephone and each week I talk to them. We call it our re-union day".

As the stranger eased his car back into the stream of traffic he said to his wife and daughter, "I wonder how many families, separated just as this man is, are being re-united once a week or oftener by means of the telephone? How much we all owe to Alexander Graham Bell!"

Royal Sponsor

The old saying that: "Handsome is as handsome does" would seem particularly applicable to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, who not only launched the new Canadian Pacific liner "Empress of Britain", but followed her progress with such interest that he flew down from London and inspected her informally, prior to her sailing from Southampton, on May 27, on her maiden voyage. As the great white ship made her way down the Solent, he followed her by airplane; a royal send-off, indeed. The picture shows His Royal Highness shaking hands with E. W. Beatty, K.C., chairman and president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, on this occasion and wishing him and the vessel good luck.

Evelyn (blushing) — "Darling, have you any preference as to the style of my wedding gown?"

George—"Yes, love; I want it to be one of the early June variety."

Tricky

"That's a very knowing animal," said the young man to the keeper of the elephant at the circus.

"Very," was the cool rejoinder. "He performs strange tricks and antics."

"Does he?" inquired the youth, eyeing the animal critically.

"Surprising," replied the keeper. "We've taught him to put money in that box up there."

"Try him with 50c."

Sure enough the elephant took the money in his trunk and put it in a box which hung high on the wall.

"That's extraordinary," said the smart one. "Now let me see him take it out and hand it back again."

"We haven't taught him that trick yet!" retorted the keeper, blandly.

One murderer out of every four in Britain commits suicide after committing the crime.

Owl Laffs

Tramp—"Can you give me a bite to eat?"

Housewife—"Have you no trade, my good man?"

Tramp—"Yes. I make counterfeit money, but it isn't worth what the materials cost."

A well driven golf ball leaves the head of the club at 135 miles an hour. This is said to be only slightly faster than a golfer leaves the office.

Timid Citizen (to his lawyer)—"I'm afraid of my wife. Why, she's even threatened to attack me with an axe."

Lawyer—"Huh! Why worry about that? Did you ever see a woman try to chop a stick of wood?"

Profession—Any trade that wouldn't be necessary if people behaved themselves.

Let's Send a Couple to Congress

This old world has not grown decadent,
Why spend useless hours in remorse?
There's just as much horse-sense as ever—
Though most of it's owned by the horse.

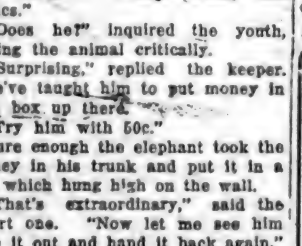
Girls should never, never throw kisses. It's almost impossible for them to hit the object aimed at.

The reporter was sent to write up a charity ball. Next day the editor called him to his desk.

Editor—"Look here, Scribbler, what do you mean by this? 'Among the most beautiful girls was Horatio Lucian Dingley.' Why, you crazy idiot! Old Dingley isn't a girl—and besides he is one of our largest stockholders."

Scribbler—"I can't help it, That's where he was."

"Nothing 'half-baked' about this idea."



Mrs. Newlywed—"We hadn't been married a week when he hit me with a piece of sponge cake."

Judge—"Disorderly conduct. Five dollars and costs."

Mrs. Newlywed (sobbing bitterly)—"And I made the cake with my own hands."

Judge — "Assault with a deadly weapon—one year in prison."

Character is what we stand for; reputation is what we fall for. We know a girl so dumb she was fired from Woolworth's (not adv.) because she couldn't remember the prices. Judging from the court records a lot of men met up with their wives when Central gave them the wrong number. Every once in while the boy who received all the best grades in school surprises folks by succeeding after he leaves school. A Scotchman was having trouble with his eyes so went to the oculist one day, to see what the trouble was. The oculist told him he had sugar in his tears, and the next morning his wife found him crying over his cereal. A tax is about the only thing in the world that can go up and never come down. This wouldn't be a half bad country if all the grafting were left to the horticulturists.

What Do You Think?

Dear Colyum: "I've heard that some husbands think their wives are regular animals. Maybe these are some of the reasons:

1. She has a foxy look on her face.
2. She is a regular little monkey.
3. She is a "white elephant."
4. She is a regular old bear when out of humor.
5. Some people think she is a cat.
6. She is a regular mule for stubbornness.
7. She has a swanlike neck.
8. Her canine teeth are prominent.
9. She is as wise as an old owl.
10. Her actions are kittenish when she is in the right humor.
11. She is a dear (deer).
12. She occasionally looks sheepish.
13. She thinks she is the goat.
14. She keeps an eagle eye on him all the time.
15. She is a poor fish
16. She has a whale of an appetite.
17. She growls at him and snaps his head off occasionally.
18. She laughs like a hyena
19. She does a lot of crowing.

Castoria
made especially for CHILDREN

CHILDREN usually hate to take medicine but every child loves the taste of Castoria. And mothers like its action—so gentle, yet so prompt and effective.

Castoria is a never-failing comfort to children and mothers alike because it was formulated expressly for children—to correct their little ills and upsets.

The beauty of it is you can give Castoria to children of all ages with equally sure results. When baby's cry warns of colic, a few drops of Castoria has him soothed; and free from pain, he is asleep again in a jiffy.

In an older child when coated tongue or bad breath tell of constipation, a more liberal dose is usually all that is needed to cleanse and regulate the bowels.

Your doctor will tell you Castoria deserves a place in the family medicine cabinet until your children are grown. He knows it is safe for the tiniest baby; effective for a child in his teens.

Newest Locomotive is Monster Indeed

The largest and most powerful locomotive of its kind in the world has just been completed in the Angus Shops of the Canadian Pacific Railway, Montreal, for service in the Rocky Mountains. The new "8000" locomotive represents a new era in the advancement of steam motive power of greater efficiency and higher sustained capacity. It is called a "multi-pressure" engine because it generates its steam in three separated portions and at three different pressures and, because of its radical departures in boiler design, is creating something of a furore in mechanical and railroad circles.

Facts and figures of the "8000" will give some indication of its magnitude, efficiency and strength. It is only a scant nine inches short of 100 feet in length. Weight of engine is 485,000 lbs. and of tender 300,000 lbs., making a total of 785,000 lbs. or 392½ tons. It has five driving wheels on each side, each of which is 63 inches in diameter. Its tractive effort is 90,000 lbs. which means that on a level track it will haul a freight train, over a mile in length, made up of one hundred and fifty 40-ton cars and representing a total weight of 6000 tons. Its tender has a capacity of 12,000 gallons of water and 4350 gallons of fuel oil enabling it to make long hauls without replenishing. There are 18,695 feet or slightly over three and a half miles of seamless steel tubes used in the construction of the boiler units alone.

An outstanding feature of the "8000" is the firebox unit which is a closed circuit in which 300 gallons of distilled water are continually circulating without loss by evaporation. Distilled water is used because it prevents accumulation of sludge and scale so common in water tube boilers. The closed circuit or firebox unit extends into the high-pressure boiler drum in the form of 16 coils, called heat transfer coils.

There are three locomotives of this type in Europe and they show excellent savings in fuel, ranging from 25 to 35 per cent, as compared with the conventional type of locomotive. But the largest of the European locomotives of this type is only 42 per cent of the weight and develops only 36 per cent of the power of the "8000." It will be used in the Rocky Mountain territory of the company.

H. B. Bowen (inset) Chief of Motive Power and Rolling Stock, Canadian Pacific Railway, working in co-operation with the American Locomotive Company and the Superheater Company, of New York, designed the "8000" after he had made a special trip to Europe in 1929 to study locomotive types and development. The construction of this monster locomotive was handled under direct supervision of Mr. J. Burns, Works Manager, Angus Shops, and Mr T. Donald, of Mr. Bowen's staff.

Lay-out shows full length view of the "8000"; front-end view; and, inset, Mr. Bowen, designer of the locomotive.

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS

Sheila O'Shay, former popular actress, now the wife of the multi-millionaire Don Ellsworth, disappears, leaving no trace. Don visits Dr. Cavanaugh, the famous criminologist, and confesses his married life has been unhappy. Peter Piper, reporter of The Herald, is sent to Dr. Cavanaugh's home. By accident he meets the doctor's adopted daughter, Barbara Cavanaugh and learns that she is interested in the case. She confesses she was engaged to Ellsworth before his marriage and persuades Peter to leave without seeing Dr. Cavanaugh. On returning to The Herald office Peter learns that an unidentified body has been found in the tule marsh outside the city.

Between these two—the doctor, whose heavy figure was unobtrusively clad in a suit tailored by Brooks' Brothers, whose long, pale cigars were manufactured for him individually, according to his own mixture, and the grizzled little man in plain clothes who swung in the battered swivel chair and rolled in rapid succession a series of Bull Durham cigarettes, there existed none of the antagonism traditional between the police and the independent "expert."

Camberwell's admiration for the psychologist was more than professional. He had not arrived at his present office on the top floor of the city hall tower without a great deal of incredulous and scornful opposition. He had been the first man on the coast to install and classify fingerprint records in the old days when criminals were identified—or more frequently weren't—by description and photographs only. More recently he had talked, read, almost eaten and slept "forensic ballistics," those telltale individual "fingerprints" left on a bullet in its passage through a gun barrel. He had forced the detective bureau to take seriously the measurement of realtion time as a test of veracity—a device seized upon with glee by the public press, described with inspired inaccuracy, and captioned the "truth detector."

As a result, he had heard himself described as a freak and his department criticized as an example of new-fangled, high-brow "college" police methods. But his methods had held their own in court; and his practice of seeking the collaboration of Dr. Cavanaugh whom some other members of the department somewhat snortingly referred to as a "nut cracker," had not only contributed to the defence of his pet theories, but on more than one occasion had held him back from serious blunders.

Cavanaugh's association with Camberwell, on the other hand, had led the psychologist to turn his wide-ranging curiosity on the problems of personal identification. It had given him what he always called a "mere hobby"—but it was a hobby which he put to frequent and very practical use. In return, he had given to the policemen, struggling through the thickets of uncharted research, the encouragement of his support in some rather dark and stormy periods. Camberwell's admiration of talents different from his own was intensified by personal gratitude.

"So far," Dr. Cavanaugh reminded him gently, "you have two quite isolated facts to consider. A corpse that has been found and a woman that hasn't."

"But it isn't a corpse!" Camberwell's chair squeaked with accelerated tempo. "I only wish it were!"

CHAPTER X.

"Oh!" Dr. Cavanaugh said in mild surprise. "My error. I was distinctly under the impression that a corpse was the chief occasion for this conference."

"It isn't as good as a corpse," Camberwell said, as if he had ordered one and it had not come up to specifications. "Not nearly so good. It's only remains."

"Well, then, suppose for the moment we postpone consideration of the corpse which isn't there, and concentrate on the lady, who isn't there either." Dr. Cavanaugh drew several meditative puffs from his cigar before he went on. "Every act, of course, is the expression of a motive, and the motive behind a given act is determined by character, temperament, call it what you will. Conversely, if you know a person's character well enough, you know what motives will operate in his strongly enough to produce actions, and what actions they are likely to produce. Unfortunately, we don't know Mrs. Ellsworth's character half well enough for such prediction. If I had known she was going to disappear," he added whimsically, "I should have made much better use of the few opportunities for observation that came my way. What little I do know complicates rather than simplifies the possibilities. Mrs. Ellsworth was a far from conventional person, and her acts, therefore, may not fall into the grooves of conventional conduct."

"I'll say they mayn't!" Camberwell agreed with ironic fervor.

"I've no more to go on than you have." Dr. Cavanaugh went on, scrutinizing the glowing tip of his cigar. "But I've given the case a little thought—a sort of preliminary survey. I've known young Don Ellsworth for several years, and he came to me the other night, to see what I could make of it. I declined to take up the case professionally, because I had an idea you might call upon me. It's too bad I didn't know about this latest find of yours—if I had, I'd have won a nickel with myself when you called up!"

"You do think, then, that she's been done away with!"

"Not necessarily. We have here—or rather we haven't here—a woman entirely free of one of the most powerful restrictions on human conduct: the fear of social disapproval. Sheila O'Shay made herself conspicuous in a variety of ways on two continents. And however disreputable the ways were, from the point of view of conventional society, she capitalized them to her advantage. She made a bad reputation pay. She is an exhibitionist. Whatever she did contributed to the gate receipts. Now this woman, whose latest and most conspicuous act was her marriage to a multi-millionaire several years her junior disappears. She is excessively fond of money—or rather of what money will buy in the way of a flaunting display of luxury. That has been amply indicated by her previous career. She is also highly sexed—which has likewise been sufficiently indicated."

"It certainly has," Camberwell agreed again.

"If she went away of her own free will, there is the possibility that she was actuated by a strong sex impulse, directed elsewhere than toward her husband. I very much doubt if she ever felt any very compelling attraction toward a man of Ellsworth's type. There is also the possibility that Ellsworth put the screws on financially and she found that being married to a multi-millionaire did not give her immediate access to all the millions to play with. In either case, she might have left as suddenly and as inexplicably as she did. She would not be hampered, you see, by consideration for Don nor by the fear of publicity. She may, indeed, have planned the manner of her exit, knowing the stir it would cause, as preliminary press agentry for a return to the stage!"

"But in that case—in any of those cases—we ought to have got some trace of her!"

"I would not understand her resourcefulness," Dr. Cavanaugh countered. "In no sense of the words was Sheila O'Shay born yesterday. However, there is the second possibility that she was abducted, perhaps for ransom, perhaps by a jealous former lover. And there is, of course, the third—that she was murdered. So far it's all speculation."

"But this tule marsh business—"

"This tule marsh business may indeed substitute a second mystery for the first—or merely add another unrelated one. By the way, if it were Sheila O'Shay, it would hardly be unrecognizable so soon, would it? Or would it? You haven't told me, you know."

"That part fits in all right, as to time. But it makes identification the very dickens of a job. Properly speaking, the body wasn't found in the marsh at all, but above it, on the south slope of El Cerrito hill. There was a grass fire there a couple of weeks ago that burned the place over. This morning a group of boys playing Indian stumbled on the body. It had been burned beyond recognition. It might have lain there in the tall grass for month or years—except that the charred remains showed little sign of exposure to the weather."

"And this fire—how did it start?"

"There you have us. There was a high north wind blowing for several days about that time. I remember it, and anyway the weather reports back it up. Under those conditions, grass fires along that strip are common enough—a cigarette end thrown out of an automobile, a spark from a passing locomotive, embers of a 'jungle' fire made by tramps—any one of a number of things might account for it. On the other hand, the fire came pretty pat to destroying all chance of identifying that body."

"You don't quite mean that," Dr. Cavanaugh leaned back in his chair. He had a way of appearing most relaxed when another man would have leaped forward in strained attention. "You would not have called me away from golf to attempt the impossible—because you're one of the very few people who realize that the impossible is one of the things that simply isn't done."

Lullaby

Softly now the burn is rushing,
Every lark its song is hushing,
On the moor thick rest is falling,
Just one heather-blade is calling—
Calling, calling, lonely, lonely,
For my darling, for my only,
Leanbhain O, Leanbhain O!

Trotting home, my dearie, dearie,
Wee black lamb comes, wearie, wearie,
Here its soft feet pit-a-patting
Quickly o'er the flowery matting,
See its brown-black eyes a-blinking—
Of its bed it's surely thinking,
Leanbhain O, Leanbhain O!

The hens to roost wee Nora's shooing,
Brindley in the byre is mooing,
The tired-out cricket's quit its calling,
Velvet sleep on all it falling,
Lark and cow, and sheep and starling—
Feel it kiss our white-haired darling,
Leanbhain O, Leanbhain O!

What New York Is Wearing

Illustrated Dress-making Lesson Furnished With Every Pattern

A smocked frock is such a quaint pretty fashion for small daughter. And when it is as versatile as this one-piece dress with its swaying ruffles at the hem, it's doubly attractive.

The smocking is useful as well as decorative. It affects shoulder yokes and provides a nice fulness to the skirt.

It may be made with long or short puff sleeves.

Style No. 2635 is designed for tiny tots of 2, 4 and 6 years.

An old-fashioned sprigged dimity in pink and blue made the original model. The neck and cuff bands were plain pink organdie. The pale blue ruffling matched the background of the print.

Yellow organdie, pale blue batiste, nile green sheer linen with yellow ruffling, trim and smocking worked in the yellow and pink and white dotted swiss are too cute for words.

Size 4 requires 2 yards 32 or 35-inch material with ¼ yard 27-inch contrasting and 3 yards 2-inch plaiting for long sleeve dress.

Lady Bug's Value as Killer Of Pests Held in Doubt

Yakima, Wash.—The hard-working lady bug, long believed effective in combating fruit tree pests, is now under suspicion. Many fruit-growers say this beetle is a natural born tramp, migrating too rapidly to help individual orchards. It is still believed, however, that the insect, freed in large communities, might clean up the green aphis and rust larvae.

Entomologists are of the opinion that severe dust-storms in the melon and grape growing sections caused ladybugs to migrate.

The ADVENTURES of CAPTAIN JIMMY and his Dog SCOTTIE

What came before: Captain Jimmy and his friend Lieut. Jed Stone plan to rescue Guy Stone, Jed's younger brother, from the cruel Chinese bandits. Disguising their plane as a dragon, they raid the bandits' camp.

I searched hurriedly through the deserted tents for Guy. A few hundred feet away Lieut. Jed Stone stood guard with his terrible dragon plane gleaming blue in the darkness. From the rim of the dark forests the bandits' rifles flashed and stray bullets rained about the camp. Jed returned their fire with bursts from his machine gun.

Tat-tat-tat. Tat-tat-tat. And the echoes resounded a hundred times from the black mountain cliffs. Adding to the terror of the situation, the thunder which had rumbled in the distance now rolled up overhead with a muffled roar.

Flashlight in hand I searched. The tents were in the utmost confusion. Dirty cooking utensils, fragments of cooked food, were all strewn about helter skelter fashion. The air was close and hot. Scottie sniffed and sneezed, with disapproval.

No sign of Guy Stone in the first tent. We ducked under the back wall and made for the next one. As we ran across the open space, a rifle went, Crack! A bullet whipped by my arm. Those bandits were better shots than most Chinese.

From tent to tent we went, and each time we showed ourselves a sniper's bullets went, Spat! Still no sign of Guy Stone. I had searched the last tent without success, and turned to go, heart-broken.

Scottie was sniffing at a heap of rags. He wouldn't budge away, and continued pawing at the rags and howling to himself. I turned my flashlight on the litter, and there at the very bottom, more dead than alive, was Guy Stone.

Cutting his bonds, I shook him well to bring back circulation into his numb arms and legs. Then I helped him from tent to tent. Each time we showed ourselves, we were greeted with a regular fusillade of shots. The bandits, enraged at losing their captive were growing bolder and creeping closer. Jed rushed to meet us, and in a moment we lifted Guy into the plane. Boosting Scottie over into the cockpit, I followed the two brothers, and in another moment we were rushing down the field.

A group of bandits, headed by the Chief, broke from the cover of the woods, firing as they came. Realizing that they had been duped by our dragon, their rage knew no bounds. They planned to riddle our plane as we passed.

The storm which had held in check, now broke. Amid the crash of thunder, the rain came down in sheets. Then Jed turned loose his machine gun.

Stopping in their tracks, the bandits turned and made for the woods as fast as they could run.

"Give her the gas", said Stone. And I did. Whirr—bump - bump-bump. It wasn't the smoothest place in the world to take off, but we weren't spending much time picking and choosing that night.

Of the ground we went. Higher and higher. Soon we rattled far above the valley, and passed through the storm out into bright, clear moonlight. We were soaking wet, but happy. After midnight we landed in Shanghai. General Lu sent for us in haste. What had happened?

World's Greatest Air Routes

By the end of this year Great Britain will possess air services covering routes totalling 40,000 miles. These will link up almost every part of the Empire. We already have airways to Egypt, Persia, India, and South Africa, and recently the Indian route has been extended a further 5,800 miles by the service between Karachi and Port Darwin in Australia. Before the end of the year over 3,000 miles will have been added to the African air routes.

At the moment the United States is still a little ahead of us with air routes totalling 38,000 miles, but these are all services within the country. Britain's air routes are mainly external. No other country is extending its airways so quickly, and this wonderful expansion is due mainly to the work of pioneers like Sir Alan Cobham and Kingsford-Smith.

Before the end of the year we shall have outdistanced the United States in air-route mileage, and we shall then possess airways covering almost double the mileage of any other European country. France has less than 20,000 miles of airways, whilst Holland, whose colonies are to be found in all parts of the world, has only just over 12,000 miles.—London "Tit-Bits."

Chance

Unless 'twas purposely designed,
I think it very strange
That birds and beasts of every kind
Their habits never change,
That flowers so large or so small
may grow,
The trees fixed heights may reach,
And only man was given to know
The fellowship of speech.

If life is but an accident,
It seems a curious fact
That animals to all intent
Their kingdoms kept intact,
And that no other living thing
By chance was ever made
For weeping or for worshipping
Or following a trade.

If purposeless this life began
And out of nothing grew,
I think it strange that only man
Should lofty goals pursue.
For that same chance which gave us speech
And reason might have thrown These powers to creatures in its reach
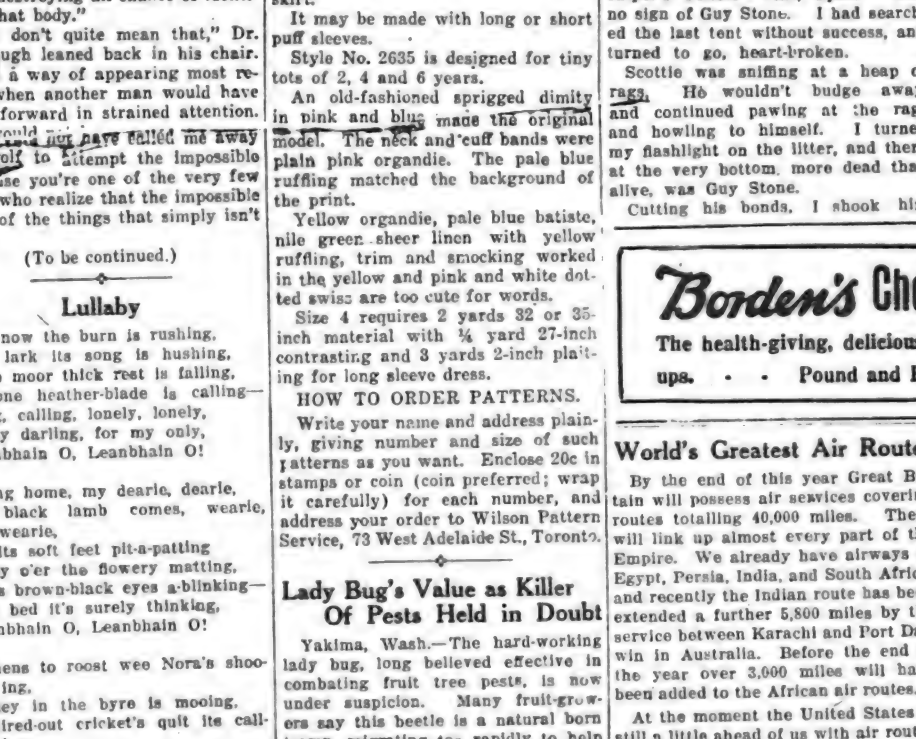
And not to man alone.



I know not how this world began,
Stars fixed and sun and tide,
Nor why some powers were given to man
Which were to beasts denied;
Nor why all birds and blossoms stay
Unchanged while men advance,
But I feel sure enough to say
It's not the work of chance.

Feeding and Caring For the Baby During the Hot Summer Months

The matter of clothing and food for very small babies during the summer months is a problem to many young mothers.

Babies should not have to suffer from the heat when the temperature suddenly rises just because they always wear woollen vests and woollen sweaters and woollen blankets and the mother is too timid and inexperienced to take them off.

They should be dressed according to daily and nightly temperature, not according to the time of year.

This does not mean that a sudden reduction of all their woollens should be made at one time, but certainly careful shedding could be done and the baby's amount of perspiration noticed, and clothing taken off or put on accordingly.

During the hot weather, a bath morning and night is desirable. If the day is very hot, a cool sponge in the middle of the day will help to keep the baby comfortable and sweet.

Feedings should, of course, be given with regularity. The baby's weight may not increase during the summer, and he may want a smaller amount at his feedings, but as long as he remains well and cheerful this need not be a cause for worry.

Babies become thirstier during hot weather just as adults do, and will take considerably more water than usual. Unsweetened boiled water, cooled, should be kept on hand for them at all times.

On hot days the baby should be kept in a shady spot and not be exposed to the sun excepting in the early morning and late afternoon.

On mild days, of course, he should have all the sunshine he can comfortably stand. Because sunshine has the life and health giving qualities that cannot be had from any other source.

Protect Baby From Flies

Insects carry disease germs as well as being a nuisance. The baby himself and his food should always be protected against flies, mosquitoes and other insects. His room should be screened, and when out-of-doors his carriage or crib should be covered with netting.

2,000,000 Hike in England

London.—Hikers in England now number more than 2,000,000, according to a recent estimate by J. E. Walsh, editor of "The Hiker and Camper." The steady increase in the number of hikers in seen by Walsh as a revolt against modern industrial conditions, the workers fleeing to the country during the week-end to escape the noise of the city. The popularty of hiking, it is said, also has brought a better understanding between the villager and the city worker.

The Gardener

Summers, she worked among her flower beds.
It always seemed to me
The lilies higher held their fragrant heads,
The roses bloomed in deeper pinks and reds,
From her sweet ministry.
The silken poppies flamed anew each day,
As if they tried to show
Their gratitude and silent thanks that way—
And, by such gracious blooming, to repay
This friend who loved them so.
Transplanted now to greener fields than ours,
She bides 'neath fairer skies,
Spending, I know, the happy, endless hours
Among the asphodels and fadeless flowers,
Gardening in Paradise!

Foreign Legion Gets .. Pick of Men Today

Marseilles, France.—The French Foreign Legion has been a beneficiary of the economic slump.

Not only have recruits been so numerous that the officers were able to pick and choose at will, but the standard has been the highest ever known.

Though the legion asks no questions which might embarrass the volunteer, it is believed that Germans, who once were most numerous in the ranks of the first two companies, have now been replaced by Anglo-Saxons.

China Saves Ancient Walls As Protection for Cities

Peiping.—The Chinese government has decided to maintain the ancient walls around its cities. The movement to destroy all walls, started two years ago, has been abruptly checked.

The Ministry of War and the Executive Yuan at Nanking, according to official information here, have instructed municipal authorities to maintain their walls and see that they are kept in repair.

Two years ago ardent young Nationalists contended that city walls interfered with progress and should be torn down. In several cities local Kuomintang branches started to destroy walls.

But military experts, studying the matter, decided that city walls still serve strategic purposes and should remain. They protect residents from bandits, and in case of war are effective barriers to an invading army.

At Tsinanfu, Shantung, and a few other cities, the tops of city walls are being used for highways. It is possible that other cities will follow this example. Walls are often wide enough to accommodate automobiles two or three abreast, and with little work can be made first-class thoroughfares.

5 Million in Greater Paris By New Census Figures

Paris.—The metropolitan region of Paris has nearly 5,000,000 inhabitants. Within the former fortifications there are 2,871,089 residents, and outside the fortfications there are 2,016,425, according to preliminary census figures. Greater Paris has increased by 600,000 during the last five years. Within the fortifications, however, there has been little increase.

New office buildings in the centre have changed the character of the business quarter, where privately occupied apartments on the upper floors are rapidly disappearing.

The rush to the suburbs will be checked, it is expected, by the large numbers of new apartment houses within the fortifications. Housing experts are beginning to fear a renewed crowding of the city proper and propose the centralization of specialized industries.

Library Issues First Editions

Simla, India.—Simla Public Library should delight the heart of the true book lover, writes a correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor, for here is surely one of the few public libraries that issues first editions of remarkably rare books to its readers in the ordinary course of events. a first edition of Thomas Hardy's "Far From the Madding Crowd," although it has suffered the ignominy of being rebound, its value being thereby lessened, is on the open shelves of the library, available to any reader. Other novelists, appearing in the two and three-volume format which characterized novel production in the Victorian era, are also represented, and a general glimpse reveals many a book of value. The volumes bear witness to an Indian experience, now past, when the first readers of these works doubtless viewed with particular interest the volumes which came from England "in the '70s," when British existence in India was more leisurely than today.

"An ideal is the great thing in life," says a writer. A square deal is usually better.

THE OLD FOLKS.

An old couple lived in a quaint simple little cottage on a quiet street alone. They had raised a fine Christian family who had all flown from the parental nest, and among them was one son now who had become wealthy, and he wanted to do something nice for his old parents back home.

It was decided to surprise them by building a modern home big enough for two, and it was to be a model of comfort. "Mother likes to do her own work, and Pa likes to tinker around, and we can't stop them," said the children. "But we'll make the work as easy as we can for them since they will not come to live with us."

All the children planned the house. What one did not think of, the others did, and the day came when it was all finished. Even the big wise old cat was brought over to make it look homey for the old couple before the big secret was disclosed.

"Why, mother, you will hardly need to do a thing with all those wonderful electric brownies to do your work," exclaimed one of the children.

In amazement the old couple looked at everything: the electric dish-washer, the washing machine, the oil furnace, the iron, the vacuum cleaner. It was all indeed very marvellous. Even puss padded around on an interested tour of inspection.

The family stayed to supper and washed the dishes miraculously in the new dish-washer. "You will only need to wash them once a day to make it worth while, Mother. Doesn't it work beautifully?" said the girls delightedly.

The oil furnace and the electric washer in the cellar and other appliances were carefully explained and tried, and soon mother and father were settled proudly in their new home, the gift of their son.

They were alone again; mother waited till after the evening meal to wash all the dishes of the accumulation. "I like to do them after each meal, but I guess it's alright," she thought.

Carefully she put in the dishes and when all was ready, turned on the water. "Surely something must be wrong to make such a noise," she said excitedly, for immediately there was a clatter and swishing very different from from the night before when the girls were there. Hastily turning off the water she opened the lid. There lay all the dishes, nearly every one broken.

"Oh, Pa, what have I done?" she cried.

Pa ran out and made a hasty examination.

"Well, now, look here, doesn't this go somewhere?"

And on the table was the rack she had forgotten to put in. With a sigh of regret the broken pieces were laid together, but they were gone past repair.

In the morning the washing was waiting to be done. This time Pa came too to get it started right. It was opened up and each part scrutinized. Puss, too, was even very interested. The wringer was fine, everything alright. But this time they were going to be sure and try it first for no repeats of last night's destruction were desired. Then the lid was pressed down and carefully the power turned on.

"Tha''s going alright, I think," said Pa, but soon a peculiar yowling sound came from the inside of the tub as the motor hummed.

"What's that noise?" They both listened, puzzled. "And it's getting worse." Then suddenly Pa said, "That don't sound like no machinery to me. Where's Samantha?"

Unaccustomed to the switch they as quickly as possible turned off the power and opened the lid. Yes, it was the cat. She jumped out, swayed back and forth, groggy from the experience, then, coming to life, she looked at them reproachfully and suddenly disappeared up the steps and out the back door.

The oil furnace, too, seemed to roar extra loud when the door was opened now since they were alone, its belching flame boisterous and sinister. "It'll burn the house down, turn it off, Pa."

That night the daughters ran over to see how things were progressing. "Wouldn't it be great to live in a house like that? It's the best thing John ever did. But when they came in and looked around all was still in the house with the vacant stillness of absence. "Wherever could they be?" they anxiously wondered. "Perhaps they just went for a walk and will soon be back."

It wasn't long before they saw the note tacked on the cupboard, and opening it quickly they read: "You'll find us back in our old cottage. I guess we are too old for all these new fangled ideas."

"Well, of all things. Why even the cat isn't here. Whatever could have happened?" Hurrying over to the cottage they laughed heartily when they saw father sitting in his old cracked rocker on the vine-covered verandah musingly smoking his old clay pipe while mother was in her big, bright, inconvenient but homey kitchen carefully washing the remaining dishes in the good old-fashioned way.

CHICKS AND OTHER LITTLE FURRY FRIENDS.

No. 30.

"At last we've found the kittens and aren't they be—autiful, Mamma," said Billy, just so glad he didn't know what to do. He gently stroked their little backs as they nestled in Mamma Lady's lap.

"Yes, they are worth all the trouble we had getting them," said Mamma Lady, as she fondled their extra thick fur, because they were Persian kittens. "I guess we'll take them downstairs and put them in their box now and we'll put the box where Rover can't get at it. Perhaps Fluffy won't mind then."

Gathering them carefully in her apron, Mamma Lady carried them downstairs. "Now open the door, dear, and let Fluffy up to see we have her kittens." Billy opened the door and Fluffy walked in. First thing she saw were her kittens on Mamma Lady's lap. Do you think she minded? No, she didn't care a bit. So that wasn't why she hid them. I even believe she was glad they found, for her bed wasn't very soft up there under the floor on the hard ceiling, was it?

All at once something rushed over, jumped on Mamma Lady's lap and actually grabbed a kitty and was off before anybody could say "Jack Robinson." They were all so surprised. And you can't imagine who it was, I know you can't. Well, it was Topsy, the barn cat.

You see she was in the house because she had no kitties. Perhaps you remember about her kitties and how the kitty left for her was run over by a car. And Mamma Lady let her in sometimes because she was so lonely. Well, when she heard those little baby kitties me-ooing she jumped down—remember that?—as quckly as anything, just said "meow" once, and grabbed one in her mouth and was out of the door and over to the barn. She looked so funny with the kitten in her mouth when she walked along so proudly, as she held it up so it wouldn't touch the ground.

Do you know which one she took? Well, it was Bobby Burns, and he held up his little legs so cute so they wouldn't drag on the ground, and he didn't say a word. Did you ever see a Mamma Kitty carry her baby? If you didn't you've missed something. Anyway, Mamma Lady smiled and said, "Let her have it. Good old Topsy, she'll be satisfied now."

The Son of the House

To my delight, I had found that I was the only guest of a small hotel, which stood on the shore of a Balearic island in a storied sea. The summer was past, the autumn was come; the propietario and his sister were relaxing their efforts at making many Spaniards happy. Excellent hosts as they were, they must now have concern that the "Americana" should be "contento" while she remained as their guest.

On the morning of an especially golden day, as I had breakfast on the terrace, I looked out from time to time to find the line of turquoise sea shining bright; or held my breath at sight of a small fishing boat tacking her way through a boisterous channel into thhe outer sea.

Then, early as it was, the propietario appeared to say "Buenos dias" with such buoyancy of tone and lightness of step that I imagined exciting events must be near; for although he could not explain in my language, there is an easy translation to be made by smiling eyes and poised gayety.

So it was that I noted the arrival of large hampers of food, especially of chickens, being brought in by smiling women. At lunch time, there were two waiters in the pantry instead of one, and a quiet stir pervaded the place. During the afternoon there were gay arrivals of relatives, making agreeable conversation in the lounge. One large senor spoke in the bass voice of the robust, overtoning that of the propietario, who was a little man and used a low, grave tone.

Though I knew that there was an occasion imminent, I did not guess its significance. But, fortunately, I dressed for dinner, with special care, appropriately perhaps, in a Spanish lace frock and high-heeled slippers. Coming down the stairway into the lounge, I found the family assembled, ceremoniously quiet, indulging only in low murmurs of talk.

In its midst I saw a tall, slender man young, handsome, dark, obviously Spanish, standing by the propietario, who bent his head well back to look into the youth's smiling eyes.

As they came toward me, such pride illumined the face of the older man that, before the ceremony of presentation was complete, I had comprehended that I saw before me the son of the house. His well-fitting tan uniform explained him as a Spanish soldier, returned from his year's training.

As he responded to the greeting of the Americana in excellent English, the admiration of the circle of relatives knew no bounds. Then, as I went along the gayly lighted dining room to my seat in the corner, I passed the flower-decked family table, the white-jacketed waiters standing by, entranced by the glory of their young master. I pulled out my own chair, quite unaided by the usually hovering waiter.

There was such affection in the atmosphere that, though apart from the group, I felt one with them. Catching the intonation, I rejoiced too as the son told some gay tale of soldiering, which was received with gusto. His father would glance from uncles to aunts, then back to the raconteur, eating his chicken on rice all the while with hearty appreciation.

This picture of one potential Spanish soldier is as vivid to me as are the beauty of his home land, and the circle of friends which made his home-coming memorable.—M. E. B., in "The Christian Science Monitor.

ISLINGTON

The marriage of Miss Erma Smeall, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell Smeall, to Mr. Russell Crisp of Lambton, was solemnized in Bovar Presbyterian Church, Toronto, by Rev. G. C. Lamont, B.A. Miss Smeall has been a valuable teacher in the Presbyterian Sunday School here for a number of years. Her services were appreciated by the officers and teachers of the Sunday School presenting her with some handsome silverware.

Next Saturday the local lawn bowling club will hold their annual Irish trebles tournament, commencing at 1 o'clock, and at two-thirty the Harry McGee Trophy, last year won by Kew Beach, will again be competed for.

The "Glorious Twelfth" was right royally celebrated last Saturday on the eleventh by the Islington Lodges No. 2489 and the L.O.B.A. No. 650, when they went by chartered T.T.C. bus to Orangeville. Worshipful Master Stewart Mercer along with Past Masters Forbes, Hill, Webb, Mercer, Mark, Yeo and Beamish, with Past Mistresses Mathieson, Magee, Forbes and McKenzie helped to comprise the jolly bus load of forty. The ladies, in their gay uniforms of orange and white with bangets and parasols of the same color, had no difficulty in capturing first prize for best marching and best dressed L.O.B.A. lodge. Then they were handed out first prize for ladies lodge coming the greatest distance. Bro. J. H. Beamish, who is a P.M. of Streetsville L.O.L., sprinted fast enough to get second prize in the Past Masters' race.

Rev. Mr. Smith, late of Collingwood, is getting nicely settled as the new pastor of Islington United Church, succeeding Rev. Mr. Joseph, who went to Parry Sound. Mr. Smith is already making a good impression and we welcome him to our thriving village—Toronto's greatest suburb.

SMITH—McTAVISH REUNION

The home of Mr. and Mrs. D. M. McMillan, Rockside, Ont., was the scene of a happy family reunion, when descendants of John Smith and Barbara McTavish met to honor their memories. John Smith, with his bride, came to this country from Campbellton, Argyllshire, Scotland, one hundred years ago, crossing the ocean in a sailing vessel which took six weeks to cross. They first settled in this village (Streetsville) and after a short residence, moved to the 6th Concession, Chinguacousy, where they spent the remainder of their lives. About eighty attended the reunion from Barrie, Grand Valley, Fergus, Guelph, Brampton, Toronto and Hamilton.

HEALTH FOR ADULTS

In selecting food, adults are guided largely by their tastes. It is therefore a matter of considerable importance that they have tastes which will lead them to select the foods required to maintain the body in a state of physical fitness.

We eat because we are hungry, or because the meal-hour has arrived and we say it is time to eat. We can satisfy hunger with almost any kind of food. The use of proper food, however does much more than satisfy hunger.

Proper food satisfies hunger and, at the same time, it provides the materials which the body require in order that its machinery may function smoothly and efficiently. Proper food also provides the requisite materials for growth and for repair of the tissues, and to generate the energy needed for every movement of the body.

An eminent authority on nutrition tells us that one very practical way to preserve the youthful appearance is by using the protective foods—milk, fruits and green vegetables—freely in the diet. In general it is true that the person who does not eat the proper food will show the ill effects of his deficient diet in what are outwardly the signs of age.

A great many adults who give considerable attention to the proper feeding of their children are very careless about the selection of their own food. They apparently think that it does not matter what an adult eats. Many a clever business woman is likely to throw away her health and chances of success because she is grossly careless concerning her meals and other matters of personal hygiene.

The adult diet should include one pint of milk a day, taken as a beverage or added to various foods; one green leafy vegetable and one cooked vegetable besides potatoes; some raw or dried fruit; one egg, or meat, or fish; cereal, or bread and butter.

If the normal adult will make this the basis of his diet, it allows for great variety, which is desirable. Otherwise, the diet becomes monotonous and some essential elements are apt to be missed. There is no reason why a person should not eat and enjoy the foods he prefers, providing they are not being used to excess and to the exclusion of other necessary foods.

The general tendency of adults is to eat too much meat, sugar and starch, and too few fruits and green vegetables and to use too little milk. This tendency can be overcome by using milk more often as a beverage instead of tea or coffee, by eating more salads and by using fruit desserts instead of pastry.

The amount of food required depends upon the activities of the individual. By being weighed occasionally, each person can keep a check on his weight. The weight of the normal person can be controlled by increasing or decreasing the amount of food consumed.

How to Take Part and Win

The Government of Canada will take the census in June of this year. Every ten years the government takes this census to determine the population of the Dominion. In June Government representatives will set to work to cover every section and make a count of the number of people resident in Canada. Government statisticians will then determine just what is Canada's population.

Canada has grown rapidly since the last census in 1921. Just to what extent her population has increased is the problem of this contest.

The splendid cash awards shown on this page go to those who can most closely estimate what the Government will find our 1931 population in Canada to be.

What an opportunity for earning a marvellous cash prize with little or no effort. Be sure to take part.

THE CARE OF THE SKIN

The skin is not merely a covering for the body; it is an important organ of secretion. It is in the skin that the sweat glands are located. It is chiefly through the pouring out of the secretions of these glands on the surface of the body, with subsequent evaporation, that the temperature of the body is controlled.

It is in the skin that we find the nerve endings which give us the sensations of heat, cold, touch and pain. It is the skin, when it is in a normal, healthy condition, which acts as a barrier to prevent disease germs from gaining entrance to those parts of the body which lie under the skin.

The above remarks are sufficient to show that the skin is something more than a mere covering. As one of the important organs of the body, it is linked up with all the other organs and systems. It is for this reason that the skin, because it is not a thing apart from the rest of the body, reflects the state of the whole body.

It should be clearly understood that is is not possible to have a healthy skin unless the body is healthy. It is this simple truth which is so commonly overlooked or forgotten by those who are worried about their complexions or about skin blemishes.

The person who wishes to have a good clear complexion must observe the laws of health. No amount of external applications or number of treatments will overcome the effects of impreper food, lack of rest and exercise, insufficient fresh air, or disregard of the other simple needs of the body.

The skin of the face is the same as that of the body. It is more exposed and so it becomes more dirty than the rest of the body. The skin of the face should be kept clean by the use of soap and water, just as the skin of the body is kept clean by that means. Grease does not take the place of soap and water.

Every part of the body is nourished by the food which we eat. After it has been digested, it is carried in the blood stream to every part of the body, including the skin, so that the skin is fed by the food which enters the stomach. This is the only way in which the skin can be nourished. In winter, some bland grease may be applied to a skin which is very dry in order to supply it with the fat needed to keep it soft and pliable. There is no such thing as a skin food; the skin cannot be fed by means of local applications. Local applications can, as we have stated, soften the skin, but the skin cannot absorb and digest food for its own use.

Keep your skin clean by regular washing with a bland soap and water. Keep your skin healthy and your complexion clear by eating a well-balanced diet, getting sufficient sleep, and by taking exercise out of doors in the fresh air and sunlight.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Thousand People St. Andrew's G. P.

The St. Andrew's Presbyterian Garden Party held on the Church grounds July 18th, was a wonderful success.

For years the church had been giving such high class entertainment at their annual Garden parties that the committee were anxious to give as good, and if possible, one better than ever. Arthur Adamson, one of the active workers on the committee had charge of the advertising part, and he knew the artists that were engaged could deliver the goods to satisfy everyone out for a nights enjoyment.

Then Arthur scattered dodgers for many miles around
About this Garden Party on
St. Andrews ground,
And the joyful tidings by many had been found
Then they came to this monster Garden Party.

Saturday morning the weather was in a disagreeable shape. It was hot, it was cloudy, it was raining, but some times a cloudy morning often brings a pleasant day. Then why did you doubt, Oh ye of little faith. For behind the clouds the sun was shining alll the time, and came out in all its glory, then the weather was perfect for the afternoon and night.

Then didn't they come, about one thousand old and young came for pleasure and profit and went away satisfied.

From 6 to 8 Weston's Silver Band gave a delightful musical programme, many of the old Darky melodies being in their numbers and are always appreciated in any audience.

Excellent music, was given by the National Harmonic Band. Duncan Cowan, Canada's premier entertainer, divided his contribution equally between the English Irish and Scotch, and he certainly satisfied them all. Miss Margaret Clemens was pianist and accompanist. The Blue Bell Quartette were well received and always recalled, Billie Ramage entertainer impersonating Harry Lauder, was all Scotch and why wouldn't he be for wasn't it Gaelic language that our first parents spake in the Garden of Eden, and it was of endearment Adam's first words to Eve were. Therfore when Billy started to sing "Roaming in the Gloaming with A Lassie by my Side," it was the old song always new and although the Scotch are always singing about a lassie by their side, we saw a great number at the Garden Party, who weren't Scotch, were just as pleased to have a lassie by their side as any Scotchman ever was.

Doreen Hughes National Classic dancer,delighted the younger part of the audience and the older ones two.

Will Charlton and his Hawaiian Orchestra were repeatedly recalled.

The tables on the Manse lawn adjoining the Church, were beautifully decorated, and the ladies were kept constantly busy serving tea and coffee, and every kind of refreshment to suit the tastes of everyone, was there in abundance, and was thorougly enjoyed. All the booths were well patronized the supply not being equal to the demand.

It was such a glorious sight,
To see so many come that night,
There was no sign of pain or care,
For all were rejoicing everywhere.
It would seem strange if you would ask
Why waiters rejoiced so in their task
But this I know and so do you
We would not change it if we knew.

FOSTER—CORNER

FAMILY RE-UNION

The annual reunion of descendants of John Foster and Hannah Corner was held on Saturday at Stanley Park, Erin, with about one hundred present, including members of the clan from Honeywood, Toronto, Galt, Brampton, St. Marys and Shelburne. John Foster was born in Yorkshire, England, and came to Canada with his wife in 1806, first settling at Quebec. They later moved to Markham and then to Summerville. Their family numbered five sons, Ralph, John, William, Robert and Joseph, and three daughters, Mrs. Robert Copeland (Elizabeth), Mrs. William Cook (Jane), and Mrs. Mary Chesters, Streetsville, the latter being the surviving member of the family, and the guest of honor at the reunion. Mrs. Joseph Foster, Brampton, was the oldest person there, being in her 86th year. Her sister-in-law, Mrs. Chesters, is six months her junior. Softball, swimming, and a program of sports occupied the day, while a dance was held in the pavilion in the evening. The following officers were elected: President, George Foster, Honeywood; Vice-President, Miss Leitha Foster, Shelburne; Secretary-Treasurer, W. J. Foster, Brampton; Sports Committee, Colonel R. V. Conover, Brampton; Bert Chesters, Streetsville; Dr. and Mrs. E. E. Foster, Galt; Entertainment Committee, Charles Tuppling and John McAllister, Honeywood. The next reunion will be held on the second Saturday in July at Stanley Park.

AN OLD TYME BARN RAISING

On Wednesday afternoon, July 15, the farmers of the district raised the barn of Mr. W. E. W. Steen. Between thirty-five and forty farmers gathered to aid in the raising of the heavy beams. Mr. Steen did not get the modern block and tackle because he wanted to show the younger generation what an old-time raising was really like. Most of the large barns in this section which were built twenty years ago were raised by a crowd of men which devided into two groups and staged a race to see which group was the quickest and most accurate in getting the plates in place. Some of the younger sect did not even know what pike poles were used for but when it came to a race, the youths were far ahead of the older men in speed. One side was led by Omar Turney and George Bonham, the leaders of the other side being Alfred McCracken and Bill Maxwell. The two sides of the barn went up almost at the same time until the last plates were being placed. The younger boys then began to work quickly and very soon cheers rent the air which indicated the completion of their share of the task. The hungry men were served to a bounteous meal on the lawn. The women of the district assisted Mrs. Steen in preparing the repast. William Kitchen, of Nelson, has the contract to complete the building of the barn.

ERINDALE

A very successful euchre was held on Wednesday evening at the home of Capt. J. E. C. and Mrs. Hammond in aid of the Erindale Women's Institute. Seven tables were in play and all had a most enjoyable time. The prize winners were: Ladies' first, Mrs. Meigher; second, Mrs. MacPhee; third, Mrs. A. Beamish; gent's first, Mr. MacSporron; second, Jackie Blinco, and third, Charlie Sproule. Refreshments were served which closed a very pleasant evening.

OBITUARY

Leonard Greenwood

In the death at Christie Street Hospital of Leonard Greenwood, Regimental Number 249453, of the Fifty-eighth Battalion, there passed a distinguished soldier and one prominent in Masonic and banking circles. The late Mr. Greenwood had been a patient in Christie Street Hospital for some months and death was due to war injuries. He was in his forty-third year. He was late manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia at Norval, and Immediate Past Master of Credit Masonic Lodge, Georgetown.

During the late war, Mr. Greenwood suffered the amputation of his right arm, and was the first amputation case to be made Master of a Masonic Lodge. He was an active member of the Amputations' Association of the Great War, Toronto Branch. An Anglican in religion, he was lay reader in the Anglican Church at Norval. Highly respected by his military comrades, the keenest regret was expressed among the men of Christie Street Hospital when his death became known. Rev. Captain Sidney Lambert, Chaplain, paid a warm tribute to the sterling qualities of Mr. Greenwood.

It was only three weeks ago that the death of the late Kerbell Greenwood, father of Leonard Greenwood, occurred. Surviving Leonard Greenwood are his widow, formerly Miss Claudia Harper, and two children, of Norval; his mother, Mrs. Kerbell Greenwood, and three sisters, Miss Ethel R. Greenwood, R.N., of Toronto, Mrs. J. F. Nren of Saskatoon, and Mrs. Norman D. Boadway of Collingwood, Ont.

The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon at Norval, under Masonic auspices, and interment was made in Prospect Cemetery, Toronto.

Marion Joy Treanor

Mr. and Mrs. Martin Treanor, R.R. 1, Meadowvale, have the sympathy of a large circle of friends in the passing of their eldest daughter, Marion Joy, at the Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto, last Sunday, in her fifth year.

The funeral took place on Wednesday afternoon. Service was conducted at the home by Rev. W. T. McCree, and interment took place in Streetsville Cemetery.

Prof. James Workman, wife and daughter, of Toronto, paid a flying visit to Streetsville Tuesday evening. James remembers quite a few of the residents although he has been absent for 25 years.

Mr. T. H. Goodison had a pleasant trip through Western Ontario last week. He was at London, Sarnia, Strathroy, and other places, and also attended the annual communication of the Masonic Grand Lodge at Windsor.

David McNelley, employed by Arthur Ruddell on a farm at Ashgrove, was drowned in the Credit River at Norval on Sunday afternoon. He had come out from Ireland only three months ago, and was in his 20th year.

On Sunday morning a quartette, consisting of Mr. A. C. McArthur, Mr. C.P. McArthur and Mrs. McArthur and Miss McArthur, sang very beautifully and effectively, "Softly and Tenderly Jesus is Calling," before a large congregation in the United Church at the morning service.

Inquiry into crop conditions in Peel County following the favourable rains of the past week show that the county is expecting a bumper harvest. Everywhere in the five townships farmers are smiling over the crop prospect and stating that if prices were the same as three years ago everyone would be putting money in the bank this fall.

This week will be the last of our big Census Contest. Many have taken advantage of our big offer for The Review and the Family Herald and Weekly Star, so they may have a chance to win some of the big prizes. There is still time to get in on it, and the first prize of $5.000 may come to you.

The contest positively closes on July 31st.

Mr. A. C. McArthur and Miss McArthur, father and sister of Mr. C. P. McArthur, principal of our High School, were visitors over the week-end.

ORANGEMEN PARADE

Last Sunday evening members of Union L.O.L., Streetsville and visitors paraded from the lodgeroom, headed by the O.Y.B. fife and drum band, to St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, for their annual service. They were welcomed to the church by the Pastor, Rev. W. T. McCree, M.A., who preached a splendid sermon from Psalm 119: 105: "Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path."

Master Allan Sawyer, boy soprano, of Toronto, favoured with two well-rendered solos, and assisted the choir.

The Church was nicely decorated for the occasion.

Upon returning to the lodgeroom, a vote of appreciation of the services of the minister, the choir, and the floral committee, was passed and the secretary instructed to forward a copy of the same.

Short speeches were made by members and visitors. The lodge has added several new members this year.

DIXIE

George Stubbs passed away in his 21st year from a heart condition which became serious four weeks ago. He was born at Mimico, coming to the Dixie district with his father, Geo. Stubbs, several years ago. He was a member of St. Patrick's Church. His parents and one brother, Charles, Dixie, survive.

BRITISH IMMIGRANT BOYS MAKE GOOD

So much has been published in papers in recent months amout Immigrants who had fallen on evil days and had to be deported that it is a pleasant contrast to read of the success that has attended one Organization's Boy Placement. This organization is the Hostel, Norval, Ontario. The Hostel has been placing British boys on farms in Central and Western Ontario since May, 1928 and has during that time placed 1175 boys. While there are no new comers being placed now a number of good boys are available from day to day throughout the year at the time their yearly contracts end.

That the type of boy handled is very high is proved by two facts—one that the Hostel has never had to hold a boy more than twenty-four hours before securing another farm job for him—and second that no boy has ever been deported or returned to Great Britain because of lack of farm work.

It is also interesting to note that the Hostel holds Trust Accounts for these boys with a total of $33,064.74 on deposit. 60-70 have recently joined the Church, two are Superintendents of Sunday Schools; 25-30 are Sunday School Teachers, 2 organized and conduct Church Choirs; four are looking forward to the Ministry, 5 enter the Ontario Agricultural College this Fall.

The Hostel Boys' Second Annual Reunion takes place at the Hostel, Norval, Ontario, on Friday, July 31st, 1931. Agricultural, music, athletic and Aquatic contests have been planned. Anyone interested is cordially invited to be present.

Lightning, Heat and Motors Take Toll of Ten Lives

Barnadette Gagner, 9, Dover Township; in Thames River.

Killed by Lightning

Robert Osborne, 12, Toronto.

Ten lives were forfeited in Ontario for the week-end's pleasure-seeking.

Two nine-year-old girls and two men were drowned while bathing; another man was found dead in the Thames River, presumably from drowning.

Two persons, including a well-known border business executive, Albert Jones, of Walkerville, were the victims of motor traffic.

Two elderly Peterboro men, cutting their lawn grass on nearby streets, were almost simultaneously killed by seizures brought on by the heat, and a Toronto boy was killed by a lightning bolt at the Rouge Hills.

Among the scores of injured were Mr. Justice D. A. McDonald of the British Columbia Bench, whose home is in Vancouver. He was hurt in a highway accident in the London district.

Little Girl Perishes

Windsor.—Lucy Gorski, aged nine, drowned while bathing in the Detroit River Sunday. Two other children in the water with her had narrow escapes from death.

The children were wading when two of them got over the channel bank into deep water. Lucy was drowned, but Anna Ostaff, aged 12, of Detroit, was saved by Jack Ballemore, aged 19, of Detroit, who plunged to her rescue and succeeded in keeping her afloat until a boat came to his assistance. Jenny Happy, aged nine, of East Windsor, also got to the edge of the channel bank, but was able to swim back to safety.

L. Gorski, brother of the drowned girl, was also rescued. He was picked up by a Mr. Boyden while the boat was being hurried to the assistance of the Ostaff girl. The names of the swimmers who took part in the rescues were not obtainable by the police.

The body was recovered after 40 minutes' search. All efforts at resuscitation failed.

The drowning was the third to occur in the Detroit River in 48 hours. Two Detroit sisters, Margaret and Isabel Laird, lost their lives when they went in swimming on Friday.

Executive is Victim

Windsor.—Albert Jones, 65, general superintendent of the Canadian Bridge Company, Walkerville, was almost instantly killed on Saturday evening when he was struck by an automobile.

According to police records, Jones stepped from between two cars parked on Wyandotte Street, near Victoria Road, Walkerville, into the path of an auto driven by David Wilson of Windsor.

Mr. Jones has been associated with the Canadian Bridge Company for 20 years, and for 20 years prior to that was associated with the United States Steel Corporation at plants in the United States. He is survived by his wife and one daughter.

The body was taken to Youngstown, Ohio, for interment. His father and mother are buried there.

An inquest ordered by Coroner Dr. Hassard will be opened in Walkerville police headquarters.

Two Die in Heat Spell

Peterboro.—The heat was primarily responsible for the sudden death here at noon Saturday of two elderly residents, under almost similar circumstances.

William Payne, 71 years old, collapsed while cutting his lawn and died within a few minutes from a heart attack, aggravated by the heat. Deceased came to Peterboro 15 years ago from Warsaw, where a brother and sister reside.

Almost at the same moment Michael Neary took a weak spell while cutting grass, and went home to collapse and died in a few moments. Mr. Neary, who is survived by his widow and one brother, Martin, in Detroit, had been employed at the White House and was at one time an employee of the Old Oriental Hotel.

Cigarette is Blamed

Oshawa.—A. C. Miville, of Oakcrest Avenue, Toronto, received severe cuts and bruises, and narrowly escaped more serious injury, when his car skidded into the ditch on the highway between Oshawa and Bowmanville Sunday. Miville was in the act of lighting a cigarette when his car skidded. He was rushed to the Bowmanville Hospital.

Irish Lad Drowns

Norval.—Unable to swim, David McNeeley, aged 29, an Irish youth employed on the farm of Arthur Ruddell, Ashgrove, was drowned in the Credit River shortly after five o'clock Sunday when he got beyond his depth below the mill stream, where the water is possibly 25 feet deep. His body was only recovered after four hours' search.

Many were swimming around when the youth went under, but as he got into a dangerous whirlpool efforts to save him were unsuccessful. Traffic Constable T. Owens, of Brampton, brought Sid Kidner, a noted Brampton swimmer, to the scene, but he was unable to locate the body after many attempts. Finally some drag nets were secured.

Dr. J. McColl decided an inquest was unnecessary. The youth had been in Canada 14 months. He was born in County Armagh, reland. He has been working for Mr. Ruddell for four months. An aunt lives on Humber Street, Toronto.

Dive From Boat Fatal

Chatham. — Barnadette, the nine-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Zacharie Gagner of the River Road, Dover Township, lost her life on Saturday evening while bathing in the Thames River three miles below the city limits.

The girl and her cousin Julia were playing on a row boat. Julia, who was able to swim a little, dived off the boat and struck for shore. Barnadette, thinking the water shallow, is said to have jumped in after her and to have gone into a deep hole.

The body was recovered about three-quarters of an hour later by Charles Buck of Paincourt and Trule Gagner, the girls' uncle, and two of his hired men. Dr. J. F. Reid pronounced life extinct, and no inquest is to be held.

One Drowned; One Paralyzed

Windsor.—When William Marquet, of Detroit, went in swimming at Cedar Island, near Kingsville, late Sunday he dived in shallow water. He is in Hotel Dieu Hospital paralyzed from the waist down, and it is feared he has a fractured spine. An X-ray is being taken to ascertain the injuries.

Augustine F. Zulaica, employed on a farm near Harrow, was drowned when he stepped into a hole in the bottom of Lake Erie at John Bruner Beach. He was unable to swim. The body was recovered in about an hour.

Brothers Lose Lives

Hawkesbury.—Two Montreal brothers, aged about 14 and 15, were drowned Sunday afternoon at Point Fortune, Que., according to word reaching here. Their names are unknown. The bodies have not yet been recovered.

Skull Fractured

Windsor.—Four-year-old Elvin Lachance, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Lachance of Riverside, is at death's door in Metropolitan General Hospital suffering from a fractured skull. The lad and some playmates were playing when the little lad ran in front of an auto driven by Cecil Boyle, Riverside.

Heat Wave Again Strikes Mid-West

100-Degree Temperatures the Rule—Many Deaths and Prostrations

Chicago.—A heat wave fanned the middlewest with vapors so hot they might have come from a demoniacal oven the latter part of the week, to kill humans and livestock, ruin crops and bring suffering to millions.

Although temperatures of 100 degrees were the rule and not the exception, the Kansas City weather bureau reported that the hot weather could not be considered a heat wave. Thermometer readings of from 100 to 103 in the Kansas wheat fields were normal, said the weather forecast there. It was as hot in Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Wisconsin, South Dakota and Nebraska.

Deaths and prostrations, sun stroke and heat strokes occurred in widely-scattered localities. Ten died in the region surrounding St. Paul, Minn., six more in Chicago, others in Indiana, Iowa and the southwest.

A few showers merely turned to steam while farmers, unable for the most part to labor in the blazing sun, hoped for rain to save their wilting crops.

Motors Speed Chinese Funerals

Peiping.—Motor trucks have been enlisted to speed up Chinese funeral processions.

In the bustle of modern existence, Chinese had begun to feel they could not spare the two or three days sometimes necessary for old-style funeral processions to make their way from the city to distant country burial places.

A Great Thought

"Give me a great thought that I may quicken myself with it," was the language of Herder to his son during his last illness. How significant was that request! Surely the great thought which he needed was God. When the crisis comes, there is but one Person that will answer.

Freak Storm Flattens Crops

Horse, House, Rabbit Hit by Bolt—Dry Ditch Fills, With Minnows

Shelburne, Ont.—Accompanied by a miniature waterspout, a freak storm twisted its erratic way through Melancthon district, six miles north of here, late Saturday afternoon.

After flattening a field of oats on a farm owned by John Sanderson Jr., as though a giant steam-roller had passed over it, the waterspout with its dipping, whirling funnel cut across one corner of the property of John Knowles, blotting out a mammoth flower-bed as though some prehistoric beast had stepped upon it—and leaving other flower-beds and garden-truck almost intact. The deluge from the waterspout filled a formerly dry ditch with water—and there were many minnows in it, indicating that the waterspout had come down from Georgian Bay or had sucked up its flood from some nearer stream.

Several fields in the more remote vicinity were flooded; one horse and one huge jack-rabbit were killed when struck by lightning. Passing on, the storm damaged another farmhouse when lightning struck the telephone wires, entered the house through the phone-box, and set fire to the curtains at the living-room window. The blaze was extinguished with some difficulty.

At the height of the storm, at about 5 o'clock Saturday afternoon, daylight gave way to gloom so deep that lamps had to be lighted in all the farmhouses. Residents describe it as the worst storm in the last 10 years.

Easy Money

The two waiters were standing by the table over which the tired diner had fallen asleep.

"I've already wakened him twice," said the first waiter, "and I'm going to wake him a third time."

"Why don't you have him taken out?" suggested the second waiter.

The first waiter shook his head artfully.

"Nothing doing," he whispered. "Every time I wake him up he pays his bill."

WITH THE LONE SCOUTS

We are glad to notice that several Lonies have applied to attend Camp with Regular Troops who have arranged Scout Camps in different parts of the Province. We surely hope that they have a good time and thoroughly enjoy themselves.

Incidentally far more Regular Troops asked to have Lonies go to camp with them than we could accommodate, and that shows that we must be quite popular with our brothers in the "Regulars."

We are interested to note that our old friends at Sault Ste. Marie, who now have a Troop of their own, are camping at Root River with 35 Scouts and 5 Leaders under canvas.

Lone Scouts living in the Picton District should note that the Picton Fair is to be held on August 19th and 20th, and there is to be a special Boy Scout Handicraft Exhibition. What about putting in an entry, and have it recorded that a Lon Scout won a prize?

How many Lonies will visit the Canadian National Exhibition this year? It will be a special Scout year, as besides the usual parade to the Exhibition by the Scouts and Cubs of Toronto District, numbering something like 2000 Scouts, "Scout Day" will include a special "Grand Stand Display" by Scouts and Cubs, where you will be able to see exhibitions of Bridge Building, Pyramids, Signalling, Tent Pitching, Jungle Dances. Don't miss it! And also you may have the opportunity of meeting the Lone Scout Commissioner, your Scoutmaster and the mysterious "Lone E" who writes this column each week!

We notice that the Harriston Scouts are beginning to revive their activities. The Lonies there have had a pretty hard struggle for existence, but they are "keeping their end up" and we are looking forward to a revival of the old "Antelope Patrol."

Recently, we notice, 30 Scouts left England to attend the 20th Birthday Camp of the Czechoslovakian Scouts, at Prague. England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales were all represented, and we think that this is a splendid gesture of friendship to our foreign brothers, to join with them in their anniversary celebrations.

A large group of Toronto Scouts took part recently in a special "Canada Night" display in connection with the Lions Club Conference which was held at the Coliseum, Toronto.

Who would like to be the possessor of a Stalker's Badge?

First of all you must be a good photographer, and have a camera, and then you must be possessed of lots of patience, for the requirements of the Stalkers Badge are as follows:

"To take a series of ten photographs of ten different kinds of wild creatures (mammals, birds, reptiles or fish) from life, and be able to give particulars of their lives, habits and markings."

That does not sound so very hard, does it? But you really will have to exercise quite a lot of patience in order to obtain ten really good photographs which will pass the test.

This, too, is lots of fun, and those of you who have a camera would be well advised to get busy on this badge right now, in order that you may make the best use of the summer light.

Are you a Lone Scout? If you are between the ages of 12 and 18, and cannot become a member of a regular Scout Troop, we have room for you in the Lonies, if you are a keen, energetic boy.

Write for particulars to The Lone Scout Department, Boy Scouts Association, 330 Bay Street, Toronto, Ont.—"Lone E."

Alberta Faced By Water Shortage

50,000 Head of Live Stock in Southeastern Province Affected

Lethbridge, Alta. — Ranchers in south-eastern Alberta have asked the Provincial Government natural resources department to take steps to find a solution for a serious water shortage existing there. As a result of the dry weather of the present season, 50,000 head of livestock in the country east of Stirling and lying along the Lethbridge-Weyburn branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway are affected by the water shortage.

Ordinarily, the livestock in the southeastern ranges are supplied by water in Etzikom Coulee, 50 miles east of Stiring. This year the coulee and lakes are dry, while some of the flowing wells are also drying up. It appears certain that several thousand head of livestock will have to be moved from their home ranges owing to the acute situation.

It has been suggested to the provincial government that, as an unemployment relief project, a large reservoir south of Raymond at the head of Etzikom Coulee might be built to provide a permanent water supply, but difficulty in finding a supply of water to fill the reservoir nearer than the Foothills country to the west stands in the way of adopting this scheme. It is estimated that it would take $1,000,000 to provide a dependable supply of stock water to the southeastern Alberta ranges and ranchers are not sanguine that the Government can be prevailed upon to undertake such an expenditure.

Bluenose May Be Brought to Toronto

Lunenburg Schooner May be on Exhibit at C.N.E.

Halifax.—Exhibition of the famous Lunenburg fishing schooner, Bluenose, at the Canadian National Exhibition, Toronto, this Fall, is contemplated in negotiations which have been opened here with the owners of the vessel, R. W. E. Burnaby, Maritime trade commissioner, Toronto, announced recently.

Mr. Burnaby has asked A. E. Lepage president of the Maritime Provinces Association of Toronto, to see what arrangement can be made with the Exhibition directors for showing the champion of the North Atlantic fishing fleets at Toronto.

The Bluenose draws 16 feet in the ballast necessary for safe sailing. Some of the waterway through which she would have to pass in a voyage to Toronto is only 14 feet deep, but the schooner could be lightened sufficiently to enable her to negotiate the shallow passages by removing ballast at Montreal, Mr. Burnaby said.

Pyjamas Disturb El Paso

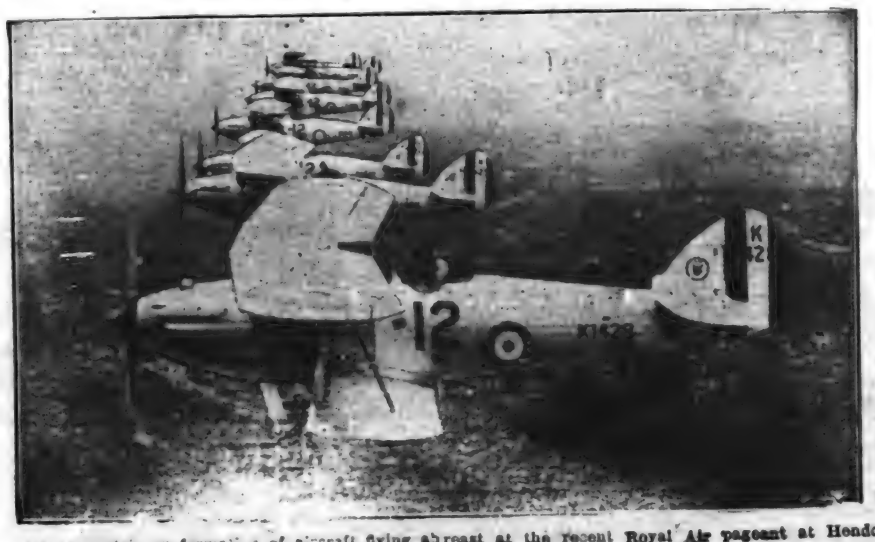
El Paso, Tex.—The pajama has taken the place of the short skirt as a disturbing influence here.

Nearly all day people call Mrs. Callie Fairley, El Paso policewoman, complaining that "indecently dressed girls and women" are "parading the streets." The complaints are usually found to involve the pajama fad. Mrs. Fairley will not prohibit pajamas for street wear, but has served notice she will undertake some degree of "regulation."

Alpine Climbing in Jasper Park

Jasper National Park, in Alberta, offers an almost bewildering choice to the alpine climber. Over seventy per cent. of the highest peaks in the Canadian Rockies are found either within its boundaries or can be easily reached with the town of Jasper as the starting point.

Geodetic Bench Marks



The standard precise level bench mark of the Geodetic Survey of Canada, Department of the Interior, prior to 1925, was a chisel mark on a three-quarter inch copper bolt cemented in the walls of substantial buildings, bed rock, and masonry structures of all kinds. Subsequently a bronze tablet three inches in diameter has been used instead of the older bolt.

Spring Song

By Eleanor Alletta Chaffee

I'm a fool, and well I know it,
To be walking stony streets,
When a dusty road is curving
Round a budding hill that meets
Cool spring sky with such a line
As is carved of new green grass,
When the winds of April stir them
Into movement as they pass.
I'm a fool, and well I know it;
And beside me, to [illegible] shame,
Walk ten thousand o[illegible]s like me—
Deaf and dumb and blind and lame!

Tell-Halaf Discloses a Forgotten People

Subarean Statues Found in Mesopotamia Reveal a Culture Believed to be 6,000 Years Old

Colossal statues and towering temple facades in a set-back formation reminiscent of skyscrapers, recently discovered in Mesopotamia, writes Diana Rice in the N.Y. Times, are said not only to be unique among archaeological discoveries but to open a new field of study for the scholar of antiques. According to Baron Max von Oppenheim, a noted German archaeologist and student of Subarean-Hittite culture, now in the United States to study recent discoveries made at Ur of the Chaldees, the artifacts of Tell-Halaf indicate a civilization older than any found in Mesopotamia.

Mesopotamian Discoveries

The archaeological discoveries were made in Upper Mesopotamia on the site of the ancient city of Tell-Halaf and now repose in the Baron's museum in Berlin, where they are now being studied by scholars. According to the Baron, Tell-Halaf thrived about 3500 B.C., and therefore the Subarean race which built it antedated the Sumerians at Ur. Baron von Oppenheim believes that his discoveries establish a new and hitherto unsuspected link between the Egyptian and Subarean civilizations, for "the Kings of Tell-Halaf sent four Princesses to Egypt, all of whom became Queens, one the aunt of Tut-ankh-Amen." He ascribes much of the culture formerly attributed to the Hittites to the Subareans.

"Tell-Halaf is slowly giving up its secrets," said Baron von Oppenheim. "For a long time we have been going to that part of the Mesopotamia desert where Tell-Halaf is situated and for a long time we have known there was important archaeological material there. As early as 1899 the mound was marked out for investigation but it was not until 1911 that we began to dig. We were interrupted by the war and did not sent another expedition until 1927, after Germany had joined the League of Nations. The result of our 1927-29 excavations have been astonishing.

"Tell-Halaf must have been a garden spot in the old days. It is the centre of a group of oases watered by hundreds of springs. Lying in the midst of a desert waste, it was an ideal site for a great city. Where could those old Subarean kings have found a more logical place to locate their capital, erect their enormous temples, and stone chambers for their gods? The city became the centre of a civilization that spread over other parts of the Near East. In the east there have been only three original and independent civilizations: the Egyptian, the old Babylonian or Sumerian, and the Subarean, whose centre was Tell-Halaf.

"The Subarean art, such as we found in the Tell-Halaf area, has heretofore been generally referred to as Hittite, because we knew only the more recent stone carvings which have been attributed to Hittite artists. But these Hittites are Indo-German intruders from the north to Asia Minor and Syria, who came only in the second millennium to this part of the world.

"Through my discoveries at Tell-Halaf it was apparent that the Subarean culture and art went back to the third millennium, possibly to 4,500 B.C."

Dating by Pottery

Baron von Oppenheim dates his discoveries by means of the painted pottery found below the Sumerian or Babylonian level.

"This painted pottery is much earlier than 3,500 B.C.," he continued. "It is contemporaneous with flint and other stone implements. The clay from which it was made was a light yellow. Black-brown dye was used in painting the designs. It is a dye that cannot be imitated. We have tried to imitate it in Germany, but have been unsuccessful. This dark brown shade was the original color, which has since taken on a reddish tint. There is no mistaking the prehistoric pottery which dates with accuracy the level where it is found. Mr. Woolley of the University of Pennsylvania found similar pottery at Ur in Lower Mesopotamia where he is excavating below the Sumerian stratum. Ur is a long distance from Tell-Halaf, and the Sumerian art found there is not the same as our art. The two are independent of each other."

It was not until 1911 that the first archaeological expedition discovered the site of Tell-Halaf; for there had been drama and secrecy about the buried city. Only because the Baron spoke fluent Arabic did he happen to hear a tale being whispered in the desert about the Bedouin who, digging a grave for his old father, came on a winged monster and other queer animals which he hastily covered up and fled. The next year came the plague and a pest of locusts, convincing the Bedouins that the winged monsters had sent the scourge. Only after much reconnoitering was the site of the deserted city disclosed. Superficial diggings at once uncovered an extensive area rich in sculptured images, set in what was later found to be a temple.

A Ninety-Foot Excavation

"Digging one foot down we began to discover interesting relics, but it was only after we had dug ninety feet that the great temple-palace stood revealed," said Baron von Oppenheim. "Around the walls of the temple on blocks of stone were carved in bold relief what might be called a historical procession of animals, birds, winged monsters, human figures, chosen as appropriate symbols by early Subarean sculptors to adorn their halls of state. One group displayed an animals' orchestra, a lion with a harp, a donkey singing, other animals dancing. There were hunting scenes, and battles royal between beasts of the forests, between birds, scorpions and griffins. Where did the artists get their designs and models? They were probably symbolical, some imaginative, others representing scenes in the every-day life of the times.

"Practically all the stone statuary was of basalt, a hard, dark, volcanic stone; most of it was remarkable for its gigantic dimensions. The three great gods, among the largest relics unearthed, were each twenty feet high. The first, known as lord of heaven and earth, rain and weather, stands by his side on the back of a lioness; and close beside them is their child, the son god with a lion beneath its feet."

Weather

The Winter was cold;
We shivered and shook,
Did nothing but scold.
The Winter was cold,
The wind was too bold,
We gave it the hook.
The Winter was cold,
We shivered and shook.

The Summer is hot;
We fume and we fuss,
And seek a cool spot.
The Summer is hot
And all that is not
Inviting to us.
The Summer is hot;
We fume and we fuss.

If Summer were cold,
And Winter were hot,
Would we be consoled?
If Summer were cold?
(The truth's better told!)
We'd still curse our lot—
If Summer were cold
And Winter were hot.

—Edward W. Barnard, N.Y. Times.

"Yes, it is very pretty, but I fear it isn't serviceable. I'm sure it will shrink when it is wet."

A man walked into his club mopping his brow and looking distinctly ruffled.

"By Jove," he panted, "I've just had a narrow squeak. I was almost run into by a beastly baby car."

"You weren't hurt?" asked a friend.

"Oh, no," said the alleged victim of the "near thing," "thanks to the fact that I happen to be bow-legged."

There is some reason to expect that in time Chicago will erect a monument to The Unknown Victim. Osculation knows no nationality. A kiss is something that tastes good in any language. Some people are as dumb as they look and others are dumber than they can possibly look. The reason a man can't find a policeman when he wants one is because the policeman is not looking for him.

How's Your Brain?

This is a trick — so don't say we didn't warn you. Read this sentence:

Federal fuses are the result of years of scientific study combined with the experience of years.

Now, count the F's in that sentence. Only once—don't go back and count them again.

At the bottom of this column you'll find the answer, and it will tell you something about how good your brain is.

She—"And will you love me as much as this when we are married?"

He—"How can you doubt me? You know I've always liked married women best."

The reason a man is not greeted with a kiss and a smile when he gets home in the evening is because his wife knows he is going to start right in messing up the house or kicking about the expenses.

'Taint what we have,
But what we give,
'Taint where we are,
But how we live;
'Taint what we do,
But how we do it—
That makes this life
Worth going through it.

There are six F's in the sentence you read in the paragraph above. An average intelligence recollects three of them. If you spotted four, you're above the average. If you got five, you can turn up your nose at most anybody. If you caught all six you're a genius, and a lot too good to be wasting your time on foolishness like this.

We rush like mad all the time and it may not pay. Nevertheless we have never seen man or woman who took their time to their tasks make a very big success of anything.

Castoria

made especially for

CHILDREN

CHILDREN usually hate to take medicine but every child loves the taste of Castoria. And mothers like its action—so gentle, yet so prompt and effective.

Castoria is a never-failing comfort to children and mothers alike because it was formulated expressly for children—to correct their little ills and upsets.

The beauty of it is you can give Castoria to children of all ages with equally sure results. When baby's cry warns of colic, a few drops of Castoria has him soothed; and free from pain, he is asleep again in a jiffy.

In an older child when coated tongue or bad breath tell of constipation, a more liberal dose is usually all that is needed to cleanse and regulate the bowels.

Your doctor will tell you Castoria deserves a place in the family medicine cabinet until your children are grown. He knows it is safe for the tiniest baby; effective for a child in his teens.

Two Bad Fires at Clarkson

$5000 FIRE AT CLARKSON

Fire suspected of being of incendiary origin did considerable damage Saturday to the Plaza Lodge, formerly the Chicory Inn, near Clarkson, with damage estimated at $5,000, with no covering insurance, it is stated.

The blaze originated in the west wing, which was used for sleeping rooms, none of which were occupied when the fire broke out. Joe Bush, the proprietor, was away at the time on a visit to Toronto. While the fire was in progress, it is reported, a quantity of silverware and about $100 cash contained in a drawer were taken. Employees and near-by residents saved a considerable quantity of furniture, which was carried on to the lawn, and the fire brigade from Port Credit, under Chief Newman, which was promptly on the scene, was assisted by firemen from Oakville, Bronte and New Toronto. Jack Cronk, a neighbor, barely escaped with his life when he was thrown from the top of a ladder when it snapped under the falling debris.

The firemen were obliged to pump water from a creek some 2,600 feet away from the building, and did this in relays. Although the fire started about 9 a.m., the brigades remained on the premises until late in the afternoon, fearing a possible second outbreak from the smouldering ruins.

The second mysterious fire within four days in the Lakeshore district at Clarkson broke out at a grocery store early Tuesday bringing the total destruction from fire up to nearly $30,000. The first fire was last Saturday at the Chicory Inn.

Roused from his sleep at an early hour to see the upper part of his store a mass of flames was the experience of J. Cobourn, proprietor of the Red and White grocery store on the Clarkson road. Hastily summoning his wife and four children, who were sleeping in closely adjoining rooms, they were taken to safety before the flames had a chance to spread and become dangerous.

Fire-fighters from Port Credit, Oakville and Bronte were summoned. They could find no means of connecting the hose unless they combined the three lines to Clarkson creek, nearly a mile away. They did this, laying down over 3,000 feet of hose along the road with a power of 400 gallons to the minute.

For some time it was feared that the flames would spread to adjoining buildings. Next to the store is a barber shop and adjoining that is the Royal Bank. Firemen concentrated on these structures until the danger was past.

In front of the store was a gasoline pump. Gas was desperately pumped out to prevent an explosion, which seemed imminent for a time.

Cause Unknown

Coburn could not explain the origin of the blaze.

"I wish I knew how it started," he said. "The first thing I heard was the crackling of flames on the roof. I got my wife and the kiddies out of the place and then phoned the fire department."

"How about insurance," he was asked. "It is only partly covered." Coburn had only recently rented the store from the Durie estate, he has been at Clarkson for three months.

Coburn estimated damage to stock was around $10,000, while E. Durie, who is trustee of the building, said it was a total loss, and that the damage would be approximately $15,000.

RECTOR GIVES GARDEN SUPPER

Upward of 40 members of the choir of St. Andrew's Anglican Church, Todmorden, accompanied by a number of Sunday school teachers, Monday night were the guests of their rector, Rev. (Capt.) Frank Vipond, who is spending his vacation at Streetsville, where he resided for many years following his return from the Great War. After a garden supper an adjournment was made to visit the Streetsville War Memorial, where wreaths were deposited by E. G. Davies and W. Mulholland on behalf of the parishioners of St. Andrew's.

Bringing the family Home

Tonight is the family re-union. It has been a weekly event ever since the young folk scattered to various towns, each to make his or her own way in the world.

It started when Dick left to work in a neighboring city. Dick was full of enthusiasm, but apt to be just a little bit wild. So Dad started the habit of calling him once a week just to keep him under the parental influence.

Then Helen was married and moved away, and mother must needs make weekly voice visits with her.

And now Betty has taken a position in another town. Her voice comes home each week too.

Dad and mother gather all the news and pass it on to the others. It keeps the family together — and the cost of the three evening calls is less than a dollar.

Evening rates on "Anyone" (station-to-station) calls begin at 7 p.m. (local time). Just give "Long Distance" the number you want — it speeds up the service. If you don't know the distant number, "Information" will look it up for you.

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS.

Don Ellsworth's wife, formerly the famous actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears, leaving no trace. Dr. Cavanaugh, the great criminal psychologist, learns that their married life has been very unhappy.

Peter Piper, a reporter on The Herald, tries to get an interview with Dr. Cavanaugh. Instead he meets Barbara Cavanaugh, the attractive daughter, and finds that she was engaged to Don Ellsworth before his marriage.

An unidentified body is found in the tule marsh outside the city. It has been burned by a fire in the marsh until it is entirely unrecognizable except for the fact that it is a woman. Dr. Cavanaugh is called in to help with the identification.

CHAPTER XI.

"You're right!" Camberwell swung the front legs of the swivel chair to the floor with a bang. "There's just one thing more—and it's beyond me." He pulled a bunch of keys from a baggy trousers pocket, flung his cigarette butt on the floor and automatically stamped it out, and reached down to unlock the drawer of a specially constructed fireproof cabinet that stood beside the desk. "What do you make of this?" he asked.

The object which Camberwell held out on the extended palm of his hand was a small flat jar of glass, with a tightly fitting screw top.

"Fire is always a freakish thing," he mused. "With the brush dry as tinder, as it is at this time of year, it was hot enough to burn nearly all the flesh off this woman's bones. Of course, if it was murder, and the fire was not accidental, there is the possibility that the body was drenched in some inflammable substance, first. Yet this one little scrap was left. A flame that veered in a puff of wind, a bit of earth less dry than the rest—we'll never know the how and why of it, but here it is."

Dr. Cavanaugh deliberately flattened the burning end of his cigar against the side of the ash tray before reaching for the jar. He was capable of rapid action when necessity arose, but he never hurried without reason. His only sign of eagerness was the agate-hardening of his brown eyes—a change of expression which Camberwell was quick to note and appreciate.

"I told you I didn't bring you here for nothing," he said. "You can bet one of those nickels with yourself that you'll find this interesting."

Dr. Cavanaugh gravely selected a nickel from a handful of loose change and laid it on the corner of the desk. Then he unscrewed the lid of the jar and walked to the light of the big window.

"Hm." His only immediate comment was a noncommittal hum, but when he returned to the desk after a somewhat prolonged scrutiny at the window, he pocketed the nickel.

"This goes to the elephant," he said. "But it was hardly a fair bet. I expected to lose. Your finds usually are interesting, you know.

"Yes," he added, "I can doubtless do something with this—not everything, but something."

"It'll be plenty," Camberwell assured him, "so long as you're really willing to take it up. You begin where I leave off, you know. It's too much for me."

"It's only a matter of physiology, which is in my line as a medical man. You started me on this track of investigatio in the first place, but it happens to fit in with my previous training. You have here," he tapped the lid of the jar lightly with a thumbnail—"an irregular patch of scalp about an inch in diameter, with perhaps half a dozen hairs clinging to it. And that hair not only belonged, of course, to only one person on earth, but from it we can describe that person, and even, if we have the basis of comparison, can identify its possessor as absolutely as if the one who placed her there had obligingly left for us a full set of her finger-prints. We are very ignorant, after all." Dr. Cavanagh turned the box idly in his hands and looked meditatively into the distance. "It has taken thousands of years for us to discover that the skin of the fingers, and the hair, and the markings on a discharged bullet are unique and individual. Perhaps in a few more thousands of years we shall know that of a million pebbles on the beach, each has marks of identification which makes it different from every other.

"That would make the keeping of our records even more complicated," Camberwell smiled. He rather hoped the reference to his own work would bring the doctor back to the matter in hand. But Dr. Cavanaugh's mellow voice rolled steadily on.

"Hegel, whom perhaps you have never read, called it the uniqueness of the real. A dime, for instance, he maintains, has what he termed 'an infinite number of distinguishing marks,' even though a million dimes were stamped with the same die and minted with the same machinery. We can never construct in our imagination any idea or image of a dime, or a hair, or a bullet which is as infinitely complex as the real object. Hegel is considered old-fashioned now but he would have agreed wholeheartedly with your new science of forensic ballistics."

An acute observer might have harbored the suspicion that Dr. Cavanaugh was drifting along the current of this irrevelent discourse with the surface of his mind, while his real attention was elsewhere. Under cover of these meanderings, he appeared to be gaining time for some hidden line of thought, reaching some inner decision. But Camberwell was not a psychologist. He twisted uneasily in his chair—with so much to be done, he was in no mood to listen to a lecture on philosophy!

Slight as it was, his impatient movement did not escape the dreamy, inattentive eyes of Dr. Cavanaugh. He shook off his absorption, and laid down his cigar, as if that small and definite act were the symbol of his decision.

"I'm as bad as Hamlet's grave digger. He'd never have been allowed to finish that soliloquy if one of you detectives had been present!" he said with the smile which revealed a surprising mobility of expression in the large, deeply chiseled features. "However, I promise not to waste any more time. I'll take this home with me, where I can take a squint at it under the microscope, and give you a report in the morning."

"You think you can identify it?" Camberwell asked eagerly.

"At least I'll narrow the range of possibilities." And Dr. Cavanaugh slipped the gruesome little box into his pocket as nonchalantly as if it had been a package of peppermints.

Camberwell's impatience, perhaps, would again have been severely tested if he had seen the psychologist, several hours later, placidly stretched on the chaise-longue and apparently concentrating on the production of the series of perfect smoke rings which floated ceilingward. No one would have suspected that recumbent figure of a preoccupation with crime.

Nevertheless Dr. Cavanaugh had spent a busy two hours, during which the Florentine desk appointments had been relegated to the floor, and their place taken by a sheet of glass. The desk, oddly out of keeping with the rest of the furnishings of the room, became a laboratory table where Dr. Cavanaugh, his big fingers moving with delicate precision, made a number of smears on a series of small strips of glass, protected each one with a cover-glass, and marked it with a red-bordered sticker, labeled in the doctor's neat, minute handwriting.

His face was impersonally calm and intent, as if the small objects which he manipulated with rapid expertness belonged to the routine of a class room experiment instead of holding a meaning heavy with life and death, and tragedy and crime. He sat almost motionless, hunched over the microscope, occasionally removing one slide to insert another, taking notes on the pad of paper under his hand without removing his eye from the lens. At last, with a faint sight he shut the microscope once again into its wooden case and restored the desk fittings to their accustomed places. Even the sheets of faintly pencilled notes were thrust casually into a drawer. Stretching himself comfortably on the chaise-longue, Dr. Cavanaugh devoted himself to watching the procession of smoke rings through drowsy, half shut eyes. To all appearances, body and mind were alike relaxed in the aimless revery that precedes sleep. But the air of somnolence which hung over the quiet room was illusory. Dr. Cavanaugh was thinking hard, slipping ideas and inferences into place as precisely as he had slipped the slides under the lens of the microscope. Suddenly he heaved himself up from the chaise-longue and moved to the telephone; then returned to his former position to await, with his usual quiescence, the ringing of the office door bell.

Fifteen minutes later the door banged open and Don Ellsworth rushed in before the doctor had time to put his feet to the floor preparatory to answering the single sharp announcement of the bell.

"You've found out something!" The momentum of his entrance carried Don half way across the room before he paused. The words were half a question, half an exclamation.

CHAPTER XII.

Dr. Cavanaugh motioned his visitor to a chair, disregarding the tempestuous manner of his entrance, and waited until Don had flung himself into it.

"I don't believe I said I had found anything," he corrected mildly.

"No; but I understood——"

"That there was some news in which you might be interested. As a matter of fact, it is impossible to say as yet whether even that really concerns you. However, on the fact of it, it seemed worth discussing."

"What is it you have found?" From Don's dry throat the words emerged as little more than a hoarse whisper.

"Not I; I've merely been asked to enquire into it a bit—and, as I told you, I am still in the dark. Have you read the evening papers?"

"I haven't looked at a paper for a week. I won't read the cursed things, with my name sticking out in headlines all over the place!"

"You have not heard, then, that a body, burned beyond recognition by the action of a grass fire, has been found on the slope of El Cerrito, above the marsh." Dr. Cavanaugh's voice was studiously conversational. He might have been mentioning nothing more important that the finding of a golf ball.

"I don't care who or what they've found," Don exploded, "So long as it isn't Sheila!"

Don twisted his hands nervously in his lap. There was the tension of long continued strain behind the irascibility in his voice. At first glance he looked noticeably thinner than on his previous visit; but a careful observer would have noted that the effect was due not so much to actual loss of weight as to the lines which gave his features a drawn look and to the dark smudges under his eyes.

The Rainbow's End

Light of foot and gay of heart,
He took the rainbow road
With empty pack while others bore
Ambition's heavy load.

He sought like them the pot of gold,
But ever on his way
He paused to hear the thrushes sing
A requiem for the day.

He lingered where hill vistas spread
New beauty to his sight;
He saw the great hills wear at dawn
Creation's holy light.

The Autumn's loveliness was his,
The Spring's ecstatic word;
The lyric phrase of bird and bee
His listening spirit heard.

He came belated to the place
Where down the hills descend
The eager feet that seek the gold
Hung at the rainbow's end.

They found no shining pot of gold
Who took the trail with him
And never knew his pack of dreams
Was laden to the brim!

Three Generations in Teaching Post

For 104 years—from 1821 to 1925—a teaching position at Southesmes (Meuse) France, was held successively by Nicholas Grandjean (1821 to 1867), his son, Prosper (1867 to 1899), and his grandson, Charles (1899 to 1925), according to L'Ecole et la Vie, a weekly review of education published in Paris. The item was quoted in School Life, official organ of the United States Office of Education, which said this was a record as far as it knows.

Self-Confidence

"She had a quiet confidence in being able to do whatever was needful for her to do. She leaned on her necessities instead of being broken by them," says a biographer, of a busy and useful life. The statement is worth more than a passing thought, for the necessities that confront most lives can either be allowed to become a crushing burden or turned into a staff that will aid on the journey or strengthen for higher climbing.

The Adventures of Captain Jimmy and his Dog Scottie

What came before: Captain Jimmy bargained with General Lu to fly him to Japan in exchange for help in fitting up his plane to rescue Lieut. Stone's brother Guy, from the bandits. He is about to start on his long trip across the Chinese Sea.

General Lu sent for us in haste. He wanted to start at once. He had sold out his position as General for a huge sum of money, which had just arrived, and he was anxious to be off before any of his officers found out and made him divide up his wealth.

The following night we bid Guy and Jed Stone, good-bye, and began our trip under cover of darkness. Six hundred miles or more across the Chinese Sea was no joke. Many bad storms and typhoons sweep the waters, and heavy sea fogs make flying dangerous.

Once off the ground I could see we were in for it. The air was just full of bumps, and General Lu and his faithful servant grew nervous. We tried a thousand feet higher up, and it was even worse. The plane tossed like a boat riding on a rough sea.

The sky gradually clouded up and the wind grew in volume. The darkness and fog seemed to crowd us down to the water. Long curling waves with sharp white crests made any chance of surviving impossible, should we be forced down.

Hour after hour we flew along, steering by the instruments. A cold wet drizzle blew right through our coats. I wrapped a blanket around Scottie, but the poor little chap still shivered. The past few days had been strenuous, and we were about fagged out. Most likely I dozed, for the next thing I knew I was being vigorously shaken. Scottie was barking furiously.

Right under our wheels the waves lapped angrily. I nosed the plane up. The gasoline swished around in nearly empty tanks. Flying against the wind had exhausted our supply. We might have enough for another fifty miles.

The dawn broke in a cold grey streak. I strained my eyes to see a large black object through the mist. Then a rocky headland emerged from the fog on our left.

Carefully I banked the plane and nosed her down as close to the rocks as I dared. It was a sheer precipice. At its foot the angry waves dashed themselves into white fury. Gradually the cliff descended within fifty feet of the water. Surely there must be a sand beach somewhere.

Imagine my despair when the cliff began to rise again and ended in a steep crag without a single inch of sandy beach. Soon we circled the island, and it was simply a tremendous volcanic rock with straight, high sides.

Suddenly we noticed a line of white breakers a mile or two away. The water seemed shallow. As a last chance I followed it—two miles, four miles, six—our gasoline was almost spent, when right below appeared the nicest sand beach you ever saw, sloping gradually up to a little island.

Like a great many beaches, this one looked much harder and smoother than it really was. With the motor cut out we hit, rolled a few feet in the soft sand, and then the plane went over on her nose. During all this time General Lu was splendid. Never a complaint. Never an argument; he sat quietly and calmly, waiting for what might happen.

Soon we kindled a roaring fire from driftwood, and dried ourselves out. To our surprise, General Lu began peeling off one suit after another, until he had taken off about six. Then I remembered that some of the Chinese had a way of putting their suits on in layers. General Lu could afford plenty of suits, so why not have them?

Meanwhile the question of food and water became pressing. We set out to search without delay.

A Good Settler

The motorist pulled up at a wayside garage for petrol, but he had to wait for some time while another customer was having his tires pumped up.

"Was that man a prominent figure in these parts?" asked the motorist when the other had departed. "You were very respectful and attentive to him."

The garage proprietor nodded his head.

"Yes, sir," he said; "he's one of the early settlers."

The motorist looked surprised.

"But he's still quite a young man," he returned.

"True enough," said the proprietor; "but he pays his bills the first of every month."

"Who were you waving at a few moments ago?"

"An old flame of mine."

"I suppose your father has to put him out whenever he calls."

Full Marks

"Why," asked the schoolmaster, "are the days longer in the summer than in the winter."

Timothy, to whom the question was put, had a ready answer.

"Because the sun shines longer," he replied.

"Yes, yes," the master returned. "But why does the sun shine longer?"

Without the slightest hesitation the boy replied:

"Because the night is so much shorter."

Work

The gospel of work does not save souls, but it saves peoples. It is not a Christian maxim only, that they who do not work should not eat; it is also in the end a law of Nature and of nations. Lazy races die or decay. Races that work, prosper on the earth. The British race, in all its greatest branches, is noted for its restless activity. Its life motto is Work! Work! Work! And its deepest contempt is reserved for those who will not thus exert themselves.— Dr. Stewart (of Lovedale.)

Spring Babies Are Brightest

"Lady Luck smiles on the children of spring."

Such is the conclusion of P. P. Blonsky, Russian psychologist, who compared the intelligence scores and birth months of a large number of Moscow school children. He found a significant difference in favor of those born in the three spring months. Those born in the winter were dullest, he said.

The children were all below normal and from poor homes. Blonsky explained the differen e as due to the fact that children born in the spring get more fresh air, and that milk is cheaper then, so that parents can afford to buy it.

The winter's children must spend their first months in a stuffy and often filthy environment. In summer the heat affects the children.

It appears, he concludes, that the environment in which a baby gets its start partly determines the mentality it will develop through life.

Blonsky's tests have just been repeated with a group of 2,925 children by Columbia University psychologists, as reported by Prof. Rudolph Pintner in the Journal of Applied Psychology, and a much smaller difference, considered insignificant, was found between children born in the warm and cold months.

I would as lief poison people as tell untruths about them.—Bishop Woodcock of Kentucky.

Husband Strength When Lost in Woods

Tenderfoot Rushes Around in Mad Circles Resulting in Exhaustion

An article in this month's American Forests discusses what to do when you get lost in the woods. No one who has ever had that experience is likely to forget it. If you keep your head, it is often alarming enough; if you lose it, the result may be terrifying and disastrous. A tenderfoot lost in the wilderness has symptoms as certain and sequential as those of measles or mumps. He sets out resolutely in what he thinks is the right direction. As the sun sinks lower he grows anxious and accelerates his pace. Soon he loses faith in his compass; thinks it simply cannot be right. Then pretty soon he begins to run:

The lost person sets a pace that no human body even in the best of health can long withstand. He climbs over fallen trees and rocks that might easily be walked around with less labor. He plunges through brush that only a little reflection on his part would lead him to avoid. He climbs hills and slides down valleys. He enters impassable swamps and in the tangled underbrush and windfalls falls he exacts his last ounce of energy.

Every summer this happens to hundreds of men and women. Sometimes a rescue party finds one of them almost dead of exhaustion and bereft of reason, with clothes torn to tatters by their swift passage through the brambles. Sometimes they are never found at all. But save in the more remote parts of the wilderness, or in Winter, there is rarely cause for alarm. Yet it is the alarm itself that too often proves fatal: the fear that grips the heart and makes the nerves tense and throws the brain into confusion. Far better for the hunter from the city, unfamiliar with the woods, to stay still and let his companions find him. Even if he is alone, the first thing he should do is to sit down quietly and think things out.

The woodsman knows plenty of tricks to aid him in such an emergency. If he has no compass, he can tell the direction by his watch. If the sun is overcast, moss on the trees may help to guide him. Or he can line up trees and keep going in one direction, so as to avoid the swinging circles which are the curse of bewilderment. But if he is an old-timer he can often rely safely enough on his own sense of direction, even without a compass. How deeply that may be ingrained in man, as it is in birds and beasts and eels, may be left to the biologist. But certain it is that a man who has lived long in the woods acquires something that at least serves him as a substitute for instinct—a feeling for contours, the unconscious recording of slopes and hills and valleys and watercourses comprised in the more familiar "lay of the land."

A forest runner takes that for granted; he is often amazed at the utter lack of this sixth sense shown by the city-dweller, to whom Thoreau's delight in confluence is inexplicable. But the author of the article referred to, Fritz Skagway, is concerned not so much with these subtleties as with practical advice. Take it easy. Husband your strength. Trust your compass. Walk down hill. Cleave to the watercourses, which always lead eventually to civilization. If one is without matches but has a rifle or shotgun, Mr. Skagway says, it is possible to start a fire in the following manner:

Pull the lead out of a cartridge or the wad from a shotgun shell and stuff in its place some dry bits of cotton from a handkerchief. Find a dry, partially rotten stump, then stand so the end of the firearm is about three from it and fire. Have ready a piece of fine, shredded bark, a bit of resinous pine, or some twigs. The cotton will burn slowly and the rest is easy.

Leipzig Fair Held Shince 1171

Leipzig.—Trade fairs of some sort have been held in Leipzig since 1171, according to ancient documents discovered here. The World Fair, which opens August 30, will be the 760th session of the famous exchange, rendering it by far the oldest fair in the world.

Silent Glider Flies Successfully 'Over Berlin

Berlin.—There was a time when people used to rush out onto their balconies, lean out of their windows and crane their necks in the street to watch an airplane go by. To-day, writes a correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor, many set their watches when they hear one of the daily air-traffic planes pass over their homes, with such regularity do airplanes fly over great cities nowadays. It was, therefore, somewhat astonishing to see a group of people at a busy street corner in Berlin staring up into the sky watching with intense interest a small monoplane. Looking a little closer, one discovered that the slender wings of this aircraft were almost transparent. There was nothing of the massiveness of the ordinary air-traffic plane about them. And, before one knew it, one had become an interested observer. For this was not the plane to Munich, or London, or Copenhagen, but an engineless plane, a modern sensitive glider or "sail plane," as the Germans call it. One recalled that Otto Fuchs, a well-known German glider pilot, was carrying out experimental flights over Berlin by invitation of the Aero Club of Germany, testing "sail-flying" conditions over the German capital. The characteristic feature of this kind of flying is its noiselessness. It is so noiseless, in fact, that a passenger could read aloud to the pilot, it is said, and it often happens that "sail fliers" converse with people down on the ground. So this plane with its shimmering wings flew silently over the government quarters of Berlin. Such flights are a further proof of the possibility of engineless flying over flat country and over towns. In a city, the wind, banking against high buildings, produces vertical air currents. So does the warmth steaming up from homes and factories. Thus the pots and frying pans of the noonday meal help to keep the silent glider in the air.

Minor Wood Products Reveal Odd Facts

Why New York should rank 29th on the list of lumber producing states and why Washington should lead the list is not hard to explain as it is quite generally known that most of the timber has been cut in the East but not in the State of Washington. On the other hand, the explanation of the eccentricities of various states in the value of manufactured wood products is not always so apparent, says the New York State College of Forestry at Syracuse University.

This fact is noticeable in comparing the values of various wood products. In this respect Pennsylvania is first in the production of wooden square boxes and Florida at the other end of the country is third. New York leads in the value of manufactured cork products such as bottle corks and life preservers although cork is not grown in New York but is imported from Spain and other foreign countries. Wisconsin makes more excelsior than any other state. Michigan leads in the value of refrigerators manufactured but New York is ahead in office furniture, pool tables, bowling alleys and rattan and willow baskets. New York and Pennsylvania are the leading states in the value of manufactured wooden coffins and caskets. Illinois ranks first in cooperage, many kinds of boxes, picture frames and portable houses. Michigan leads in the value of manufactured church pews and Georgia in the production of turpentine. Washington produces more veneers and Ohio more black walnut lumber than any other state.

Offer

A mean golfer selected a little boy for his caddie, so that he would not have to pay the statutory fee. When he was about to drive off at the first tee, one of the regular caddies, a muscular young man, touched his cap to the player and said, "Carry your clubs, sir?"

The player pointed to his diminutive attendant, who was not much taller than the bag of clubs he was holding, and replied: "Can't you see I'm already provided with a caddie?"

But the official bag-carrier was not to retire from the contest so easily. Touching his cap again, he said, eagerly: "Carry your caddie, sir?"

China "Takes Up" Miniature Golf

Night Clubs and "Talkies" Also Among Western Innovations in Peiping

Peiping.—The sudden appearance of four miniature golf courses in this ancient capital is one superficial evidence of a growing taste for "Western" amusements that has developed with increasing momentum during the past year. This taste has been apparent in Shanghai for years, but Northern Chinese have clung more steadfastly to traditional amusements.

Two of these "midget golf" courses have invaded former imperial gardens of Manchu Emperors, one in the Pei Hai (North Sea Palace) and the other in Chungshan Park, named after the late Sun Yat-sen. A third has been constructed in the second story of the greatest Chinese bazaar in the city. When Marshal Chang Hseuh-liang took up miniature golf the success of the experiments was assured.

Chinese night clubs have swept Peiping during the past six months. One enterprising Chinese brought several Chinese "dancing partners" from Shanghai last Winter and opened a night club on Shanghai models. The girls understood Western dancing and undertook to teach clients for a small fee. The place was an immediate success, and within a few weeks six others had been opened. All are apparent financial successes. Manchurian officers and officials contribute much of the business.

Habitues of these night clubs are models of deportment. They treat the dancing partners with great respect, seldom drink too much and learn to dance with great earnestness. Many Chinese girls of respectable family attend these places and vie with the men in seeking instruction from the professional instructresses. In fact, the night clubs seem to be dancing schools rather than places of entertainment.

Peiping has been the stronghold of traditional Chinese drama for generations. Most of the leading actors and actresses of the old school have their headquarters here, and the classical drama has been supported through recent lean years. Now the talking pictures threatens the native drama. Three talking-picture theatres have been established in Peiping during the past year and have become immediately popular with Chinese, with English as the spoken language, but Chinese who cannot understand English appear to enjoy them none the less. Musical pictures are especially popular.

"Talkies" are definitely more popular than silent pictures, but several theatres still show silent pictures with success.

Women in Forestry

Miss Margaret Stoughton, of Asheville, N.C., can claim the distinction of being among the first women in the United States to pass a civil service examination in forestry, writes a correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor. Recently Miss Stoughton has been appointed on the staff of a forestry experiment station in the Appalachian district, her rank being that of "Junior Forester." She is splendidly equipped by nature for this unusual career, being of athletic build and extremely active. She has always enjoyed tramping through the forests, suitably dressed for the part, so that her present duties for the Government are but another phase of her accustomed outdoor life. Her work as junior forester includes the study of trees and the placing of the official tag of the Government on such specimens as meet the necessary qualifications.

The appointment of Miss Stoughton to this forest field work opens to women a new line of industry, one which is specially suitable to those who are outdoor enthusiasts and who have a keen interest in trees and shrubs.

Forestry includes also varied lines of research work which should appeal to women who enjoy tackling somewhat unusual jobs. A woman who is outstanding in this type of research activity is Dr. Eloise Gerry, of the Forest Products Laboratory at Madison, Wis., who specializes in studies relating to the production of turpentine.

Sunday School Lesson

July 26. Lesson IV. Christianity Spread By Persecution—Acts 7: 59 to 8: 4; 11: 19-21. Go'den Text—Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life.—Revelation 2: 10.

ANALYSIS

I. THE FIRST CHRISTIAN MARTYR, Acts 7: 54-C0; 26: 9-11.

II. CHRISTIANITY SAVED, 8: 1-4.

III. CHRISTIANITY SPREAD, 11: 19-21.

IV. CHRISTIANITY HONORED, 1 Peter 4: 12-19.

INTRODUCTION—The Church in Jerusalem was enjoying remarkable prosperity. The high priest himself admitted (5: 28) that Jerusalem was filled with the doctrine. Many, even the priests, had joined it. They could do this without breaking with Judaism because the Church was still Judaism plus something. Only one man saw that this something could not be added to Judaism as it stood. That man was Stephen. It was on his account that the crisis arose which made history for the Church.

I. THE FIRST CHRISTIAN MARTYR, Acts 7: 54-60; 26: 9-11.

Stephen, the deacon, was destined for a greater eminence. As Dr. Whyte says, he was a young man of such original genius and of such special grace that there was nothing he could not have attained to had he been allowed to live. His mind was free from the prejudices and superstitions of his day. He saw what the others had not seen—that Christianity must be freed from Judaistic legalism.

His fellow-Hellenists were quick to see where his teachings must end. They decided that a man so dangerous to things as they were must be silenced. People who want to be comfortable always want to silence the man who has a disturbing gospel. Stephen was soon haled before the Sanhedrin. Stephen's earthly day of work was soon done, but in his dying he set on foot a greater movement than yet had been.

A young Pharisee had seen Stephen murdered. He had held the cloaks of those who had stoned him. The calmness and courage of the dying man had made an indelible impression upon him. Long after, when Saul had found for himself the secret of that courage, he continued to accuse himself bitterly for his own part in it, and in the subsequent persecutions. 26: 9-11.

II. CHRISTIANITY SAVED, 8: 1-4.

Robert Louis Stevenson, tortured with sciatica, almost dead from a desperate hæmorrhage threatened with permanent blindness, could say that things had fallen out for the best. Looking back, we can say the same of the persecutions which followed upon the death of Stephen. Saul's harrying saved Christianity. The believers, well-equipped for carrying out their Lord's command (1: 8), were staying comfortably in Jerusalem. The local Church was flourishing—crowded congregations—large collections—many additions to the membership—but with no missionary enterprise. Such a Church dies spiritually. Saul's persecutions soon shattered its security.

The believers fled from the city and were scattered abroad. The apostles, significantly enough, remained in Jerusalem. Lacking Stephen's clear insight, they had not yet antagonized Judaism. Possibly, too, the Hellenistic side of the Church had been more aggressive and therefore bore the brunt of the attack. The persecution forced upon the minds of those who fled and those who remained that loyalty to the spirit of Jesus would carry them much further than they had yet gone. But where?

III. CHRISTIANITY SPREAD, 11: 19-21.

Latimer, tied to the stake at Oxford, cried out to Ridley, who was being burned with him. "Be of good cheer, Master Ridley, and play the man: we shall this day light such a candle by God's grace in England as (I trust) shall never be put out." So Stephen could have said. The persecutions scattered the believers abroad. The word scattered abroad means to be sown abroad. The scattered believers were the seed, which, thrown into alien soil, was to bear unexpected fruit. Through Judea and Samaria they went, up to Phoenicia, west to Cyprus, north along the coast to Seleucia, the port of Antioch, thence inland the fifteen miles to Antioch itself, the capital of Syria. Antioch offered the exiled Christians a fruitful field for labor. The Jewish community there had won many proselytes for Judaism. The purer religion of the Jews had appealed to the finer spirits in Antioch.

IV. CHRISTIANITY HONORED, 1 Peter 4: 12-19.

The persecuted exiles were perplexed at their many troubles. Peter encourages them by pointing to the honor which has been conferred upon them—made sharers with Jesus in his suffering (v. 12) to be sharers also with him in his glory. He warns them, however, against the notion that all persecutions thus honor one. A man paying for his past sin and folly is experiencing the inevitable "persecution." He may be nursing the delusion that he is being martyred. Let Christians beware of such self-deception! But real martyrdom is something to thank God for. The cross leads to the crown. As Dean Inge says: "The universe is friendly to brave men who can endure hardness." Unexpected forces are throwing in their weight on their side. So it was with the early Church.

British Line Cuts Fares On India-Africa Routes

London—Imperial Airways has reduced certain fares on the Empire airlines to India and Central Africa. The fare from London to Cairo has been reduced from $250 to $225, and to Bagdad from $405 to $325. The new fare to Karachi, India, 5,000 miles from London, is now $490, only $30 more than first-class fare by surface transport, which takes seven days. The air trip takes slightly more than five days. The fare to Kisumu is $475, 10 cheaper than surface transportation. The air journey saves twenty-three days.

Ontario Public To Be Made Milk Conscious

Toronto.—Milk and its allied products are to be the subjects of an educational publicity campaign in Ontario, directed by the Ontario Milk Producers' Association and backed by the Departments of Agriculture, Education and Health and by municipal health bodies, according to the announcement of J. P. Griffin, secretary of the milk association.

"Investigation among the distributors of milk, the food purveyors and in the local hotels and restaurants has convinced us that people do not realize the food value of milk and milk products. It is with the idea of giving people an opportunity to learn the elementary facts which seem to have been lost or obscured from the people of this generation, that the campaign will be launched," Mr. Griffin said.

A helpful sign is seen by the association in the run that has been made on buttermilk ever since the June heat wave.

"Dairies are unable to supply this demand," said Mr. Griffin.

Berlin's Area Expands

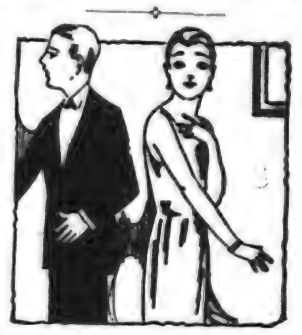
Berlin.—Berlin has grown fourteen times larger in the last thirty years, according to figures of the Bureau of Statistics. Its area now is 348 square miles against 25 in 1900. This expansion is due mainly to incorporating more and more suburbs and neighboring communes, a process which indeed has been going on in all big cities in Germany, though on a less striking scale.

In the same three decades the population of Berlin has risen from 1,888,000 to 4,297,000, but as the rate of territorial growth has been so much greater, the Berliner in 1931 has, theoretically at least, considerably more breathing space than at the beginning of the century.

Berlin in the first quarter of this year had the lowest birth rate in the Reich, namely, 10.3 per 1,000 against an average of 16.1 in the chief cities of Germany. The prize for the highest birth rate during the quarter goes to Hindenburg, in Silesia, which recorded 23.8.

Panama Suffers Little From Trade Depression

Panama City.—The Republic of Panama, probably as self-contained economically as any country in the world, has felt but lightly the world depression.



Unlike other Central and South American countries which export their products and suffer keenly from any decrease in outside buying power, Panama has little to sell. Business has slumped in the more populous centers at the ends of the canal, but in the interior towns life has been little affected.

An attractive advertisement speaks of "suits for the trim business man." For the business man already trimmed we suppose the same old suit will have to do.

The zoo at Toledo, Ohio, has secured a mammoth sturgeon captured in Lake St. Clair, Canada. The fish weighted 239 pounds and was sold to Toledo for $100.

Feeding bees on sugar and milk at the Government Experimental Farm at Agassiz, B.C., has resulted in an average of 23 pounds more honey than on ordinary diet. This may mean a further impetus to Canadian honey production.

Capital amounting to $6,000,000,000 is invested in the development of 33,000,000 horse power electrical energy in the province of Quebec. Throughout Canada electric power development investments total $1,-500,000,000.

East and west of Suez as also in London, Berlin, Paris and other famous centres, canned and frozen salmon from British Columbia was successfully marketed last year. Most of the shipments went from Victoria.

Monday, August 10, has been officially set as the opening date of the fourth "Buyers' Week" to be held in Montreal. The first Buyers' Week brought 251 buyers from all over the continent to Montreal; the third brought 1,100 buyers, indicating the growing success of the plan.

Individual holders of Canadian Pacific Railway common stock numbered 21,186 on September 2, 1930, and by the 1st June, 1931, there were 34,872 holders, an increase of 13,686. This shows the growing popularity of this stock since its split into four new shares for one of the old stock.

Unity of all peoples who live on the shores of the Pacific was the object behind the recent visit to British Columbia and Alaska of the Portland, Ore., Chamber of Commerce who took a seven-day cruise on board Canadian Pacific steamer Princess Charlotte in northern waters.

Completing a coast-to-coast holiday trip, Viscount Duncannon, son of Canada's Governor-General, the Earl of Bessborough, and his cousin, the Hon. Arthur Ponsonby, arrived in Vancouver over Canadian Pacific Lines from the east recently. They went on to a six-day trip of British Columbia waters aboard S.S. Princess Maquinna.

Ladies evidently also prefer blondes, judging by the decision of the Alpha Delta Pi sorority who elected Miss Margaret Jensen, blonde beauty of Hunter College, New York, as the sisterhood's most beautiful bathing girl at the convention recently held at the Chateau Lake Louise, in the heart of the Canadian Rockies.

Effective July 1, the Toronto Terminals division of the Canadian Pacific Railway was merged with the Bruce division of the company, the combined divisions being known as the Bruce division. R. W. Scott was appointed superintendent with headquarters at Toronto.

Visiting the Canadian Rockies for the second time in forty years, Colonel R. Stanley, of Alverstok, England, said he was astounded at the progress and development attained in that comparatively short period. He was a guest at the Banff Springs Hotel, which was not even thought of when he was here last as a guest of Lord Mount Stephen. (755)

LET US SMILE

A patient in an insane asylum imagined himself dead and nothing could drive this delusion out of his brain. One day his physician had a happy thought and said to him:

"Did you ever see a dead man bleed?"

"No," he replied.

"Do you believe that a dead man can bleed?"

"Well, if you will permit me I will try an experiment with you and see of you bleed or not."

The patient gave his consent, the doctor whipped out his scalpel and drew a little blood. "There," he said, "you see that you bleed; that proves that you are not dead."

"Not at all," the patient instantly replied, "that only proves that dead men can bleed."

The editors of local newspapers are often blamed for partiality in their notices for churches, societies and even families, when the fact is the parties most interested are the ones to blame. The local newspaper does not possess a sufficient number of reporters to send to every church service in the range of its circulation, and it must needs depends upon some person to send in the news. Many pastors or leaders of the congregation do this and their items are gladly printed. Many societies appoint one of their members to attend to this important work.

How to Take Part and Win

The Government of Canada will take the census in June of this year. Every ten years the government takes this census to determine the population of the Dominion. In June Government representatives will set to work to cover every section and make a count of the number of people resident in Canada. Government statisticians will then determine just what is Canada's population.

Canada has grown rapidly since the last census in 1921. Just to what extent her population has increased is the problem of this contest.

The splendid cash awards shown on this page go to those who can most closely estimate what the Government will find our 1931 population in Canada to be.

What an opportunity for earning a marvellous cash prize with little or no effort. Be sure to take part.

Use this coupon to send in your own or other subscriptions or both. An ordinary sheet of letter paper may be used instead of this coupon if desired.

Cuts

In a recent article on the skin, we stated that the normal healthy skin has several important functions, one of which is that it acts as a barrier to keep out disease germs.

Just as soon as the skin is broken, the barrier is down and those germs which cause infections have an opportunity to gain entrance to the parts under the skin, and to start the serious troubles for which they are responsible.

The break in the skin may not be extensive; the slightest scratch is sufficient. It is not the cut or the scratch which is dangerous, it is the infection which may follow when the cut or scratch is neglected. By infection we mean inflammation and swelling which generally go on to the formation of pus, and which are the result of the action of the germ upon the tissues attached.

The germs which cause infection are widely spread. Years ago very few operations were performed. This is not because the surgeons lacked the necessary skill, but because when they operated the wounds became infected. It was not until the discovery was that germs caused the infection, that practical means were devised of keeping the germs out of the wounds with the result that modern surgery was made possible.

Wound infections do not occur in hospitals to-day because of the methods used to prevent germs from entering the wounds. Before the surgeon cuts the skin, he prepares the surface in such a way as to destroy any germs which might be on the skin; he wares sterilized gloves for the operation, and everything which he uses has been sterilized.

The simplest cut or scratch should be properly treated without delay. In this way it is possible to prevent the serious and sometimes fatal results that come about because of the neglect of something which at the time of its occurrence appeared too trivial to bother about.

Some persons always want to stick their fingers into things. If they themselves or some other person have a cut or a scratch, they want to get their fingers into it. Fingers, unless they have been given a very thorough scrubbing with soap and water, are almost certain to be soiled and to carry the germs of infection. They should be kept away from cuts.

When the skin is broken, it should be thoroughly cleaned, and for this we should rely chiefly upon soap and water. After this the surface is covered with a sterile dressing to keep the area clean.

The treatment of wounds which are at all serious should be left to the doctor. Swelling or pain is the first symptom of infection, and if either of these occurrs, there should be no delay in calling the doctor; the condition then requires treatment.

Neglect leads to infection and infection is serious. Prompt care of all breaks in the skin, no matter how small they are, prevents infection. It is much better to give care promptly than it is to delay and then to suffer as a result of the neglect.

OBITUARY

Marion Joy Treanor

A home was saddened when the Shepherd gathered another of his little ones unto Himself.

Less than three months ago, little Marion was apparently in perfect health. On becoming ill she was put under the doctor's care, and six weeks ago taken to the Hospital for Sick Children. Here her condition remained about the same until the last week, when she sank rapidly, passing away on Sunday evening, July 19th.

Doctors and nurses loved this little one, who always had a smile and who never complained. During the heat and during the pain, this little one felt for those she considered less ortunate than herself.

Th funeral took place on Wednesday afternoon, July 22nd to Streetsville cemetery.

Many friends and neighbours gathered to show their respects and follow her to her last resting place. The little coffin was carried by four little boys; Floyd Treanor, Alec Whitfield, John Madill and Paul Couse.

The beautiful floural tributes were carried by little girls and included a pillow-from the family, wreath from Dr. Treanor and family, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Taggart, Nellie and Doris; Mr. F. Whitfield and family; Sprays from Mrs. Jno. Ritchie; Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Treanor; Mr. and Mrs. Harry Scott; Mr. and Mrs Wm. Madill and family; Erma and Reva Pegg; Evelyn and Floyd Treonor.

Baskets from Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Treanor and St. Andrew's Sunday School.

Left to mourn her loss are her father, mother and two little sisters, Whilemine and Aileen.

Services at the house was conducted by Rev. W. T. McCree assisted by Rev. G. G. Treanor, Th. D. and Rev R. J. Perry.

THE MAN WHO SLAMS THE DOOR

Egotists we frown upon,
Dislike the talking bore,
But we detest the noisy pest—
The man who slams the door!

Nightly we are sore distressed
By loud nocturnal snores,
But when he's late, we simply hate—
The man who slams the door!

Saxaphones and radios
We often must ignore,
But we can't stand the selfish brand—
The man who slams the door!

Many kinds of raucous sounds
We loathe and just abhor,
But we could kill the imbecile—
The man who slams the door!

TURN OUT
LEARN LIFE-SAVING

Swimming is a sport superior to all others in promoting and preserving health. It strengthens the heart and muscles, develops the lungs, and stimulates the mind. Its knowledge is invaluable, especially as a means of rendering aid to those in danger of drowning.

Every year thousands of lives are lost by drowning. A great proportion can be prevented by the proper knowledge of the art of swimming and life-saving. In many cases victims have been brought to shore, apparently drowned, and allowed to die when the knowledge of resucitation would have saved them.

The desire to save a life, to help another the so-felt sympathy, so difficult to express, have urged us on to organize a class in Streetsville. The course though invaluable is easily followed. Instruction is free and supervised by D. Barclay, R.L.S.S., representative for Peel. It is therefore earnestly hoped that every one, who can, will turn out every Tuesday and Thursday evening, at seven-thirty o'clock at the dam.

HAS IT HAPPENED TO YOU? by P.C.1

Dundas Highway — 6.00 p.m. Sunday. Traffic heavy in both directions . . . and slow.

There's a bad curve about two miles west of Cooksville running onto a ong, very steep, curving hill.

I was parked just off the exact centre of the curve at the top of the hill. A chap with a big, heavy car headed west hurtled past me almost on two wheels and started down the hill on the wrong side of the white line. He saw me and tried to edge back into line, but the west traffic was bumper to bumper. He couldn't get in.

Halfway up the hill was a driver coming east at a good speed. Only one thing saved several lives. The man coming up the hill took to the ditch, fortunately a shallow one. He managed to hurdle it, went through a fence onto some plowed land and came to a stop with lamps, bumper and radiator practically wrecked. Quickly I inspected the car and found that, luckily, no one was seriously hurt.

Then I took after the driver who caused the accident.

Two miles west I caught up with him.

* * *

The charge was reckless driving and failure to return to the scene of an accident.

* * *

The moral is that a few minutes saved by cutting in and out of traffic may be very expensive in both actual money and human misery.

20 Missing, 100 Are Hurt When Institution For Poor Breaks Into Flames

Dead May Total 50 as Four-Storey Catholic Infirmary is Suddenly Engulfed in Roaring Inferno, Trapping Scores in Bedrooms

MANY INJURED LEAPING INTO FIREMEN'S NET

Pittsburg. — Thirty persons were known to be dead, 20 were missing and more than 100 were in hospitals after a fire had destroyed the home for the aged of the "Little Sisters of the Poor" here last Friday. Estimates of the number of the dead ranged as high as 50.

The victims admitted to hospitals were for the most part overcome by smoke, dense clouds of which filled the burning home.

Some were injured in jumping from windows or in making their way through smoke-filled rooms to windows, from where firemen carried them down ladders.

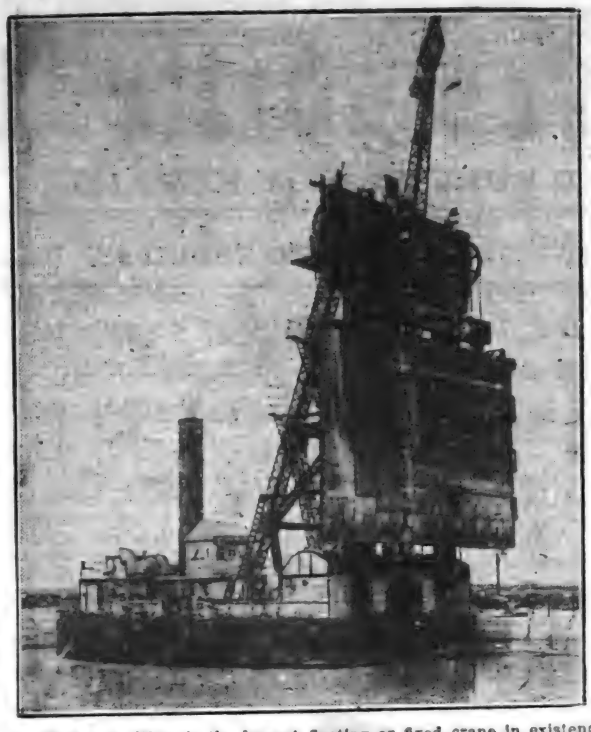
The home is located at Penn Avenue and South Aiken Avenue in the eastern part of the city.

Mostly Inmates.

Most of the dead were aged inmates of the home. Efforts to make a check on the number which might have been trapped in the home, which housed numerous cripples, was impossible because the rescued were at various hospitals and in a nearby school and private homes.

Six Alarms

Hundreds of rescuers battled desperately against the flames to bring out those believed remaining in the building, and the wide lawn about the home was quickly scattered with physicians and nurses giving first aid as victims were brought out.



Six of the missing were volunteer rescue workers who entered the building in search of bodies.

The police battled an estimated crowd of 20,000 persons who gathered as the flames lighted up the skies.

Eight dead were brought to the morgue from St. Francis Hospital, six from the West Penn Hospital, five from the Homeopathic Hospital, two from the Pittsburg Hospital, while six dead were at the emergency hospital set up in the basement of the St. Lawrence School, across the street from the home for the aged.

Firemen had the flames under control by 11.30 o'clock, eastern standard time, though there still was fire burning in various portions of the institution.

World's Largest

This gate lifter is the largest floating or fixed crane in existence. Electrical control and equipment was installed by the Canadian Westinghouse. It is stationed at Port Weller in a special lock. The Collingwood Ship Yards built it at a cost exceeding $1,000.000.

News this week comes from Maple, where, by the keenness and activity of the Lone Scouts there, a new Troop has been formed.

The week-end of June 20-21st saw a very busy group of Lonies there. On Saturday evening, June 20th, they held a meeting in charge of Scoutmaster Don Hutchison, of the 2nd Ontario Lone Scout Troop, at which five new members were invested.

Then the parents began to gather, and after all were present several presentations took place, these being Tenderfoot Badges to two Scouts and a One Year Service Star to Lone Scout Bill Taylor. Also an "All Round" prize was presented to Lone Scout Alf. Forrest.

After this another recruit was invested, just to let the parents see what an Investiture Ceremony is like, and to give them an idea of the obligations of a Scout.

Then the new Scoutmaster, Mr. Bryan, was asked if he was willing to accept the responsibility of the new Troop, which he consented to do, and the Assistant Scoutmaster, Mr. Don Fraser, on being asked to express himself, stated that he was ready to stand by the Scoutmaster.

A Troop Committee was then appointed, and Lone Patrol Leader Bob Manning, who is mostly responsible for the formation of the Troop, was appointed as Troop Leader, and four of the Lonies as Patrol Leaders.

Sunday evening saw a Church Parade to Richmond Hill, when fifteen of the members of the new Troop turned out on parade, and they were met at the church by three Lone Scouts from Unionville.

We are sorry to lose the Maple Lonies from our ranks, but we are glad that they are off to such a good start in their new Troop.

This week's Summer Time Activity Badge is the Pioneers Badge, which a good many Lone Scouts can easily qualify for, if they like to put their attention to it.

Incidentally you can have a lot of fun in working for this Badge, and the experience which you will gain will always be of use to you.

Remember, a Pioneer is one who goes in front, away into the unknown wilds, and he must be equipped with knowledge which will be of use to him in living his difficult life, and in overcoming the hardships and obstacles which face him. Thus the requirements of the Pioneers' Badges are as follows:

1. Fell a six-inch tree, neatly and quickly.
2. Tie eight different knots quickly in the dark, or blindfolded.
3. Lash spars together properly for scaffolding.
4. Build a model bridge or derrick.
5. Make a camp kitchen.
6. Build a hut of boughs or sods, or grasses or similar material, or alternatively weave a satisfactory mattress of straw, hay or boughs on a camp loom.

Do you think that you could do those things? Why not try, and see if you cannot qualify for the rank of a Pioneer?

Lone Scouting is open to any boys between the ages of 12 and 18, who live in the country or in villages where there is no Scout Troop. If you are interested and would like to become a Scout write for further information to "The Lone Scout Department, The Boy Scouts Association, 330 Bay St., Toronto, Ont."—"Lone E.'

Sees Husband Drown

Hamilton.—Mrs. Eunice Brown of 17 Hampton Avenue, who, with her four children, was sitting on the shore, saw her husband, Cyril Brown, aged 27 years, sink to a watery grave in Hamilton Bay near the canal Sunday afternoon. His body was recovered almost immediately in three feet of water and efforts were made to resuscitate him, but he failed to respond. Dr. Russell Dingle of Burlington was called and the remains were later viewed by Coroner Dr. O. A. Cannon. The opinion was expressed that heart failure had been the cause of death.

The family left the city shortly before noon to spend the day at the beach and the victim had been in the water but a short time. Mrs. Brown and her children were seated nearby and were watching him. Suddenly he disappeared from view. There was no outcry and Mrs. Brown pointed to the spot while other swimmers hurried to his side. They had no difficulty in locating the body.

Point Pelee Tragedy

Windsor.—The treacherous undertow off Point Pelee in Lake Erie where more than a score of lives have been lost within the past few years, claimed two more victims. They were—Lawrence Cornell, of Windsor, 22 years old, and Melvin Reid, 21, of Detroit.

Miss Eva Watts, 21, of Detroit, who was to have shortly been wedded to young Cornell, narrowly escaped a similar fate. She owes her life to the fact that she is an unusually strong swimmer and was thus able to battle against the waves and current until assistance arrived from the life-saving station at Point Pelee.

According to the story, as gathered by provincial police, the Cornell and Reid parties had motored to Pelee National Park to spend the day. While luncheon was being made ready Miss Watts, Cornell and Reid decided to take a swim.

Apparently failing to observe the danger signs whic hare posted to warn danger signs which are posted to warn point, they entered the water at the extreme tip of the sandy point. After reaching a distance of some 200 yards out they were seized by the under current.

Will Men See Change In Garb This Winter?

Berlin.—The always topical question of reform in men's clothing was broached by a Berlin newspaper recently, writes a correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor. It sent a reporter to interview several persons on the subject and some of the replies given to the Berliner Morgenpost were as witty as they were to the point. One "man-in-the-street" merely smiled, "Reform? Out of the question. If men wanted one they would have discarded all their superfluous paraphernalia long ago." Most of the men and women interviewed agreed that the stiff shirt of the dress suit should vanish. An author declared he would discard his waistcoat if he knew where to leave all the things he carried in it. "Too much cloth, too heavy material, too many buttons, too little comfort," was the reply of one of the best-known men's outfitters in Berlin. But already the cloth is becoming lighter and of more suitable material, indicating that the reform of men's clothing is on the way.

Foreign Dishes In Berlin

Although German cooking and German beer and wine are famed throughout the world, many foreign residents in Berlin demand the cooking and delicacies of their homelands. The result has been the establishment of restaurants for foreigners, even one which provides Boston baked beans and griddle cakes with maple syrup.

Turks, Armenians, Arabs and visitors from the Balkan States meet at the Orient Restaurant to get their favorite dish, mutton slices roasted on a spit over a charcoal fire and eaten with rice. Stuffed peppers, Persian soup, meat baked in a dough casing and other delicacies of the Near East are on the menu.

There are several Chinese restaurants which attract Chinese students. The Japanese have their own eating place, which serves also sake, a strong rice wine, and Hindus eat at the Hindustani House. Here the favorite foods are curried chicken and Indian lentils.

Many Russian restaurants sprang up in Berlin after the flight of emigres. They range from simple eating places to luxurious restaurants.

Two restaurants are centres for Berlin's Negro popuation.

Foreign Books Take Hold In Japanese Towns

Tokyo.—Books in foreign languages have been popular in Japan since the opening of the country seventy years ago. That this popularity is not waning, despite the annual publication of hundreds of Japanese translations, was evidenced by the opening of a foreign book department in Tokyo's largest department store. Sixty thousand volumes, in English, French and German, were on sale the first day; and the stock is soon to be increased to 100,000 volumes. Though a majority of the titles are literary, many are scientific and philosophical. Foreign magazines are also sold. Next year the same store plans to open similar departments in its Osaka and Seoul (Korea) branches.

Purpose

That man who forms a purpose which he knows to be right, and then moves forward to accomplish it without inquiring where it will land him as an individual, and without inquiring what the immediate consequences to himself will be is the manliest of manly men.

Eckener Outlines Objects of Voyage

Will Collect Scientific Data and Look for Undiscovered Land

Berlin.—On the eve of his departure on a daring flight over the "top of the world," Dr. Hugo Echener, commander of the dirigible Graf Zeppelin, said there were two things he hoped to accomplish.

1. Collect data on air currents and atmospheric pressure that will enable weather forecasters throughout the world to make more accurate predictions.

2. Determine whether there is hitherto undiscovered land in the region of the new Siberian Islands.

The Graf moored on Friday at Staaken Airport after flying here from Friedrichshafen on the first stage of its polar expedition. Aboard are Dr. Eckener, 30 crew members and 16 passengers.

"We'll have plenty of tasks to discharge during the trip," Dr. Eckener said. "We've a date with the Russian ice breaker Malygin off White Island. We'll drop mail to them and pick some up. We may even take on a passenger from the Malygin or drop one to her in a basket.

"I don't look for any particular danger either for the zepp or the passengers. We don't look for much trouble from ice forming on the bag, for it's not so cold this time of year, seldom below zero. In any case we could steer around unfavorable areas and minimize any danger of ice coating.

"But we carry complete polar supplies and provisions anyway, in case anything happens: complete, that is, except for dogs. We'll be seeing a bit too much water to make them of any use."

Tasks

Let each one accept his task, a task which should fill his life. It may be very humble; it will not be the less useful. Never mind what it is, so long as it exists and keeps you erect. When you have regulated it, without excess—just the quantity you are able to accomplish each day—it will cause you to live in health and in joy.

For Better Books

Washington Post: The growing demand for good literature is due in no small measure to a greater interest in books on the part of women. Co-education and literary clubs throughout the country have stimulated reading habits. Men formerly purchased more nonfiction, but today the demand among women for serious books has virtually equalled that of the men. Though modern inventions have provided pleasures and benefits which are of great value to humanity, it is hard to conceive of an actual substitute for literature. Ephemeral enjoyments and novel pastimes still leave man with an appetite for books which no other amusement can quite appease.

Combining the Old and New

Berlin.—A curious yet pleasing spectacle was witnessed the other day in one of Berlin's thoroughfares, writes a correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor. Down the street on one hot day came a huge cart, heavily laden. It was drawn by a peculiar team—two real horses and an iron horse, a tractor. The driver of the cart, feeling sorry for his two horses pulling their load in the heat of the sun, had asked a passing tractor driver to help him out and the latter readily agreed. The two horses were on the best of terms with their iron friend.

A Lesson

If you will go to the banks of a little stream and watch the flies that come to bathe in it, you will notice that, while they plunge their bodies in the water, they keep their wings high out of the water; and, after swimming about a little while, they fly away with their wings unwet through the sunny air. Now that is a lesson for us. Here we are immersed in the cares and business of the world, but let us keep the wings of our soul—our faith and our love—out of the world, that, with these unclogged, we may be ready to take our flight to heaven.

Sympathy's Grip

The noblest fraternity on earth is that which makes itself known by sympathy's grip in sorrow's hour.

Record Tourist Traffic For 1931

More Long Stay Permits Applied for, Returns to Ottawa Show

Ottawa.—Record tourist traffic into Canada this year is indicated by early returns from customs and other Government sources.

A feature of the increased traffic, says a recent statement of the Department of Trade and Commerce, is the greater proportion of long-stay permits being applied for, indicating a more general desire for long-distance touring than in former years.

Tourists' automobiles entering New Brunswick from the United States this year to the end of May showed an increase of 84 per cent. over the corresponding period last year. Customs officials report a considerable increase in the number of tourist cars entering Ontario via the Peace Bridge and the bridges at Niagara Falls, also a slightly heavier traffic entering Quebec via Rouse's Point and Philipsburg.

This influx of visitors is making itself felt in many lines of business. Employment statistics for Canadian hotels and restaurants jumped over six per cent. in June; all transportation systems showed increased employment over May and the preceding months; retail sales in urban centres have also shown considerable increases.

An increase in the number of Canadians visiting the United States is also shown. Permits issued to motoring Canadians leaving at Niagara Falls numbered 7,554 in May, and the number of tourist permits issued at Philipsburg, Que., numbered 1,772.

A Solemn Thought

To the watcher at night, how slowly and solemnly the clock tells the passing hours! In the daytime how the same sound is swallowed up in the hurrying tread of myriad feet, in the roll of carriages, and in the thunder and shriek of the locomotive, and in the thousand and one mingled animate and inanimate voices that swell the chorus of a great city! Yet the moments flee all the same, and inscribe their indelible record for good or ill.

Great Lakes Region Has Wide Appeal

Many and Varied Tourist Attractions in Area Bordering on Great Inland Waterway

The Great Lakes region of Canada embodies a truly wide range of scenic and recreational attractions and through its accessibility is one of the most favored tourist districts of the Dominion. By motor, steamship, and rail this enchanting area may be reached from any of the Canadian provinces and from the United States. Fishing, hunting in season, canoeing, and bathing, as well as such organized sports as golf, and tennis, may be enjoyed under the most ideal conditions.

A central highway route traverses the whole of the southern section, affording a splendid motor drive from Montreal, Quebec, to Windsor, Ontario, a distance of nearly 600 miles of smooth travel. This route parallels the St. Lawrence and the shore line of Lake Ontario, and offers splendid views of the river, the Thousand Islands playgrounds, lake vistas, and pleasing rural scenes, interspersed with alert communities.

Side trips can be made from Kingston through the Rideau lakes and from Port Hope to the Kawartha Lakes district, two spots rich in canoe routes and places to hunt and fish. North from Toronto, Muskoka and Lake of Bays are districts of particular charm. There, nature has designed an out-of-doors particularly qualified to meet all the requirements of a summer vavation. West from Toronto to Windsor the trail leads through areas of intense agricultural and floral development, the early history of which is pleasantly associated with colonization days. East from Hamilton is the Niagara peninsula with its four major claims to distinction—the high development of fruit culture; the twin cataracts of the Niagara River; the Queenston - Chippewa power development; and the Welland canal. The shore lines of lakes Erie and Huron have many bathing beaches and snug summer colonies which find much favor in the eyes of tourists.

The central portion of the Great Lakes district is traversed by both rail and motor highway. Ottawa, the Dominion capital and site of the Parliament Buildings, is the gateway to the Rideau lakes, the fish and game regions of the Gatineau, and the Laurentian hills, a vast playground of river and lake, rolling hills, and green forest. Westward from Ottawa the railway runs through and the motor route passes close by Algonquin Park, an extensive provincial reserve rich in fish and wild life, and threaded by innumerable canoe routes. Farther west lies Mattawa, the starting point of many expeditions into the big game country beyond. North Bay is the meeting point of three roads with outstanding attraction. To the south is the beautiful lake district leading to Georgian Bay and its island paradise; to the north the softwood forests and gold-bearing rocks beckon to the adventurous; while westward the trail passes through the famous copper and nickel belt and skirts the southern boundary of a district noted for its variety and quality of fish and big game.

Increase Lowest Since 1801, but Density is Second in Europe to Belgium

Although the main statistical points in an analysis of Great Britain's population at 44,790,485, according to the censes just completed, an interpretative analysis has been made by S. P. Vivian, the Registrar General, serving to modify the discouraging features—the lowest increase since 1801 and the declining birth-rate.

He declares that the total is the largest ever recorded in the country, and adds that its density of 685 to the square mile, with the exception of that of Belgium, is the highest of any country in Europe.

Other points in his analysis are:

"The numerical increase is less than that of any decennium since 1861 (when the population was but half of its present dimensions) with the sole exception of the war decade, 1911-1921, while the percentage increase, with the same exception, is only half or less than half of any previously recorded. But for the exceptional loss of men during the war the present decennial rate of increase would have been the lowest recorded in respect of England and Wales since census taking was introduced in 1801.

"The full significance of the fall (in births 16.3 per cent.) will be but dimly appreciated for many years to come; any temporary satisfaction felt in a reduction of the number of unproductive mouths to be filled during the present period of economic stress must sooner or later be qualified by a realization of the profounder secular issues involved. The births of to-day govern the population of the future, and, just as the nation which faced the upheaval of 1914 to 1918 was the product of the birth rates prevailing toward the close of last century, we are now observing the conditions which will shape the generations charged with the national density in the latter part of the present century.

"The deaths registered in the intercensal period were more than half a million fewer than those of either of the two preceding decennia. This numerical reduction of more than 10 per cent., which, if allowance be made for the increasing age and numbers of the population exposed to risk, represents a reduction in true mortality of more like 20 per cent. compared with the decennium 1911-2- (exclusive of deaths on active service) or 30 per cent. compared with the last pre-war decennium 1901-11, affords nothing but satisfaction, indicating, as it does, a definite advance in the general vitality of the nation as a whole."

Owl Laffs

On the eve of their execution, an Irishman, a Scotchman and a Jew were asked if they would like any special delicacy.

The Irishman voted for Irish stew, the Scotchman for a bottle of Scotch whiskey, and the Jew fancied strawberries and cream.

Warden (protesting)—"But, strawberries are not in season."

The Jew—"That's all right, I can wait."

Sing a song, sing a song,
Ring the glad bells all along;
Smile at him who frowns at you,
He will smile and then they're two.

Laugh a bit, laugh a bit,
Folks will soon be catching it,
Can't resist a happy face;
World will be a merry place.

Laugh a Bit and Sing a Song,
Where they are there's nothing wrong;
Joy will dance the whole world thru
But it must begin with you.

First Tramp—"After I had given her back her lost purse, she put her hand in her pocket and said: 'Take this for a hot drink'."

Second Tramp—"What did she give you?"

First Tramp—"A lump of sugar."

Call the Police!

The wealth of the average American has been set at $2,977. My gosh, somebody been short-changed!—and how!

Lampson—"Have you ever been at a telephone in a storm?"

Harrell—"Oh, yes! My wife occasionally calls me up."

Kayo — "They gave Six Second Smith a present of a bathrobe before the fight last night."

Okay—"Yeah. And he got a beautiful pair of socks later on, too."

Clothes make the man in some environments, but an air mail stamp doesn't keep a circular out of the waste basket.

Mrs. Blabber—"You're looking very happy this morning. Have you had good news?"

Mrs. Gabber—"Just wonderful. My husband has just had a nervous breakdown and we're going south.

Mr. Warburg, a noted banker, says business revival needs the help of psychologists and not economists. Perhaps a few buyologists would help.

Joe—"Hullo! Bought a saxophone?"

Moe—"No; I borrowed it from the man next door."

Joe—"But yo ucan't play it."

Moe—"Neither can he while I've got it."

Mother (to little daughter returning from Sunday school)—"Well, what was your lesson about this morning?"

Little Daughter—"A man named Solomon."

Mother—"And what did you learn about Solomon?"

Little Daughter—"The teacher said he had 300 wives and 700 cucumber vines."

Harry—"A burglar broke itno my house last night."

Ralph—"Did he get anything?"

Harry—"Rather! You see, my wife thought it was me."

A guest hurried up to the hotel clerk's counter. He had just ten minutes to pay his bill, reach the station, and board his train.

The Guest—"Hang it. I've forgotten something. Here, boy, run up to my room—No. 427—and see if I left my pyjamas and shaving outfit. Hurry. I've only got five minutes now. Show some speed."

The boy hurried. In four minutes he returned, empty handed, and out of breath.

The Bellhop—"Yes, sir, you left them."

The girls are not going to worry about the washout of the cotton crop so long as the silk worms keep busy. If some men would spend as much time doing things as they do in telling about the things they have done, a lot more would be accomplished. Few things are as painful as telling a funny story to a person who has no sense of humor. An egotist is a person who thinks he is as clever as you think you are. It may be all right for people to love their enemies, but it has been our observation that mighty few of 'em do it.

Hospital Night

The ward is never dark; here patient skies
Lend not their night to sweep
Smoother than feathers over shuttered eyes
In silver fronds of sleep.

There is no silence in these corridors,
No ageless quiet like rain
Descends in ice-clear beauty here, and pours
Through the unshuttered brain.

But these are shells, the bodies that rest here,
Still lips that shape no cry,
Pierced flesh, and wounded feet that cannot stir,
Torn hands that useless lie:

For like a flock of birds their thoughts have flown
Beyond the world; and free,
Travel the silent dark roads unknown,
Embrace eternity.

—John Barton, in The Spectator.

The New Education

Bertrand Russell in the New Statesman and Nation (London): (In their school in Sussex Bertrand Russell and his wife aim to bring up their pupils with a real knowledge of the world, instead of in ignorance of it). In ordinary education the child is brought up to believe, or at least to pretend to believe, that his parents and teachers are impeccable, that his country is always right, that statesmen of his own country and political party are invariably high-minded, that the wicked are easily discerned and invariably defeated in the end, and that only persons of rare depravity such as one is very unlikely to meet would be guilty of any sexual irregularity. Captains of industry, proprietors of great newspapers, admirals, generals, Privy Councillors, and such, are represented as invariably guided by the loftiest public spirit. When the young man goes out into the world and begins to see through all these amiable falsehoods, he almost inevitably becomes a cynic. Cynicism is the price we pay for a fantastic ethic. Children brought up with a sense of reality will not have to suffer this shock.

"How long will your wife be abroad?"

"About one thousand dollars' worth."

The Simple Things of Earth Are Loveliest

The simple things of earth are loveliest:
A fire on the hearth, the lamplight's glow;
The hour when the heart finds peace and rest,
A mother's lullaby crooned soft and low;

The wayside blossom, tiny woodland stream
That sings a happy, lifting roundelay;
Soft, billowy clouds that drift as in a dream,
The hush of dawn, the sun's last flaming ray;

The friendly trees that give of fruit and shade,
The tendrils of the grape-like clinging hands;
O there are scenes more gorgeously arrayed,
But these the heart has known and understands.

Mankind has reached the pinnacle of power,
Has conquered land and sky and ocean's crest,
And yet, when comes the heart's deep, prayerful hour,
He knows the simple things are loveliest.

—Margaret E. Bruner, in Ave Maria.

Patience and Humour Exemplified in Spain

There is a delightful old Spanish proverb which it is wise to learn before visiting the country: "Have patience, and the mulberry-leaf will become satin."

A tiny story illustrates this admirably. Going to one of the frontier stations for a friend's arrival we saw the notice chalked up that the train was two hours late. After inspecting the church and wandering round the village in an icy wind for the prescribed two hours we returned to the station to find no sign of any train. The station-master, who regarded us with a pitying look, was approached. "Was the train then more than two hours late?" "Mesdames, the train is seven hours late," he replied.

"But why do you put up the notice that it is two hours late?"

"Ah, that, mesdames—that is to give a little hope!"

If you have the gift of leisure and of humor, Spain unfolds itself to you as a country of great charm and character, but there must be no question of rushing 'hrough it.

If you have patience your mulberry-leaf will indeed become satin; you will realize the graciousness and dignity of the Spanish character and will taste the full flavor of those delightful qualities. Indeed, in a few weeks you will come to agree with the Spaniard himself that rush and hurry are undignified and, in Spain at least, will effectively prevent your seeing either country or people as they really are. —From "Spanish Sunshine," by Eleanor Elsner.

Canada Reserves Section British Industries Fair

Ottawa.—It was announced recently by the Department of Trade and Commerce that reservation of a Canadian section at the Birmingham section of the British Industries Fair next year has been made by the Canadian Exhibition Commission. The same space as was held this year has been secured and is located in the heart of the show. Considerable attention has been attracted in past years to the Canadian Government exhibit which is the only one of its kind from the overseas Dominions and Colonies.

Canada Rates High In Chinese Industry

Winnipeg. — Canadian exports to China can be doubled and trebled in the next ten years, if the Canadian business men are willing to investigate the unlimited opportunities that exist, said Lieut.-Col. L. M. Cosgrave, Canadian trade commissioner to China, who is touring Canada.

Canadians stand higher in the estimation of the Chinese than any other people in the world, Colonel Cosgrave said. The Dominion has had very favorable dealings with the Chinese nation. It remains only for the industrial leaders of this country to acquaint themselves with the methods of approach made necessary by the Chinese nature, in order to capitalize their present opportunities.

The editors of local newspapers are often blamed for partiality in their notices for churches, societies and even families, when the fact is the parties most interested are the ones to blame. The local newspaper does not possess a sufficient number of reporters to send to every church service in the range of its circulation, and it must needs depends upon some person to send in the news. Many pastors or leaders of the congregation do this and their items are gladly printed. Many societies appoint one of their members to attend to this important work.

TRINITY CHURCH

Rev. R. J. W. Perry, Rector of Trinity Church, preached a very fine sermon on "What think you of Christ?" last Sunday morning, to a large congregation. Among the many visitors was Mr. W. Brown of Toronto, who was pleased to worship at the Church once more

On Monday evening. Rev. R. J. W. Perry gave an illustrated lecture on India, in the Parish Hall, which was much enjoyed by members of his congregation.

United Church Had Good Garden Party

The Womens Association of the Streetsville United Church held another successful garden party last night on the Church grounds when about 500 people were present.

The weather was ideal and being a little warm there was a big demand for refreshments, which kept the waiters in the big booth real busy.

All the Churches now think that the grounds around the Church is the best place to hold a garden party because it is so convenient.

The pastor, Rev. Geo. H. Purchase B.A., was the chairman.

The programme, which seemed to please the audience to a very large degree, was given by Gus Kennedy, comedian; Ben and Sadie Silverton musical artists; Master Jack Funston, boy elocutionist, and the Sheridan Orchestra.

The ladies are well satisfied with the financial returns, for they will have a net balance of about $150.

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS

Don Ellsworth's wife, formerly the famous actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears, leaving no trace. Dr. Cavanaugh, the criminal psychologist, learns that their married life has been unhappy.

Peter Piper, Herald reporter, tries to get an interview with Dr. Cavanaugh. Instead he meets Barbara Cavanaugh, the attractive daughter, and finds that she was engaged to Don Ellsworth before his marriage.

An unidentified body is found in the tule marsh outside the city. It has been burned by a fire in the marsh until it is entirely unrecognizable except for the fact that it is a woman. Dr. Cavanaugh is called in to help with the identification. The only thing by which the body can be identified is a patch of scalp with some hair attached. Dr. Cavanaugh takes this home with him and tells Don of his latest discovery.

"Language is an absurdly ambiguous instrument of communication," the doctor meditated, completely ignoring Don's agitation. "For example, that last sentence of yours. On the face of it, it might mean that you are indifferent to all else but Sheila's welfare and her possible danger—or it might mean that you hoped above all things that Sheila would not be found. Naturally, I assume that the first interpretation is the correct one."

"I don't know what I meant!" Don's hand was flung out in a gesture of angry impatience. "I don't feel much like entering on a discussion of grammar."

"Oh, but it sometimes matters quite a lot—quite a lot," the doctor murmured.

"Well, I'm not in a mood to choose my words very carefully. Suppose Sheila never shows up—simply drops out of sight altogether. I'd still be legally tied to her, wouldn't I? Unless—" a faint gleam of eagerness shone in Don's hollow eyes—"unless I could get a divorce on grounds of desertion. Do you think I could?"

"No doubt. But that's not the particular bridge we are crossing at the moment." Dr. Cavanaugh ruthlessly pulled him back.

"Well, then, suppose she came back—with all this turmoil there's been in the papers. I'd be in a sweet position then, wouldn't I? Things would be as bad as before—no, a hundred times worse, because the one thing I put my neck into the noose to secure, decency and dignity would be gone. What a life!" His lips twisted in what was almost a grimace. "I wish I'd been blind and deaf before I ever met that woman!"

Dr. Cavanaugh listened calmly to this jerky, spasmodic outburst, his face as expressionless as that of an image of Buddha. He waited without interruption until Don relapsed into a silence as abrupt as his speech.

"There's still another possibility," he said then. "A cutting of all Gordian knots. I don't say that it is more than a possibility. But I wouldn't be too sure, if I were you, that the activities of our friends, the police, as outlined in tonight's paper, can be disregarded."

With an obvious effort at self control, the young man forced his hands to stop their nervous clenching and unclenching and lie tightly closed in his lap. Only the involuntary twitching of a muscle at the corner of his eyes betrayed an agitation beyond the power of his will to conceal.

"I don't understand what you're driving at," he said in a low, breathless voice. "You said—the body they found in the marsh couldn't be identified."

"You came here not long ago and asked me to help you," Dr. Cavanaugh went on, as if Ellsworth had not spoken. "But the positions are reversed—I am now about to ask you to help me. I said that the body I mentioned was unrecognizable. It was—except for a tiny patch of scalp." Without raising its tone, the doctor's voice took on a new emphasis. "That body belonged to a woman about forty years of age. She patronized an expensive beauty parlor, where she had recently had what I believe is called a marcel. She was in the habit of using black narcisse perfume. She was fair of skin with brown eyes and vivid color that accompany this particular pigmentation. Her hair, naturally red, was darkened to auburn by the use of henna, and was worn long—in fact, rather surprisingly in this day, it had never been cut. It was thick and luxuriant, and she took an extreme pride in it. So much for what the microscope tells us.

"From measurements taken of the body itself—Camberwell of the identification bureau was kind enough to supply me with the figures over the telephone (I have not seen it myself)—we are safe in saying that this woman of expensive tastes which she was able to gratify, and a somewhat overweening consciousness of her personal appearance was rather tall—five feet seven inches. Naturally, she would have been of the opulent, deep-bosomed tpye. But she kept herself trained down to the fashionable slenderness. The articulation of the bones, particularly of the feet, indicate that she was trained in dancing. The formation of the roof of the mouth makes it probable that she was a singer—though she had not taken her singing very seriously of late, as stains on the teeth show her to have been an excessive smoker of strong cigarettes. Does all this convey anything to you?"

The face in the chair opposite might have been carved out of ivory-yellow white, with burnt-out coals for eyes. Don cleared his throat and ran the tip of his tongue across dry lips.

"You mean—it's Sheila," his voice was a rasping whisper.

"I mean it was someone who at least bore a general resemblance to Mrs. Ellsworth," Dr. Cavanaugh amended imperturbably. "But there is a way of finding out whether we are dealing with a resemblance or identity. Under the microscope the cell structure of the hair is as individual as the whorls that make up the pattern of finger prints. I have the hair of the woman who was found in the marsh. Will you bring me for comparison a hair belonging to Mrs. Ellsworth—from her brushes, her gown—any place where you can be sure the hair was hers? That ought to be easy."

For a moment the face before him did not change. Only that twitching eye muscle marred its absolute rigidity. The teeth were clenched so tightly that the line of the jaw stood out sharply. Then a dark flush, almost purple, flooded his cheeks and mounted until even the eyes were blood-shot. His fist crashed suddenly on the arm of his chair.

"I'll be damned if I will!" he shouted.

CHAPTER XIII.

With a sinlge movement that was like the spring of a puma, Don Ellsworth catapulted from his chair. His toe caught in the fringe of a rug. He half stumbled, but recovered his balance blindly, hardly noticing the check to his progress. In another instant he had flung himself from the room, his hat forgotten on the table, and the outer door crashed shut, propelled by the backward fling of his arm.

Dr. Cavanaugh's hand paused a fraction of a second, his cigar half way to his lips. Then the interrupted movement was completed, as deliberately as it had been begun. He had not risen to intercept Don, and he made no effort now to follow him.

"Hm!" The sound was half a hum, half a gentle sigh. It was Dr. Cavanaugh's equivalent of half a dozen excited ejaculations. He settled his thick shoulders against the pillows of the chaise-longue. But there were no more smoke rings. Instead, he drew from his inner pocket a small leather bound notebook, propped its lower edge against his arching middle, and proceeded to make notations in almost microscopic handwriting, first on one, then the other, of the two pages spread open before him.

"Hm!" he murmured again, like a gigantic bumble bee. "On the one hand we have a young man of undisciplined emotions, subject to gusts of rage which he has never been taught to control. Unused to delaying his reaction to any impulse. Caught by the tremendous vitality and charm of the dazzling Sheila O'Shay. But the attraction evidently soon spent. Query: Why did he marry her?" The query was underlined in the little notebook, and further marked by a star in the margin. "Corollary: Why did she marry him? Money, probably. But did she capture him before he had time to get back his emotional balance, or had she some means of forcing him to it? Not inferable from present data. Leave that out—confuses the present problem." Dr. Cavanaugh accordingly drew a line lightly through the "corollary." He carefully deposited an inch of white cigar ash in the tray, allowing the noteboo kto flop forward, then adjusted it at its former angle.

"In general, people will subconsciously choose words that tell the truth, even when it is not the truth they mean at the moment. A great little master of the double entendre, the subconscious is!" he mused. "Let's see. Don did not say that he wanted his wife back—he said that he wanted to be rescued from the undesirable publicity aroused by her disappearance. That's quite different. His anxiety was not for her, but for the effect on himself. He resented the interference of Mrs. Kane, and of the police. He didn't care what we found—'so long as it wasn't Sheila.'

"On the other hand"—Dr. Cavanaugh's minute scratchings were now scrawled on the opposite side of the facing pages—"His own subconscious desire to have his wife out of the way might have a powerfully disturbing effect when that unexpressed wish was suddenly fulfilled. There is also his extreme dislike, amounting almost to a phobia, of publicity, by which he feels that he has been victimized. The impulse to run away from an intolerable situation—all the more intolerable if it were to involve him in a sensational murder case—may have become overpowering; and so he ran away, without even considering the futility of the escape, nor its consequences. One thing is certain: Don Ellsworth would not be capable of any carefully devised plot. Unless we have to do with a person clever enough to convey the impression purposely, the whole evidence—what there is to it—does not point to premeditation either on the part of Mrs. Ellsworth, if she actually left of her own will, nor of her murderer, if she was killed. Ellsworth might conceivably act with extreme rashness, follow an instinctive immediate course of self protection, and then wake up to find himself in a mess, utterly helpless both by temperament and training to devise any sort of scheme to extricate himself."

Then a dark flush, almost purple, flooded his cheeks and mounted until even the eyes were bloodshot.

The cruelest lies are often told in silence.—R. L. Stevenson.

Too Much Weight

They were talking earnestly in the club room.

"Jove," said Higgs, "it was a weight off my mind when my wife told me she could cook."

"That's a change these days," said his friend. "And I suppose she really can cook?"

Higgs grimaced.

"No; the weight is on my stomach now," he replied.

The ADVENTURES of CAPTAIN JIMMY and his Dog SCOTTIE

What came before: After many adventures flying over China, Captain Jimmy agrees to fly General Lu to Japan. Running out of gasoline, he is forced to land on a lonely island.

There we were on that lonely little island; General Lu, the Chinese War Lord; Ching, his faithful servant, Fu the interpreter, Scottie and myself.

Rank and fortune suddenly counted for nothing. We were four hungry men—and a dog. Even General Lu's huge fortune, which we had stored away in our plane would not buy us a square meal.

The sea stretched away on every side like a flat mirror. The island went back four or five miles and ended. Above, the sky rose in a huge empty dome.

"Look here General," I said, "you and I are going rabbit hunting."

After that we tramped and hunted for hours, but never found a rabbit. In fact, we never even saw a mouse or a squirrel. The island rose to a peak near the spot where we had landed. The remainder was covered with stunted brush, often burned brown from the sun's heat. The rocks were blazing hot.

More serious than the lack of game, was the absence of water. Hour after hour, we searched for fresh water, but not a drop could we find. As we walked home over a flat sandy place, General Lu suddenly gripped my arm.

In the sand was a long, streaky, track, as if you had drawn a stick along. At first I could make nothing of it, then it suddenly occured to me that the mark was made by the tail of some animal, while the sand was wet during the rain of the night before. A lizard, or a turtle might have made it, but because the track appeared so far inland, it seemed probable that the creature was heading for some known water hole.

The track faded out after a few hundred yards, but soon another appeared. This in turn faded out.

We continued to follow in the direction the last track had pointed. Some large sand dunes rose in front of us. Climbing to the top of these, a very small, green valley appeared below.

Hurrying down, we found a deep rocky dell, from which came the distinct tinkle of water. Out from between two rocks poured a clear, cold spring!

General Lu drank so much, I really feared he would drown. Then we filled our water can and walked back to the plane, where Chung and the interpreter anxiously waited for us.

Meanwhile Scottie had gone on up the beach, and was busily digging the sand, and half growling to himself. The sand flew in all directions. Then he came racing back to me. Sure enough, he had found a nest of eggs buried in the sand. His rough methods had ruined some of them, but there were almost a dozen left.

I put the good ones in my helmet and back to the boys I went. The Chinese seemed delighted, and sat about baking them by the fire. Well, perhaps I am not a very good judge, but to me those eggs surely seemed terrible.

The interpreter looked at me questioningly. "No likee eggs?"

Then he pointed meaningly to the sea. "Flish, he go mightee finee—easy catchee, huh"

To a Returned Traveler

(From The Spectator)

Wise with your wanderings, you thought to find
Us somehow altered, too; but in amaze
Found us contented with the very ways,
The thoughts, the projects that you left behind.
And in our littleness we were so blind.
Unshaken by the splendor of your days
We talked of them as of a finished phase,
And then forgot, nor knew we were unkind.

Then, in the grip of swift reaction held,
You kept yourself apart; we thought you strange,
Unconscious of the worlds dividing us.
We did not guess how fiercely you rebelled
To think that you must take in poor exchange
Our hobby horses for your Pegasus

Violets

(From the Observation)

He was ragged—as tramps are,
Perhaps he was hungry
As he knelt in the cinders of the bank;
Then, as the great train slackened speed;
I saw a flash of purple in his hand,
And in the gaunt, unshaven face—upturned,
I saw and knew;
A tramp may also love the spring—
And feel himself a gentleman
Picking flowers in his garden—
A little patch of violets by the track.
—Caroline Lawrence Dier, in "Out of the West."

One Smoked

The two tourists had spent six hours climbing the great volcano. At last, weary of limb, the reached the top and approached as near as they dared to the crater. It was smoking ominously.

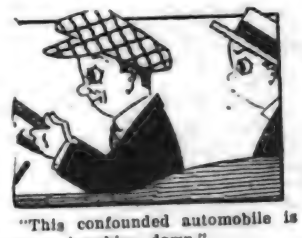
One of them sat down to admire the view, but the other turned his back on it.

"Look here," he said suddenly, "let's go down and get back to the hotel. I can't stand watching that thing any longer."

"What!" ejaculated his friend. "We've climbed right up here, and as soon as we reach our objective you want to go back again." He paused and looked anxiously at his friend. "It isn't that you're afraid, is it?" he added.

"No," came from the other tourist. "It's only that I can't endure watching that crater smoke after I've found that I've left my tobacco at the hotel."

He Got the Job



The senior partner had dismissed his office-boy for untidiness and general slackness, and was interviewing in turn a waiting line of some twenty applicants.

Presently a smart looking youth was ushered in.

"Well, my boy," said the senior partner, "I am looking for someone who is smart and tidy. He must look round the office and note down little things that have to be done. The office must look clean and tidy. I'm fed up with boys that never see anything that requires doing, and I'm determined to have an office boy with some idea of keeping things as they should be kept. You understand me, of course?"

The boy nodded briskly.

"Yes, sir, certainly," he said. "Shall I begin by putting your tie straight?"

"This confounded automobile is always breaking down."

"Oh, you'll get over it."

"I'm not thinking about that. Getting under it is what bothers me."

Norway's Role in Greenland Stretches Far Back in History

The secret action of a party of Norwegian hunters in planting their national flag over a section of Eastern Greenland and claiming the area in the name of their sovereign has raised the question as to the ownership of that vast frozen plateau. While Greenland is considered to be Danish territory, it was discovered by Norsemen and was Norwegian territory in early days. For 400 years Norway and Denmark were united, and Greenland was a colony belonging to both. Also, Norwegian expeditions have made the section claimed by the hunters a base of operations, and have thus come to look upon it as theirs by right of occupation.

The first record of Greenland dates from the beginning of the tenth century, when the Norwegian Gunnbjorn is reported to have seen a land to the west of Iceland, believed to have been the southern tip of the country. In 982 another Norwegian, Eric the Red (whose son, Leif Ericson, is believed to have reached America in 1000), sailed from Iceland, discovered the land described by Gunnbjorn and spent three years exploring it.

Then followed the colonization period by Norwegians. The settlers established churches and monasteries, and, until the middle of the thirteenth century, had their own republican government. About 1260 they were induced to swear allegiance to the King of Norway.

For centuries the history of Greenland follows the history of Norway and Denmark. In 1397 these two powers, with Sweden, were united under a single King, Erik of Pomerania. In this union the Norwegians were dominated by the Danes, who seized the high administrative posts in the government. At length, after the Napoleonic wars, in 1814, the union was dissolved. Greenland, Iceland and the Farces were not mentioned in the dissolution agreement, an dthey were all kept by Denmark.

In the meantime the relationship between the Greenland colonies and their motherland, Norway, had gradually faded away. The last ship known to have visited the old Norse colonies in Greenland returned to Norway in 1410. With no support from home the colonies decayed rapidly, the settlers either being destroyed by the Eskimos or absorbed by intermarriage with them. When John Davis visited Greenland in 1585 there was no sign of any people there except the Eskimos.

The west coast of Greenland is designated as Danish Greenland, the eastern part being more under Norwegian influence. Its trade is a monopoly of the Danish Crown, dating from 1774, and for purposes of government and trade the west coast is divided into two inspectorates, southern and northern. Each inspectorate is divided into districts, these again comprising about sixty trading settlements which dot the coast for a distance of 1,000 miles. These little colonies consist of merely a few houses. There are only a few hundred Europeans in Greenland, and probably about 12,000 Eskimos.

Hat Pins Stage Comeback in Hats

Modern Chapeau Perches Half on and Half off the Head

New York.—Hat pins—mother will remember them—are coming back in the wake of new hat styles.

Bobbed hair put hat pins on the shelf; bobbed hair and the fact that the long points were invariably jabbing people. New millinery is bringing them back.

The pins will be of junior size: short and useful for anchoring the new little hats. Coiffures will undergo changes, too. Women either will permit their hair to grow or use tricky false curls and even switches.

The modern bonnets "roost" half on, half off the head.

French milliners have introduced a band of ribbon which ties across the left side of the head. American designers have employed an elastic bandeau to keep the hat on.

The ribbon and the bandeau, women have found are a nuisance. In lieu of something to keep the bonnet clamped tight women are renewing their friendship with the hat pin.

The new hats are reminiscent of the days of Empress Eugenie, wife of Napoleon III.

World Wide Famine Banished Century Ago

Chicago—The danger of world-wide famine was removed 100 years ago this month.

In a Virginia wheat field in July, 1831, Cyrus Hall McCormick looked back on the first strip of grain ever successfully cut with a mechanical reaper. That first clean swathe of wheat served notice on the world that the era of mechanized agriculture had dawned.

Economists have credited the reapers with even greater service to humanity, declaring that it has banished forever the fear of a world-wide food shortage, a fear that had existed since Biblical times. Now, far from fearing a shortage of grain, the nations are troubled with grain surpluses.

The surpluses are due, economists say, to the wide use of motorized implements. McCormick's reaper was capable of only eight or ten acres of grain a day. After that there still remained the problem of threshing. Today huge combines used in the great grain belts harvest and thresh 30 to 40 acres a day.

English Scenes

The most beautiful country I have ever seen is England. It has not the majesty of Switzerland, but it has everything else. Almost exactly the same size as North Carolina or Michigan, it has an amazing variety of scenery and climate. As one approaches it from the Atlantic, the cliffs of Cornwall look austere and forbidding; but there the roses bloom in January. Stand almost anywhere in Devonshire, and you see the meadows leaning on the sky; they are separated from one another not by stone fences, or by split-rails or barbed wire, but by hedgerows in self-conscious bloom; Salisbury Plain is like western Nebraska, a far horizon; the misty slopes of the Sussex downs reach dreamily to the sea. Every few miles in England the topography changes; could anything be more different than those different counties?

But we do not go to England for natural scenery, though we might well do so; we go because in England every scene is, in the phrase of Henry James, "peopled with recognitions." The things that we have seen in imagination we see in reality; there they are! . . . As we looked from the top of the hill down into Canterbury, the setting sun glorified the Cathedral; as we stood on the most solemn promonetory in England, Land's End, and gazed into the yeasty waves at the foot of the cliff, I remembered Tennyson's lines:

One showed an iron coast and angry waves.
You seemed to hear them climb and fall
And roar rock-thwarted under bellowing caves,
Beneath the windy wall.

—William Lyon Phelps, in "Essays on Things."

Mr. Knagg—"Don't you know that? Any fool could tell you."

Mrs. Knagg—"That's why I asked you, dear."

Sunday School Lesson

August 2. Lesson V—Philip's Missionary Labors—Acts 8: 26-40. Golden Text—Therefore they that were scattered abroad went every where preaching the word.—Acts 8:4.

ANALYSIS

I. BREAKING THROUGH BARRIERS OF HATRED, Acts 8: 5-13.

II. THE WORK CONSOLIDATED, Acts 8: 14-25.

III. BREAKING THROUGH BARRIERS OF RACE, Acts 8: 26-40.

INTRODUCTION—Philip was the forerunner of the larger general mission to the Gentiles. Appointed one of the Seven, his consecrated gifts soon made him a missionary. His sudden and spontaneous movements under the immediate impulse of the Spirit remind one of the Old Testament prophets. But his true inspiration was shown in the daring insight which led him to break through the barriers of hatred and Jewish limitations. He is the true predecessor of Paul.

I. BREAKING THROUGH BARRIERS OF HATRED, Acts 8: 5-13.

Imagine a Canadian evangelist going to conduct a mission in Berlin immediately after the War! Such was Philip going to the Samaritans. Jews and Samaritans hated each other. Due to the intermingling of races after the Assyrian capture of Samaria in B.C. 722 the Samaritans were of mixed blood, part Jew, part Assyrian. On this account and because of their corrupted Jehovah worship, the Jews, when rebuilding the temple after the exile, refused Samaritan assistance. "Ye have nothing to do with us," they said, Ezra 4: 3. The Samaritans responded with an open and implacable hatred. Philip's missionary zeal, however, could not pass them by. He preached Christ to them.

II. THE WORK CONSOLIDATED, Acts 8: 14-25.

Reports of Philip's activities soon reached the apostles in Jerusalem, v. 14. They recognized at once the importance of this new departure. They sent Peter and John to investigate. On seeing the converts, the visitors were convinced that the work was of God. Until now, no signs had accompanied Philip's work such as had occurred at Pentecost. Now, however, at the reception service conducted by the apostles, there was a pronounced emotional disturbance. It was still considered that the coming of the Spirit must be accompanied by these external evidences. Simon was much impressed. His money-loving soul saw the financial possibilities. He did not realize, like many a one since his day, that spiritual blessings cannot be bartered, v. 20. He thought that money could do anything. With an insight that is still needed, Peter denounced the suggestion that a man's money entitles him to prominence or power within the church. His rebuke brought about in Simon, not repentance, but a fear of consequences.

III. BREAKING THROUGH BARRIERS OF RACE, Acts 8: 26-40.

When the apostles come to Samaria, Philip's pioneering zeal, or the voice of God in a missionary's soul impelled him to set out for new fields, while they consolidated the work. Something, he knew it was God, told him to go south toward the Jerusalem-Gaza road.

Philip from Samaria, the Ethiopian treasurer from Jerusalem, each unknown to the other, were soon to meet. The treasurer of Candace, Queen of Ethiopia ("Candaca" was a royal title like "Cæsar" in Rome, "Kaiser" in Germany), had failed to find spiritual satisfaction in the religion of his own country. In some way he had come in contact with Judaism and its sacred scriptures. He had traveled the twelve hundred miles from Ethiopia to Jerusalem, and now, still perplexed and unsatisfied, he was making his way homeward.

When, on the main highway, the Ethiopian eunuch's retinue came up to Philip, "the Spirit said unto Philip, Go near, join thself to this chariot," v. 29. That is the Bible way of saying that Philip, ever seeking an opportunity to preach Christ, and hearing this "foreigner" reading what he evidently did not fully understand, said to himself, "I must help that man, whoever he is." Last Christmas a man sent a donation to a needy community. The letter acknowledging the gift read: "God surely spoke to you." Divine suggestions are always coming to people whose lives are the channels of God's spirit.

As a result of Philip's explanations the eunuch found Christ. Receiving him into the church by baptism, Philip laid down only one condition, faith in Jesus Christ, the Son of God, v. 37. He erected no artificial barriers between a man and his God. He required only one "fundamental"—faith in Jesus Christ as a personal Saviour.

David Livingstone, haunted by the thought of thousands of villages yet untouched by white man, must press on through African forests. So, too, Philip, his work with the eunuch completed, left him to hurry north to Azotus, twenty miles off. The language which describes his departure is evidently suggested by Old Testament models, for example, Elijah, 1 Kings 18: 12; 2 Kings 2: 16.

All great and honourable actions are accompanied by great difficulties and must be undertaken and overcome with answerable courage.—Punshon.

Did This Ever Happen to You?

It was early morning and Mrs. Smith happening to look out of her window while she was dressing, saw her neighbor, Mrs. Humber, who was not very strong, rush out of her home and run over to the house acros the road. Very soon the young married man came running out as hard as he could come. Half way over he turned around inquiringly, as though for guidance where to go, when she pointed to her back door, into which the young man then ran with redoubled energy. Mrs. Humber came back too, but slower, as though tired out.

"Oh, Mary," called Mrs. Smith to her daughter, in another room, "I'm sure there is something wrong over at Humber's. Mrs. Humber rushed out of her door just now and went over to Maitland's, across the street, and that young fellow who is visiting there came over as fast as he could into Humber's house. There must be something the matter."

Mrs. Smith finished dressing, alternately trying to think nothing was the matter and then pondering whether she should go to find out what was wrong, for it would be so foolish to go if nothing were the matter.

But then it all seemed so still around there. "Perhaps Mr. Humber is hurt," she thought. "No, there he is away back in the field ploughing, so it isn't that, but then a hundred other things might have happened."

At last she just had to phone over. She hardly knew what to expect. If there was no answer it would mean something was really the matter, or she half expected to hear a stranger's voice.

In due time the phone was answered. "Hello," said the cheerful, familiar voice of Mrs. Humber.

"Is that You, Mrs. Humber? Are you all right?" said an anxious voice.

"Yes, I'm all right. Why do you ask?" she said.

A little mortified, Mrs. Smith told her what she had seen and the conclusion she had come to.

"Well, now, it would look like that," laughed Mrs. Humber. "But what really happened was only a phone call. Someone phoned long distance for the young chap across the road and I hurried over to tell him, while the line was being held, that was all."

Doesn't this remind one a little of the ways of gossip? In this case the actions were prompted by neighborly interest and friendship, but gossip very often isn't. Gossip can so easily fly from house to house, becoming more and more magnified, and in nearly every case, though it seems like circumstantial evidence, the story carried is found to be very often wrong.

Often, too, it depends on who receives the news as to what construction will be put on it, and sometimes the conclusion drawn is without intention unkind, because of lack of knowledge of the circumstances. So perhaps the best way after all is just to pass no judgment at all, to be safe. Don't you think so?

Twilight Hour Story
Chicks and Other Little Friends

Wasn't that funny when Topsy, the barn cat, stole one of Fluffy's kittens and carried it off to the barn in her mouth? And do you know, Fluffy didn't seem to care because she took it away. You see, they were good friends, and Fluffy knew Topsy could take good care of that little kittie, for she knew all about babies since she had had so many of them. So Fluffy just sat there and blinked her eyes and purred.

"I guess we better put them in their new box now and set it away off in a dark corner in the closet," said Mamma Lady. Just as she said that, however, a big dark shape stood at the door. Who do you think it was? Well, it was Rover, and he wanted in. He never waited very long either, if he wanted in, for he knew how to open the door with his paw by just digging his claw in a certain place on the screen and pulling it open. Well, this morning he did that just the same as he always did, and came in wagging his tail and shaking his head. You know the way dogs do when they say "good morning."

But say, before he knew what was happening to him he had a good scratch on his nose. He was surprised. Then that wasn't enough, it seemed, for something jumped on his back and was digging claws into his fur. Can you imagine it? It was Fluffy doing all that to Rover. It hurt, too, so that he thought he better get out of the kitchen as fast as he could; and that was what Fluffy wanted him to do, too. Whoever would have thought she would have been as cross as all that?

After he was gone and she was sure he was really gone she came back, and you should have seen her eyes! They were blazing just like fire and they were big and round too. But her tail—say, it was big before, but now it was nearly as big as all the rest of her body put together. Her whole body was bigger too, because her fur stood straight out all over her, so she looked like a porcupine.

It all looked so funny, everyone in the room couldn't help laughing. "Poor old Rover," said Mamma Lady. "He came at a wrong time. Fluffy will soon get used to him when she finds he wouldn't hurt her kittens for anything."

But what did Rover think about it?

The Public

The public man needs but one patron, viz., the lucky moment. It is astonishing how capricious, how sudden are the changes in value of a public man. All depends upon whether the public want or believe they want the man. And that is a question upon which the public do not know their own minds a week before nor do they always keep in the same mind, when made up, for a week together. If they do not want the man,, if he do not hit the taste nor respond to the exigencies of the time, whatever his eloquence, his abilities, his virtues, they push him aside or cry him down. Is he wanted? Does the mirror of the moment reflect his image? That mirror is an intense magnifier, his proportions swell, they become gigantic.

Paris Reports Drop In Tourist Trade

Paris. — Directors of tourist agencies, here in connection with the conference of transatlantic steamship companies, said recently that there is no use denying that this year's tourist season is a failure. One of them said that his business so far is 80 per cent. less than it was last year.

An agreement was expected in the conference regarding proposed reductions of transatlantic steamship fares.

The popularity of comfortable one-class liners was advanced as a reason for converting all but the biggest and fastest liners into cabin class steamers. This consideration was expected to weigh heavily in favor of maintaining approximately the present rates for first class accommodations in the fastest liners. British companies, it was reported, continue to favor at least a 25 per cent. cut in first class rates.

Here and There

"What could we farmers hope to accomplish without our railways?" asked a Kentucky agriculturist recently. He added that no agency had contributed more to the prosperity of the farmer than the railways.

"I have never yet found any place where the salmon fishing could compare with New Brunswick," said Arthur Train, well known novelist, speaking at a camp dinner given in his honor recently by the New Brunswick Tourist Travel Bureau.

Encouragement came to western Canada's farmers and agriculturists with the return to normal temperatures and varying rainfall of mid-July. In the drought areas of Manitoba and Saskatchewan and to a less extent in Alberta very great benefit has been felt.

Authentic rainbow trout weighing 7½ lbs. were taken recently in the French River six miles below the bungalow camp, the first ever caught there according to the oldest guide. It was caught by E. A. Farintosh, of New York, a yearly guest at the camp.

Since the split up of Canadian Pacific Railway common stock into four for one, this issue has taken on great popularity with the general run of investors. Between September and June 1931, the number of these increased from 21,186 to 34,872, an increase of 13,686.

Over 250 members from Rameses Temple, Toronto, went to Cleveland recently by Canadian Pacific special to attend the annual conclave and imperial council of the Ancient Arabic Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. This conclave was held last year in Toronto.

A great influx of tourists is coming into the Maritime Provinces this year, the chain of the Canadian Pacific hotels at Yarmouth, Digby and Kentville proving strong influences in promoting the traffic. The ten-day all-expense Canadian Pacific tour to the Toronto Exhibition next month is also drawing much attention in the Maritimes.

Grain exports from the port of Vancouver this year will probably exceed 75 million bushels. Up to June 4th wheat shipments amounted to 65,331,501 bushels. Accommodation for deep sea vessels has increased from 12 piers in 1920 to 24 piers at the present time and elevator capacity has increased from 1,240,000 bushels to 16,205,000 bushels.

An Indian Schoolboy's band of which the leader was also a schoolboy and in which the instruments were mouth organs, gazoos and other noise-makers was one of the features of Indian Park at Banff which opened July 21. This was counterbalanced by a septuagenarian Chief's Choir of 18 chiefs and ex-chiefs who rendered airs taught by the first western missionaries back in the 1860's long before the Canadian Pacific Railway penetrated the mountains.

Six First Aid championships and five second places fell to Canadian Pacific Railway teams across Canada according to the recent annual report of the St. John Ambulance Association. Of these, three firsts and one second were captured by the Railway's Montreal Police Team. The second was in the coveted Montizambert Trophy, representing the championship of Canada for all comers in which they were only five points behind the winners, Royal Canadian Army Medical Corps of Kingston, Ont.

Golf Is Golf From Coast To Coast

Golf has assumed such important proportions in the make-up of modern everyday life that it constitutes a very real phase of the activities of those who serve the public. The Canadian Pacific Railway is such a one and its train services to golf courses and established arrangements for guests at its many hotels to enjoy the game are the practical interpretation of its desire to maintain the traditions of 50 years of meeting the requirements of the Canadian people and their visitors. From coast to coast, excellent courses are available and where the company does not operate its own links, playing privileges at first-class clubs are granted. In the Maritimes, there are courses at St. Andrews-by-the-Sea, N.B.; Kentville, N.S.; Digby, N.S.; and Yarmouth, N.S. all in connection with the company's hotels. Quebec City has two fine courses, one club dating back to 1874. Montreal has the oldest club in Canada, the Royal Montreal, founded in 1873, which today boasts two championship 18-hole courses. Other Clubs are numerous and good. Toronto, too has many excellent links, including the Royal York Golf Club, where guests at the Royal York Hotel have playing privileges. Ontario abounds in courses, all along the Canadian Pacific's lines. Bungalow camps at French River and Kenora (Lake of the Woods) have sporty 9-hole courses for their patrons. Throughout the Prairie Provinces, golf is available at all the larger centres, while the Banff Springs Hotel Golf course is among the best in the country, in settings of unrivalled mountain scenery. It is the Mecca for golfers from all over Canada and the United States, to say nothing of the numerous overseas visitors who play it each summer. Vancouver and Victoria offer ready hospitality, the latter standing unique among Canadian golf centres, in that the game is played throughout the 12 months of the year, the annual mid-winter tournament for the E. W. Beatty Challenge Cup, run by the Canadian Pacific Railway, being an outstanding feature of the golf calendar.

Don't be a road hog!

The person who drives in the middle of the road at any speed, but especially the extremely slow driver, offers a silent insult to every other driver on the highway.

But this disregard of every rule of common courtesy is merely incidental.

The real offense of the Road Hog is that he forces others to risk life and limb. He obstructs the vision of those drivers behind him and makes them either drive at his speed or risk a head-on collision in passing him.

Probably no form of law-breaking on the highways causes directly or indirectly so varied a list of accidents as does middle-of-the-road driving.

Every man who drives a car helps to pay for the highways. Every motorist is entitled to use them safely.

Why deprive any man of his right?

Don't be a Road Hog.

Toronto's Wonderful Harbor

By J. H. BEAMISH

When Governor Simcoe in 1793 selected the north shore of Toronto Bay as the site of the new capital of the province of Upper Canada, he made an exceedingly happy choice, and the unusual developments of the past hundred and thirty-eight years have confirmed him as a statesman, possessed with a marvellous vision. But by far the greatest transformation in Toronto's waterfront has taken place in the past one and a half decades, as a result of the Toronto Harbour Commissioners' operations. Just here it may be noted that the present Toronto Harbour Commissioners were incorporated by Act of Parliament in 1912, providing for the appointment of five commissioners, three to be appointed by the Toronto City Council, and two by the Dominion Government, one of the latter being a nominee of the Board of Trade. Each commissioner holds office for three years.

Inspection Trip

Last Wednesday afternoon the writer, along with five hundred other guests had the privilege for two hours of enjoying on board the "Dalhousie City," on their annual inspection trip, a close-up view of the remarkable—yes, almost incredible—achievements of the commissioners in developing the harbour of the Port of Toronto. A competent announcer at the microphone, broadcasted interesting information from the time the "Dalhousie" steamed away from York St. wharf eastward to the turning basin in old Ashbridges Bay, back along the outer shore of Toronto Island to the Humber mouth till returning to the starting point. In limited space it is impossible to describe all the valuable information, disseminated from the "mike," and only a few of the outstanding facts are herewith recorded.

Enormous Capacity

Toronto Harbour can now accommodate vessels ranging from 5,000 to 15,000 tons. Its waterfront industrial areas have direct access to rail and water transportation. With the completion of the Welland Ship Canal, this year the largest Upper Lake vessels will reach Toronto Harbour. Hydro-Electric power is available at cost along with free inter-switching on rail sidings.

$33,000,000 Investment

Sixty-nine firms have located in the industrial areas with an investment totalling over 33 million dollars. These properties were covered by water, and were non-revenue producing in 1915.

The assessed value of the occupied harbour properties has increased from 2 million dollars in 1912, to over 19 million dollars in 1930, and the revenue accruing to the city during this period totals $3,920,127.

The western waterfront, with its many miles of sea walls, has the famous Sunnyside Amusement Area and Exhibition Park, one of the finest fair grounds in the world.

The Eastern Harbour Terminals is a district created for manufacturers and is located immediately east of and adjoining the inner harbour. In this district are located five of the leading oil companies operating in Canada, two of which have refineries totalling a daily output of 350,000 gallons of refined products, and with a combined storage capacity of 40 million gallons of crude oil, fuel oil and gasoline.

A ship canal 6,800 feet long and 400 feet wide extends through the centre of this district, terminating in a turning basin 1,100 feet square. Over this channel an immense lift-bridge stretches, allowing motor and other traffic to cross. This bridge, a monument of engineering skill, cost $466,000.00.

Reclaim Three Square Miles

What an astounding transformation! Only twenty years ago nearly three square miles—2,000 acres—then of waste marsh lands and water, are now occupied by sites of the Toronto Harbour Industrial Areas, with miles of wide paved streets, railway tracks, concrete wharves and massive buildings.

Toronto is the first city on the North American Continent to combine park and recreational features with harbour, industrial and commercial development.

Expended $40,000,000

The Harbour Commissioners have already expended 40 million dollars. They operated life-saving and police patrol service, daily patrols of the water front being maintained throughout the year, and from the opening to the close of the navigation a 24-hour look-out is in force. Life guards supervise the bathing beaches and fire fighting tugs are almost instantly on the job when an S.O.S. call is sent out. The commissioners are Messrs. J. E. Ganong, chairman; G. W. Porter, B. J. Miller and Thomas Rennie. Brig-Gen. J. G. Langton is general manager and secretary.

Invitations were issued to prominent members of the York Pioneer and Historical Society, Board of Trade, Business Men's Association and out-of-town teachers attending summer courses in Toronto. Brig.-Gen. Langton, Levi Annis, President of the York Pioneers, Dr. James L. Hughes, Thomas McGillicuddy, and N. F. Caswell were among the party, and contributed to making the outing a success.

GRANT FLEMING, M.D. — ASSOCIATE SECRETARY

FIT EVERY DAY

In our effort to prevent disease, we sometimes forget or overlook that what we are seeking to attain is a condition of health, or to be physically and mentally fit every day of our lives.

No one wants to be ill; the suffering that accompanies disease is an experience that we prefer not to go through. The damage done to the bodies of those who recover may become a more or less permanent handicap throughout life. There are a large number of persons, who are not suffering from any actual disease, but who certainly do not enjoy good health.

Health is not a word which we can readily define. The person who has health is certainly free from disease but, in addition, he enjoys that sense of well being that comes as the result of the working in perfect harmony of all parts of the body.

There is no good reason why most of us should not enjoy health every day. Healthy days should not be the exception, they should be the rule. We can enjoy health every day providing we are willing to make the necessary effort in this direction.

It has been stated that public health is purchasable. This means that where people are willing to supply the money required through taxation, they can purchase, within limitations, protection from disease. Personal health cannot be purchased in such a simple, direct manner. Money cannot buy personal health. Health is to be found in a manner of living.

If you want health every day, if you want to enjoy life and to be as useful and happy as you can be, you must spend time not money, on your health. You must take the time necessary from work to get out of doors to play. You must take the time required to get the rest and sleep which your body needs. In addition, you must be prepared to let your intelligence guide you as to the foods you should eat and with regard to your habits of life.

To live healthfully does not mean to live a restricted, uninteresting life. It may mean that you must get up half an hour earlier so that you have time to walk to the office and thus secure the exercise and fresh air which you need. It may mean too, that you have to cut down a bit on some food and make sure that fresh fruits and green vegetables are part of your daily diet.

It is just as easy and pleasant to follow the simple rules of healthy living as it is to live otherwise. The results gained make it well worth while to do so. These results are more years of health, more years of efficiency, more days when you feel the joy of living, greater happiness through better work and service to others.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

FEAR RADIAL CLOSING FINAL

Passengers on the C.N.R. radial, running between Guelph and Toronto, fear that the decision to cease operating this division of the C.N.R., is final for all tickets being issued bear information that they are good until August 15th only.

People immediately east and west of Georgetown, who have been in the habit of using the radial line to shop in that town, realize that, if they have the convenience of the bus line on the No. 7 highway, it will mean a higher charge for transportation. Georgetown merchants realize on their part that a certain percentage of business will be cut off when the radial line is discontinued. If customers have to motor, they will go a little farther to reach the larger centres, it is feared.

For some time, a special car has been run west to Meadowvale daily, except Sundays, to accommodate children attending Islington and Mimico High Schools. A number of Churchville, Huttonville and Norval children have been attending Georgetown High School. Residents of Churchville and Huttonville said that a number of local men are working in Brampton, and woud be willing to provide transportation for school children, working out a schedule for dividing the service. Norval childen could walk in fine weather or use the bus lines on the highway. Children from Meadowvale south could be accommoated at Port Credit by establishing a bus line to cover that area.

The time was when large quantities of freight and farm produce from the area served by the radial line was sent to the Toronto markets by the electric road. Eggs, fruit and vegetables, milk, cream, potatoes and especially strawberries went daily from stations along the line. That business is practically wiped out today by the transport trucks and the individually-owned trucks of the growers, while goods from Toronto to rural storekeepers come by motor also.

LET US SMILE

Maid—I am afraid I must leave you, ma'am.

Mistress—But you only came yesterday.

Maid—Well, I can see you don't trust me.

Mistress—Why, I gave you the key of the cellar, of my jewel case, of master's desk.

Maid—Yes, ma'am, but none of them fit.

P. & D. Regiment in Camp 3 Days

The Peel and Dufferin Regiment arrived in Streetsville on Saturday and set up their camp on the Fair Grounds, for a three-day's stay. There were about 160 officers and men. On Saturday evening the village softball team gave the soldiers a game which was very evenly contested.

Sunday morning, the Regiment lined up for church parade, when a religious service was conducted by Major Rev. H. P. Charters, Chaplain of the Regiment. The weather in the morning was not very pleasant, but that did not deter the soldiers. The Regiment was then inspected by Col. R. V. Conover, V.D. The Battalion Band, under the leadership of Major Buckle, about 30 strong, accompanied the regiment, and dispensed stirring music.

Sunday afternoon the Regiment marched up town, with their Band, and halted at the Soldiers' Memorial, where service was again conducted by the Rev. H. P. Charters, and the Regiment placed a wreath on the memorial, the placing being done by Councillor V. C. Johnston, in the absence of Reeve H. W. Hope, representing the Village Council. The last post was sounded by the Regimental Bugler, the Regiment reformed and marched back to the camp. There were many spectators.

In the evening, the Band entertained the Regiment and visitors with a concert of sacred music.

Monday morning the Regiment paraded again and were inspected by Major-General E. C. Ashton, C.M.G., by proxy, who found them in first-class condition, and was pleased with their appearance and performance.

After dinner on Monday, the Regiment broke camp and entered into a sham battle, on the Red Hill. This was quite an attraction for the village people and hundreds of them along with visitors were present to witness the performance, some of whom never saw soldiers in action before. One section gained the hill and put the others to flight, driving them far back into the field. At the sound of the bugle the battle was terminated, the officers met for parley, decided the terms of the armistice, and then left for their several headquarters.

Although there was a lot of shooting done on Monday afternoon, very few casualities occurred, and the number killed was a minus quantity.

The Commanding officer, Lt.-Col. C. M. Corkett, expressed his thanks to the people of Streetsville and his appreciation of their kindness to his regiment while in camp here and said he would like to bring his men back again for next year's camp, as he thought it was an ideal site for the purpose.

The citizens responded generally to the request to decorate their homes for the event, flags and other decorations adorned the streets and the old town assumed a real holiday appearance.

The white tents of the Regiment which dotted the green of the Fair Grounds, and the soldiers in their uniforms, made a pleasing spectacle.

The officers of the Regiment were visited by prominent military men from Toronto during the camp, who were delighted with the site, and suggested that the Regiment hold its camp here every year.

The Reeve and Council were invited to the Officers' Mess, on Sunday. Reeve Hope was unavoidably absent from town over the week-end, Councillor Hardy was indisposed; Sergeant John W. Drennan (Councillor) was present in his Military capacity and it was left for Councillors J. E. Bailey and V. C. Johnston, as civilians, to represent the village and, believe me, they held up their end at the dinner table and made up for the absent ones as well. A resident ex-reeve was also present.

Major C. M. Corkett was in command, the officers present being Majors H. L. Robson, Fitzgerald, R. W. Lent; Captains C. A. Hamilton, C. McMurchy, E. Gooderham, E. Serson, L. H. Brayley, A. G. Anderson, D. W. Stewart, N. L. Stewart; Lieutenants Black, D. Barclay, J. Drennan, D. E. Smith, C. Hutton, C. Heggie, Wansborough, Gordon, F. Justin, B. Needham.

During their stay the soldiers were given plenty of drilling.

The flag on the Memorial was flown during the visit of the Regiment.

HAS IT HAPPENED TO YOU? by P.C.1

Whenever I see the driver of a motor car beat a railway train to a crossing by a few feet, I can't help thinking of the pitcher that went to the well once too often . . . and broke.

If I could talk for just five minutes to every driver of a motor car I don't believe there would ever be another railway crossing accident.

Gee! the things I've seen when drivers tried to beat trains have cost me many a sleepless night.

Take my word for it there are enough unavoidable perils attached to driving a car without tempting Providence where the railway and highway meet.

Well, I'll be seeing you.

When a bee found its way into a car driven past by Mrs. George J. Deitel, of Buffalo, and stung Mrs. Deitel on the hand this resulted in the car swerving and sideswiping a westbound car driven by Gillespie Terry, of Toronto, which was thrown into the ditch at Port Credit, although its occupants escaped unhurt. Constable Robertson investigated and attached no blame to the driver of the eastbound car.

NORVAL

The second re-union was held at The Hostel, Norval, the home for British boys, last Friday and was attended by 250 boys, as well as many interested persons of different vocations. The arrangements for the event were made by Mr. Alexander McLaren and were complete in every way. Hon T. L. Kennedy, Minister of Agriculture, and Mrs. Kennedy; Col. F. H. and Mrs. Deacon took an active part in the proceedings and presented diplomas to 200 boys.

EXPLOITING OLD AGE PENSIONS

It is a regrettable fact that the old age pension act is being very badly exploited. Every few days we hear stories that are almost unbelievable. Such incidents as this are becoming too common. Mr. and Mrs. Blank, with a certain property or bank balance, decide to give it away to a son or daughter and then apply to get on the pension list.

If the people are thus going to exploit an act that was intended to relieve the unfortunate without means of support, it may have to be repealed, or at least modified.

It looks as if something is amiss in the manner of investigating applications. Probably independent investigations such as are used by the mothers' allowance board would give a more satisfactory service. At all events these powers should not be in the the hands of politicians, councillors, etc.—Creemore Star.

WON A SCHOLARSHIP

Last fall the five high girls in each County in the Province which held Household Science Judging Competitions, were the guests of the Ontario Department of Agriculture at the Royal Winter Fair. During the winter months an "Essay" was written on this trip and a two week' Short Course at Macdonald Institute, Guelph, or at Kemptville given the winners, Miss Florence Elliott of Malton, attending the course from this district. In April some sixty girls wrote on the examination set on the Royal Winter Fair Trip the results of which have just been made known. We congratulate Miss Florence Elliott on her standing of first place in this subdivision, Peel being with nine other counties.

Miss Elliott will receive a scholarship towards a two year course at Macdonald Institute, Guelph.

Water Measured At Niagara Falls

One of Steps Taken in Study of How Best to Preserve Its Scenic Beauty

New York.—The recently published press reports of the Special International Niagara Board—a body of eminent Canadian and United States engineers and landscapists—on how the scenic beauty of Niagara Falls can best be maintained gave only meagre details of how this interesting work was carried on. An essential part was measuring the water going over the falls.

The comparatively small amount and even distribution of the flow going over the American falls presented little difficulty to the board. A light rope was shot across from the New York mainland to Goat Island by means of a mortar, then a steel cable was hauled across and tightened and by the use of a carrier system provided with weights and meters the discharge figures were obtained from which the depth and rate of flow over the brink of the American falls were readily computed.

The depth and rate of flow over the brink of the Horseshoe falls presented a more serious problem and results were secured by means of floats. The floats were made of scantlings, so buoyed and weighted as to float perpendicularly with submerged lengths of from one foot to twelve feet, and having flagged tops that could be readily observed from the shore. These floats were taken out on the river above the rapids in motor boats and dropped into the water at definite points on a range line across the river. When a float was released the watchers on the shore recorded its progress by transit and stop-watch observations, aided by photographic and moving-picture records. By these methods the rate of flow of the float in each section was readily computed.

If a float went through its course upright, it was evident it did not touch bottom. Longer and longed floats were sent through until one dragged on the bottom. Then with the length of the float known and by noting the angle of inclination, it was possible to calculate the depth at that point. To secure records of the characteristics of the current in the rapids adjacent to the river banks near the falls, it was found necessary to shoot the floats from spring-guns on the banks.

The board also investigated the cause and characteristics of the bluish green color of the water at the brink and how this beautiful effect might be heightened by securing greater contrast with the foam curtains at the edges and shallower parts. hTe color phase is most effective when seen from across the gorge. As a result of the investigation the board determined that the conservative minimum depth of water on the crest of the falls, for maximum brilliance of color, is five feet.

An interesting feature of the work was the survey of the water surface in the rapids above the falls by photo-topographical methods and the development of a small scale relief map and model representing the water surface over the entire rapids. The model was made by the Topographical Survey of the Department of the Interior of Canada.

The engineers who compose the International Niagara Board are J. T. Johnston, C. E., director, Dominion Water Power and Hydrometric Bureau o fthe Department of the Interior, for Canada, and Major DeWitt C. Jones, Corps of Engineers, U.S. Army, for the United States. The members added to form the Special International Niagara Board were Dr. Charles Comsell, Deputy Minister, Department of Mines, for Canada, and Dr. J. Horace McFarland, past president of the American Civic Association and chairman of the Art Commission of Pennsylvania, for the United States.

Barley Ranks Third In Canada's Cereal Crops

Barley ranks third among the cereal crops of Canada in acreage and total yield and second in average yield per acre. Last year oats led in both total yield and in yield per acre; wheat came second in total yield and third in yield per acre, while barley came second in yield per acre and third in total yield. Barley is the hardiest of all cereals and can be grown through a greater range of climate than can any other. Its production dates from ancient times when it was used principally as an article of food. As the centuries progressed its uses became more varied and now its main consumption is in the production of beverages, though it still retains its uses as food both for man and beast.

A special report upon the production and uses of barley in Canada has recently been issued. In a survey of the production of this grain during the last decade it appears that the crop of 1930 was very little less than the highest of the period. The price, however, in 1930 was abnormally low. The largest yield of barley during the years 1926 to 1930 was in 1928, when it amounted to 136,391,400 bushels. The yield per acre in that year was 27.9. In 1930 the total yield was 135,150,200 bushels and the yield per acre 24.2 bushels. The weight per measured bushel throughout the five-year period varied from 47.04 pounds in 1928 to 47.31 pounds in 1929. The weight in 1930 was 47.22 pounds.

59 Killed in Month By Ontario Motors

Most of 857 Accidents Occurred in Daylight on Good Roads

Traffic Rules Violated

Toronto.—Motor traffic in Ontario took a toll of 59 lives last month, 16 of whom were children under 15 years of age, and injured 835, of whom 218 were children.

The report of the motor vehicles branch of the Department of Highaways, issued recently by J. P. Bickell, registrar, shows a total of 857 accidents during the month involving 1,286 cars. The majority of these occurred in daylight on good roads in clear non-skid weather and involved drivers described in the report as normal.

Nor in the main were the accidents due to disregard of the law by the drivers. Less than 50 per cent. of the cases, 343, are laid to violation of traffic regulations and of these only 97 to speeding, cutting in, passing on hills and curves or passing standing street cars.

Level crossing accidents, 10 out of 18 of which occurred at unguarded crossings, killed 11 victims and injured 13. Six crashes occurred at crossings guarded by automatic signals and two at points guarded by gates or a flag man.

Out of 1,286 cars involved in accidents during the month, 1,047 were reported in good condition and only 37 with defective brakes. Only 168 commercial vehicles, 18 taxicabs and seven buses figured in crashes as against a total of 1,030 passenger cars. Violations of the law recorded in 343 instances include 76 cases of drivers exceeding the speed limit, three of passing on a hill or curve and two of passing a standing street car. Sixteen motorists were convicted of cutting in and 98 drove off the roadway.

Twenty-one pedestrians were killed by cars during the month and 240 injured. Of this total, four fatalities and 112 injuries were cases of children knocked down while playing on the street.

More Prizes Offered for Wheat, Barley and Oat Seed

Registered and certified seeds have been given increased prominence in the sectional prize list of the Royal Winter Fair for November next. The competitions are to encourage the production and distribution in commercial quantities of superior seeds from crops that have been inspected in the field and which carry certification of inspection. The classes have been extended to cover sixteen seeds and seed grains. More prizes are offered than in 1930 for wheat, barley and oats. There are additions to the previous lists of peas, beans, mangels, swedes, potatoes, clovers, Alfalfa, grasses, corn, beets and onions. These are championships for the bread grains, peas, beans and potatoes and four valuable trophies are offered. In addition, there are national contests and exhibits for boys' and girls' agricultural clubs held under the direction of the Canadian Council on Boys' and Girls' work.

Accident Prevention

Three Rivers Nouvelliste: When one considers the cause of a large majority of the recurring accidents on the public highways, only one conclusion can be arrived at. It is that the problem of traffic safety resolves itself into one main phase. Negligence on the part of the driver is still at the head of the list of accident causes. It would seem, then, that only one thing needs to be done to reduce the number of highway casualties to the minimum. It will suffice if the drivers of automobiles are prudent at all times and in all places, particulary at intersections, at level railway crossings, and when meeting or passing other vehicles on the highway. What a simple remedy can thus be applied effectively to a veritable public plague.

Forty Bergs Passed in One Day Off Labrador

Boston.—The sighting of 40 icebergs in a single day was reported in a communication received from Lieut. Commander N. G. Ricketts, commander of the coast guard's oceanographic expedition in northern latitudes. It is the purpose of the expedition to obtain data through which the annual invasion of the steamer lanes by icebergs may be forecast.

The expedition is now operating in Northern Labrador waters, far above the trans-Atlantic steamer lanes. After an earlier cruise in the region of the Grand Banks, Commander Ricketts commented upon the scarcity of bergs in the steamer lanes this year.

Italy Continues to Increase Purchases of Foreign Grain

Rome.—Italy's purchases of foreign grain continue to increase. Official figures of the tariff office show that during the last eleven months Italy imported 18,980,409 quintals compared to 7,761,238 quintals in the period 1929-'30.

This represents an increase of 10,236,121 quintals.

On Their Way

Col. Charles Lindbergh and Mrs. Lindbergh are shown in front of their aeroplane just before they took off from North Beach Airport, L.I., July 27th, en route to Washington, on first leg of their 7,100-mile jaunt to Tokio, Japan.

Youths Travel 33,000-Miles Around World on $700

Port Wayne, Ind.—A 33,000-mile globe encircling jaunt has been completed at a cost of less than $700 by Harold Greinert, Fort Wayne, and Paul Neipp, Cleveland. The youths, both of were were graduated from Concordia College here, began their long trip a year ago.

Among the methods of earning transportation engaged in by the youths was peeling potatoes on an ocean liner. In Spain they traveled more than 750 miles on bicycles.

Old English Burial Ground To Become Recreation Park

Twickenham, England.—Unused for more than a century, the old burial ground here will be turned into a recreation park. The last burial was in 1825, and small houses now surround it. In granting the town's request the chancellor of the diocese remarked:

"The tombstones have no interest except as they disclose the favorite virtues of the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries, such as humility —now sadly out of fashion."

The Geodetic Survey of Canada

The Geodetic Survey of Canada, of the Department of the Interior, plays an important role in the development of the Dominion, providing by its work an accurate basis for all kinds of other surveys whether relating to the making of maps or charts, the laying down of interprovincial and other boundaries, or the construction of powerhouses, dams, canals, railways, irrigation ditches and the like.

Australian Oranges Arrive in Canada

Vancouver.—The first shipments of the new crop of Australian oranges consisting of 5000 cases has arrived at this port. The fruit is of good quality and is being favorably received by the public.

Australian oranges, it is anticipated, will from now on give steadily increasing competition to California oranges which have dominated the markets of western Canada.

New Flying Rules Drawn Up in U.S.

Greater Safety for Airline Passengers Object of Regulations

Washington. — New regulations to make flying safer on America's passenger air lines were adopted at a recent conference of pilots and aperators at the Commerce Department.

The crash several months ago which killed Knute Rockne, Notre Dame football coach, and seven other persons, was largely responsible for one of the most important safety measures. It prohibits passenger transport planes to fly over stretches of fog and clouds without two-way radio equipment.

Another of the regulations gave the pilot an 8-hour day, forbidding him to work longer than that.

Assistant Secretary of Commerce Clarence M. Young announced that the new measures would shortly be drafted and promulgated. They were agreed on by 30 airline operators and 11 pilots. It was the first time pilots have attended such a meeting.

In addition to providing for radio communication, the fog regulation also forbids a trip where the destination is a landing field on which fog or cloud ceiling is lower than 300 feet. Clouds and fog played a part in the crash which took Rockne's life.

Besides being restricted to an eight-hour day, a pilot will be allowed to fly only 30 hours a week and will have a prolonged rest period between flights taking six hours or more.

Regular passenger lines will be required to report changes in schedule or extensions of operation to the department. Two pilots will be required on multi-colored planes only when the first pilot is scheduled to fly six or more hours in one day. This is a relaxation of the present co-pilot requirements for the larger planes, demanded by the airline operators as a move for economy which would not lessen safety. The pilots oppo his proposal, but it was approved.

Brothers Stage Re-Union

The nine Beach brothers, most of whom live in eastern Ontario, got together for the first time in years at their first annual picnic held recently along the banks of the Long Sault. Left to Right: Charles A. Beach, Cornwall; Frederick W., Winchester; Benson C., Ottawa; Dr. (Anson, twin of Benson), Dominion government inspector; Mahlon W., Barrie; Dr. Howard, Ottawa; G. Weston, Toronto; J. Russell, Ottawa, and Olin A., youngest of the family, of Ottawa.

WITH THE LONE SCOUTS

We are pleased that as a result of the publicity given to Lone Scouting through these columns many new members have joined the movement during the past few weeks. This week applications for membership have been received from Cobden, Hydro, Burkes Falls and Harriston, and at Durham there is every prospect of a full Patrol being formed.

A recent check up of the records of the Ontario Lone Scout Department showed that since its inception two years ago about 460 boys have been admitted to membership in the movement. Of course quite a few of these have been since transferred to regular troops which have been formed as a result of Lone Scout activity.

The Lonies at Fenelon Falls under Senior Patrol Leader Doug. Warren have had a very busy time just recently. On July 4th they had the pleasure of again meeting their friends of the 51st Toronto Troop, who camped near the town. The Lonies helped the Toronto Scouts to make camp, and entered ito their activities with zest.

Later the Lone Scouts were invited to visit the camp of the 90th Toronto Troop at Sandy Point, on Sturgeon Lake. They hiked over to the camp on July 8th, and to their surprise met an old friend who turned out to be none other than "Cookie" ("Colonel" Walton), who was so popular at the Lone Scout Camp at Ebor Park last summer. The Lonies stayed over night with the 90th, and entered into their programme enthusiastically, having a great time at the evening council fire.

We like to see this fraternization between the Lonies and their city brothers, and we are pleased to state that quite a few members of the Lone Scouts have gone to camp this year with regular troops, at the latter's invitation.

The Fenelon Falls Lone Scouts also report a rather unique "Good Turn" which might be copied by other Lonies who live along the lake shore. They recently assisted the local town authorities to clean up the beach, which we think was exceedingly good work, as we have seen quite a few beaches recently that could very well benefit by a similar "Good Turn."

Lone Scout visitors to Provincial Headquarters in Toronto recently have included Bill Gilbert, of Essex, and Jack Bassett, of Listowel, and Harold Nickle of Harriston was in Toronto a short time ago, but he did not pay us a visit. Lonies who come to Toronto for any reason are always welcome visitors to Scout Headquarters, so we hope you won't forget to pay us a call.

This week's Summer Time Proficiency Badge is the Angler's Badge. The requirements are as follows:

1. By the usual angling methods catch and name seven different species of fish. At least one specimen must be taken by fly-casting or trolling and one by bait-carting. In single handed fly-casting the rod must not exceed seven ounces in weight; in double handed fly-casting the rod may be one ounce weight for each foot in length; in bait fishing the rod must not exceed ten feet in length nor twelve ounces in weight.

2. Show proficiency in accurate single-handed casting with the fly for distances of 20, 40 and 50 feet, or in bait casting for distance of 40, 60 and 70 feet.

3. Make three artificial flies (either after three standard patterns or in imitation of different natural flies). Make a neat single gut leader at least four feet long, or a twisted or braided leader at least three feet long. Splice the broken joint of a rod neatly.

4. Give the open season for the game fishes in his vicinity, and explain how and why they are protected by the law.

Applications for membership in the Lone Scouts will be received from boys between the ages of 12 and 18 inclusive, who cannot become members of a regular Troop, for reason of locality or other handicap. Applications should be sent to the Lone Scout Department, The Boys Scouts Association, 330 Bay Street, Toronto, 2.—"Lone E."

Disaster

The New Yorker.—Disaster. It makes us laugh, with a hearty old laugh, to see how completely our friends' country homes go to pieces nowadays when anything happens to the electric current. It used to be that when a storm broke down the electric wires, the only thing that happened was that the light went out. Now, when the light goes out, everything else quits too. There is no ice in the icebox, no music in the piano, no coffee in the percolator, no dialogue in the radio, no toast in the toaster; the vacuum cleaner stands silent in the corner, Sister can't curl her hair, Brother's toy trains stop running, the heat in the bath room goes off, the bed-warmer doesn't work, and the orange-squeezer stops squeezing right in the middle of an orange. It's just a question of gathering around a log fire and marking time till the storm abates.

Whirlpool Found Off Atlantic Coast

Boston.—Investigation of an ocean whirlpool on Georges Banks, so powerful as to divert the course of a vessel, has been undertaken by the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, it was reported recently by Capt. William E. Parker, of the government steamer Hydrographer.

The whirlpool, when discovered by spot approximately 150 miles due east Captain Parker, centered on a shoal of Cape Cod. Its action was described as spinning outward instead of toward its center. Several attempts to force the Hydrographer through the whirlpool were frustrated by the currents which threw the vessel's head off the course.

Captain Parker is going to study the whirlpool more closely as soon as the survey fleet of four small steamers return to the banks. The work on Georges is the first attempt to make an exhaustive survey and charting of the shoals, and will be completed some time next year.

It is expected that results of the survey will be of great assistance to fishermen. At the present time this area is the most productive locality for fishing craft out of the great markets at Boston and Gloucester. Relatively few vessels go down to the more remote Grand Banks nowadays from this country.

Their Majesties Open Glasgow Dock

Glasgow.—After a busy week in the Scottish capital, Queen Mary and King George paid a visit to Glasgow to open the new dock of the Clyde Navigation Trust at Shieldall.

In his speech the King spoke of former visits to Glasgow and recalled Glasgow's enterprise in the development of trade with North America. The Queen performed the naming ceremony, and, after His Majesty had unveiled the memorial stone, he declared the dock open for traffic. The stone bore the inscription: "This dock was opened by their Majesties the King and Queen on 10th July, 1931 and named George V. Dock."

Raw Hides Tanned In Week in Sweden

Stockholm.—The problem of producing leather of an excellent quality from raw hides in a week has been definitely solved through a Swedish invention, called after the inventor, the Wrange-Friberg method.

The vital part of the work is performed by the Friberg vacuum pump, which makes possible rapid and perfect tanning of hides in a practically complete vacuum.

Britain's Crime Problem Increasingly Serious

London.—Great Britain's crime problem, Lord Justice McCardie said at the opening of the Birmingham Assizes, is more serious than at any other time during the last sixty years.

"Modern criminals," he said, "are more ingenious and astute. Perhaps the greatest feature of recent years is that the number of boys under sixteen convicted of indictable offenses was much greater in 1929 than in 1907."

$60,000 Home for Animals

Springfield, Mass.—A home for animals to cost $60,000 is being built here by the Springfield branch of the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

SAM HARRIS, President — H. W. WATERS, General Manager

A kindly but somewhat patronizing landlady inquired of the young bride how she and her husband proposed to spend their summer vacation.

The Bride (a little distantly)—"Our plans, so far, are tentative."

Landlady—"Oh, how delightful. I'm sure you'll enjoy camping out more than anything else you could do."

If a pitcher is jerked out and the game is won, that's strategy. If he is jerked and the game is lost, that's plain unadulterated dumbness.

Mistress—"Why did you leave your last place, Gertie?"

Maid—"Because I did not know what this one was like."

"Just hold the receiver a minute," said a woman to another this morning, interrupting a half-hour telephone conversation, "until I tell my husband something else to do."

Mistress (indignantly)—"Just look at the dust on this sideboard, Mary. It's at least six weeks old."

Mary (calmly)—"Then it ain't nothing to do with me, mum. I've only been here four weeks."

The man entered a cigar store, bought a cigar and left. Five minutes later he dashed back.

The Man (shouting)—"That cigar is simply awful!"

Storekeeper (calmly)—"It's all very well for you to complain, you've only got one; I've got hundreds of the darn things."

You need make no more noise in the world than a hermit calling to its mate. Actions talk, not words.

Pretty Girl (at florist's)—"Have you any passion poppie?"

Elderly Clerk (excitedly) — "Gol ding! Just you wait till I lay these roses down."

Doctor—"Now, young man, what have you got to say for yourself?"

His Son (in for a licking)—"How about a little local anesthetic?"

O'Leary called at the home of his friend, O'Brien, to tell Mrs. O'Brien that her husband was locked up for being drunk.

Mrs. O'Brien—"Why didn't you bail him out, man?"

O'Leary—"Bail him out! Bedad, you couldn't pump him out!"

Boarder — "Come quick—two rats are fighting in my room."

Landlady—"Well, what do you expect to get for fifty cents—a bull fight?"

Tommy—"Isn't 'wholesome' a funny word, father?"

Father—"What's so funny about it?"

Tommy—"Why, take away the 'whole' and you've got 'some' left."

Bird

The mystery of dawn which the lengthening hours dispel is finely realized in The Commonweal (New York):

By Frances M. Frost

The dawn came wan, the dawn grew gold,
The light poured downward in the early cold.
The cedars, dreaming against the sky,
Leaned over water; and the small cool cry
Of crystal groped for rock and sand,
While the sky dripped blue on lake and land.
The sun rose up, a flower of gold:
The hills were petaled, fold on fold,
With flame. And suddenly morning stirred—
Morning was shattered by a hidden bird!

The song blew east, the song blew west,
The song blew wild in the listening breast!
While morning woke to beauty and pain,
The song was a breath of silver rain,
A blossom of sun, and wings up-hurled
Over the known and lovely world!
The song was the pointed shadow of leaf
On the turning earth, and hint of grief,
A shoulder of wind, and a star above
A dawn-dark hill, and an answer to love.

Silence came. The sun grew tall;
The dim woods watched the petals fall,
And wind went searching each hidden way
For a lost bird caught to the heart of day!

Planes Warned to Fly High Over American Prisons

Washington. — A warning to all aviators against flying above either Federal or State prisons at an altitude lower than 1,000 feet was given recently by Gilbert G. Budwig, director of air regulation of the Department of Commerce.

Stating that complaints had been received recently of planes flying near prisons, Mr. Budwig said that the amendment made to the air traffic rules in April apparently was "not understood." This rule, he said, applied except when there was an established landing field nearby.

He pointed out that under the air commerce act penalties might be assessed for violations.

"I hope you are going to dance this evening, Miss Summers."

"You bet I am. You didn't think I came up here for my vacation simply to rest, did you?"

Dentists in the States

With 67,000 dentists, one to every 1,700 persons, America leads the world in dentistry and dental training, according to the United States Office of Education, in spite of the fact that it has been estimated that only one-fourth of the American people receive dental service. There is, however, only one dentist to every 4,000 persons in Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi and South Carolina, and one to every 3,000 persons in Arizona, Georgia, Kentucky, New Mexico, North Carolina, Texas and Virginia. There is said to be only one Negro dentist to every 8,500 Negroes.

'31 To Be Record Year For Winter Fair

Increased Number of Exhibits from Prairies in June Butter Competition

Toronto.—An unmistakable proof of confidence in Western Canadian agriculture has just been registered at the Royal Winter Fair in the remarkable entries received in the June butter competitions. Not only does the total make a record for the ten years of the Royal Winter Fair but a more significant feature is that the whole of the increases are accounted for by the prairie provinces. Those from Saskatchewan, for example, have been increased nearly 100 per cent. The directorate of the Royal Winter Fair considers the record entry this year a most convincing proof of Western faith in the underlying soundness of agriculture. It may be added that so far as can be judged from early intentions to exhibit, the outlook for live-stock entries is equally rosy.

All the June butter exhibits have now been received at the Royal and are safely in storage under controlled conditions of temperature, etc. They will not be disturbed until removal for display and competition at the Coliseum just prior to the opening of the Winter Fair on November 18th.

The Royal of 1931, its tenth year, is to be a "Commemorative Show," intended to mark its "birth," and to signalize the establishment of a national centre where Canadian agriculture was first focussed so as to visualize its importance, and where, in the decade that has ensued, it has been given a worthy and rightful place in Dominion affairs.

Giant "Spark Plug" New Foe of Lightning

Pittsburgh engineers recently shot enough electricity through an experimental lightning-rod to lift the Woolworth Building off its feet.

The giant "spark plug" at the new Westinghouse high-power laboratory blazed into action for the first time as over 132 million volt-amperes leapt across the terminals to the lightning rod on test.

There was a burst of flame from each end of the rod and a report like a six-inch cannon as the experimental lightning-rod "knocked out" the terrific lightning bolt in less than 1-500 of a second. J. J. Torok, inventor of the rod, is thus quoted in a Westinghouse News Bulletin:

"The results of the tests are so promising that we are working night and day to finish its development. We hope it will effect greater economies in present forms of flashover protective devices now in service to protect insulator strings on overhead transmission lines which supply cities with light and power. In addition, it is expected to provide permanent protection against the ravages of lightning and save the country millions of dollars a year.

"Now, after a lightning stroke, protective devices of the fuse type must be replaced. This requires constant patrolling of the lines. Because of the limitations of a single line, duplicate lines must be constructed. The new lightning-rod does away with this expense."

The construction of the device is simple, we are told. It consists of a hollow tube about the size of a lady's umbrela. A piece of metal at each end serves as an electrode to entice the lightning inside for the "knock-out" blow. It is supposed to work so fast that the lights in a house will not even flicker. The bulletin concludes:

"This device, technically known as a 'De-Ion' lightning protector, is used to protect insulator strings on transmission lines against flashover. Engineers have estimated that if the Torok lightning-rod is successful and had been available ten years ago, the world would have saved a hundred million dollars."

Doubtful

A tourist agency inserted an advertisement for a man who was required to escort parties abroad. A hard-up young man, who desired an easy post, applied and was given an interview.

"Good morning," said the agency official. "Parlez vous Francais?"

"I—er—beg your pardon?" stammered the applicant.

"Parlez vous Francais?"

"I—ah—frightfully sorry, but I didn't quite catch . . ."

"I said, 'Do you speak French?' "

The young man smiled easily.

"Oh, yes," he said, "fluently."

The maid was showing the somewhat flashily-dressed individual to his room in the seaside boarding house. At the door he paused and said: "I presume everyone here dresses for dinner?" The maid looked dumbly at him. "Oh, yes, sir," she replied at last. "Any meals taken in bed are extra."

Midsummer Eve

Lovers of Nature will enjoy this excerpt from "Wild Honey," by Samuel Scoville, Jr. All the color of form, foliage and bird voice are clearly portrayed.

It was Midsummer Eve when I reached the cabin. The swift stream stretched away in the moonlight like silvered velvet, and the leaves of the sweet gums and the swamp maples made a dim, green web along its banks.

Overhead, some bird which I could not identify gave a strange, wild cry and repeated it a few seconds later a great distance away, showing how fast it was flying through the black-velvet sky above.

The shadows of the waving trees made a fretted, magical pattern on the smooth surface of the water. A pine-barren pickerel frog, all emerald and gold and purple-black, snored, and some other frogs unknown to me gave a couple of loud, startling notes which sounded like the clapping of two boards together. Then suddenly, in the distance, the stressed, hurried notes of a whippoorwill pealed through the darkness to be answered by one close to the cabin. Over and over and over again those birds of the night repeated their triple notes with a little click after each one, hurying as if they feared to be interrupted before they could finish. As the wild, sweet melody thrilled through the darkness, it seemed to me as if the moonlight itself had been set to music. When it stopped, the lonely waste land lay still as sleep. Then, as the full moon climbed the sky, from far-away bogs and gold-green pools came the clear voices of late hylas, like tangled chimes of my silver bells.

When they stopped for breath, the wood frogs, as if they had waited for that moment, burst out into a perfect pandemonium of honking, quacking notes.

When at last the clamor of the frogs stopped as suddenly as it had begun, I left my bag in the cabin and in the moonlight hurried down a winding path which led through a little dip in the soft yellow grass where, not fifty yards from my porch, the wild deer bed in winter. Just at the edge of this hollow I found a clump of the flowers which I had hoped to see. Red, gold, ivory-white, and pale green, they grew from a mass of hollow, crimson-streaked leaves filled with clear water, and I knelt down in the moonlight to revel in the beauty of the pitcher plants, which I had not seen in blossom for three long years.

The sight of them brought to my mind another discovery that I had made the day when last I found them blossoming, and I followed the path until it wound through tussocks of ochre-colored grass. Parting their stems, I searched through several without finding anything: Then, as I came to the last tussock of all, a tiny bird slipped way like a shadow, giving an alarm note sharp as the clicking of two pebbles together. Before me in the moonlight showed a deep nest of woven grass containing four rose-white eggs blotched with brown at the larger end and showing in the moonlight like pearls in a casket of tawny gold. Here and there through the fabric of the nest were woven dry leaves, the field mark of the nest of the Maryland yellow-throat, who wears a black domino and has a song that sounds like "witchery, witchery, witchery." As always, when I leaned down to study more closely the exquisite little eggs in their beautiful setting, I had the feeling that I had come upon treasure-trove, such as he must experience who unearths a crock of gold or stumbles upon a chest of doubloons.

Wife: "You were talking in your sleep last night, dear." Husband: "Well, I've got to talk sometimes, haven't I?"

RIDING IN THE CLOUDS

The pictures show: a typical trail ride, camp scene, fording a river, and the sterling type of cowboy, who is guide, friend and counsellor to the disciples of the saddle.

Up, out and away from the cares and limitations of modern life; sharing the joys of long days in the saddle in flower-studded Alplands and stately passes with a goodly company of kindred spirits; happy evenings round the campfires and restful, health-giving nights in the wine-like atmosphere of the mountains; such is the life of the Trail Riders of the Canadian Rockies, on their annual expeditions from Banff and Lake Louise, which have long since become famous items in the summer programs of the two great Canadian Pacific Railway hotels at these renowned holiday places. Carefully planned rides, of varying durations to suit all comers; experienced guides, cooks and horse-wranglers; a pack train always ahead to welcome the riders at the evening meal, with the night's camp all ready for occupation; horses that are as sure-footed as goats all contribute to making this form of holiday one of the most original and enjoyable on the American continent. Canadian Pacific lines carry enthusiasts and new recruits from the four corners of the earth to Banff and Lake Louise, each summer. This year the official four-day ride will be held from July 30 to August 2, covering 52 miles through Banff National Park, in territory with special appeal to the photographer and fisherman, and will be followed by a 10-day ride of greater mileage.

Castoria corrects CHILDREN'S ailments

WHAT a relief and satisfaction it is for mothers to know that there is always Castoria to depend on when babies get fretful and uncomfortable! Whether it's teething, colic or other little upset, Castoria always brings quick comfort; and, with relief from pain, restful sleep.

And when older, fast-growing children get out of sorts and out of condition, you have only to give a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation to right the disturbed condition quickly.

Because Castoria is made expressly for children, it has just the needed mildness of action. Yet you can always depend on it to be effective. It is almost certain to clear up any minor ailment and cannot possibly do the youngest child the slightest harm. So it's the first thing to think of when a child has a coated tongue, is fretful and out of sorts. Be sure to get the genuine; with Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package.

New Lakeside Inn is Opened

Beautifully set in one of the most picturesque sections of Nova Scotia, combining marine and landscape vistas which bid fair to bring it fast into line of popularity with its sisters at Digby and Kentville, the new Lakeside Inn, at Yarmouth, N.S., was formally opened on June 16, as the newest link in the Canadian Pacific Railway's great chain of hostelries from Atlantic to Pacific. Readily accessible from Saint John, through Digby, via the luxurious steamer "Princess Helene"; from Halifax, over the Dominion Atlantic Railway; and direct from New York, Boston and Portland by Eastern Steamship Lines, the town of Yarmouth and its new hotel are destined to play an important role in tourist traffic to Nova Scotia, with its famed Annapolis Valley and historic Land of Evangeline. Sport and recreations are plentiful and varied. Canoeing, tennis, fishing, swimming and innumerable attractive excursions are only a few of the offerings. There is good golf available near Yarmouth and the hotel and its cottages form a comfortable base of operations. Taste and comfort have been skilfully combined in its spacious public rooms, broad verandahs and airy bedrooms. Its cuisine and service are conducted on the established standards, known to guests of the company throughout Canada.

Henry May Injured in Auto Accident

Henry May, of Brampton and formerly of Norval, was admitted to Peel Memorial Hospital on Monday as a result of an accident near Kitchener. He was with Charles Hooper and Fred Cowton, also of Brampton, and when their car struck another from the rear, it swerved into the ditch and turned over twice. Mr. May was the most seriously injured suffering deep abrasions and shock. Hooper and Cowton were also cut and bruised but were brought to their homes in Brampton. Mr. May was first given attention in Kitchener Hospital. He is now under the care of Dr. Bromley.

Don't Want Smart Alecs

"We don't want any more smart Alecs on our highways," declared Magistrate Douglas Davidson in the Highway Traffic Court Monday at Mimico, in fining one Donald Campbell, a Toronto truck driver, $10 on a charge of reckless driving. According to police evidence, Campbell, who was driving on the Dundas Highway, had cut in on more than fifteen cars in line and arriving at a crossing over which a train had just passed, sped over it immediately behind the last coach.

"Four persons have been killed at this very spot," declared the Provincial Officer, Ed. Palmer of Islington,, who stated that accused was proceeding at between 35 and 40 miles per hour.

The editors of local newspapers are often blamed for partiality in their notices for churches, societies and even families, when the fact is the parties most interested are the ones to blame. The local newspaper does not possess a sufficient number of reporters to send to every church service in the range of its circulation, and it must needs depends upon some person to send in the news. Many pastors or leaders of the congregation do this and their items are gladly printed. Many societies appoint one of their members to attend to this important work.

Road Being Improved

The work of improving our main street commenced on Tuesday. A staff of about a dozen men and several machines are working. The shoulders of the road are being built up with stone and asphalt and the surface will get a fresh coating of asphalt. It is intended to take the bumps out of the pavement and make it just like new. The road was built eleven years ago and it has stood up well under the heavy traffic. It promises to last out the term of the debentures, i. e, twenty years. The County is spending about $2200.00 on this piece of work and if anybody tells you it won't cost the village anything, don't let them fool you. Streetsville pays its share of all county good roads construction and maintenance in every part of the county. It comes under the heading of "County Rate" on your Tax bill—and we pay $400.00 more into the County Council this year than we did last. Think for yourself.

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS

Don Ellsworth's wife formerly the famous actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears, leaving no trace. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, learns that their married life has been unhappy.

Peter Piper, Herald reporter, tries to get an interview with Dr. Cavanaugh. Instead he meets Barbara Cavanaugh, attractive daughter, and finds that she was engaged to Don before his marriage.

An unidentified body is found in the Tule marsh outside the city. It has been burned by a fire in the marsh until it is unrecognizable except for the fact that it is a woman. Dr. Cavanaugh is called in to help with the identification. The only thing by which the body can be identified is a patch of scalp with some hair attached. Dr. Cavanaugh takes this home with him. He asks Don to secure for him a strand of Sheila O'Shay's hair. Don refuses.

Dr. Cavanaugh snapped the notebook shut, restored it to his pocket, and heaved himself somewhat wearily erect.

"That hair is beginning to be important," he said aloud. "But it's less important for me to get it than to find out who is unwilling for me to have it—and why. That's what Camberwell and his policemen will never quite appreciate. Which means that I'll have to go after it myself."

Having bet himself a nickel that Don Ellsworth would not have turned homeward after his explosive exit from the office, and verified his prediction by means of a telephone call, Dr. Cavanaugh pocketed his winnings, leisurely shrugged himself into the overcoat which always hung in readiness in the carved Florentine wardrobe that filled one corner of the room, and backed his small, unobtrusive black runabout from its place in the double garage.

The other side of the garage yawned empty. Barbara had driven to a party at the house of friends, and for once, Dr. Cavanaugh was glad of her absence. After all, she and Don had been very good friends not so long ago. He might yet have to be glad that the friendship had lapsed. But meanwhile, though she often followed his cases with eager interest, he hoped that he might avoid giving her an account—or, what was just as bad, obviously declining to give her an account—of his progress in this one.

The maid who answered Dr. Cavanaugh's ring at the front door of the Ellsworth house stopped short, her eyes as round as marbles, at the sound of his name. She, at least, was an avid reader of the newspapers, and the wonders to be expected of the great Dr. Cavanaugh, who was reported to have been called in consultation on the "Tule marsh mystery," had been the theme of delightful flights of imagination in the kitchen not an hour ago. Ethel's expression was a mixture of awe and fright, as if Dr. Cavanaugh, by black magic, was likely to weave a connection between murder and anyone so unwary as to stand in his vicinity.

Dr. Cavanaugh submitted to this fascinated scrutiny with patience. Servants to him were human beings, and he was neither surprised nor offended when they dropped the pretense of being machines.

"I'd like to see Mrs. Kane," he announced with his usual directness, thereby shattering Ethel's previous conception of the devious ways of criminologists.

The girl's face reflected a shocked astonishment, not unmixed with malice and sheer delight in a thrilling situation. Already she could hear herself telling the cook that she had let the great man in, that he had looked "just like you or me, not a bit like a 'criminologist,' and no airs at all"; that his request for Mrs. Kane made her feel "just like in the middle of a story—and I hope he's got something on that old cross-budget—and anway, isn't it exciting, just?"

For the moment, however, she was confronted with a social emergency for which she was unprepared.

"Yes, sir," she stammered. "Come in, sir, and I'll bring Mrs. Kane right down—or should I take you to the servants' sitting room?"

"I wouldn't dream of turning you out of your sitting room, with the radio program not half over," Dr. Cavanaugh said, smiling a little at Ethel's surprised acknowledgement of this slight demonstration of insight and consideration. "Mr. Ellsworth left my house only a short time ago; and though I know he did not come straight home, I think I may venture to take possession of the library in his absence."

"Certainly, sir."

Having opened the door for him, Ethel scurried down the hall. He listened to her footsteps, pattering almost at a run up the stairs.

"So Mrs. Kane does not sit with the other servants in the evening—Don was right about her unpopularity, then."

Other steps came down the hall, a resolute, flat-footed thud-thud.

Dr. Cavanaugh picked up a magazine from the table, and was leafing its pages when the door opened. He did not look up until, after a moment's hesitation on the threshold, the footsteps, a shade less resolute, entered the room.

"And what may I ask, do you want of me?" said Mrs. Kane.

CHAPTER XIV.

Dr. Cavanaugh finished reading the caption under a cartoon on the open page of the magazine, smiled appreciatively, and returned the periodical with meticulous care to its place in the row on the library table. There was plenty of time to look at Mrs. Kane. He knew the embarrassing effect of a pause—already he had put Mrs. Kane on the defensive by forcing her to open the conversation.

When at last he looked up his glance was casual, with no effect of scrutiny. He saw before him a tall, heavy-boned woman, whose hair, shinily black like shoe polish, was drawn up from her forehead in a still sausage formation—the "pompadour" in vogue twenty years ago.

"Dyed," Dr. Cavanaugh inwardly commented. "Now why should she bother to dye her hair—not for beauty, certainly."

Her skin showed a network of tiny blood vessels. Her cheeks and nose had a tight, red, shiny look, even as her hair was tight, black and shiny. That nose was the dominant feature—a heavy beak overshadowing a sunken mouth.

"False teeth," Dr. Cavanaugh continued his silent observations. "And put in far too late, after the gums had shrunken."

Mrs. Kane's dress, like her hair, followed an extinct fashion. It touched the ground with its dusty hem-binding of dingy black. The collar and cuffs were rumpled, and showed a faint brown line at wrist and neck.

"A visit to the cleaner's and the laundry would seem to have been indicated—not at all the attire to be expected of a servant in a millionaire's home." With all this, Dr. Cavanaugh's survey had been so brief and unobtrusive that Mrs. Kane was left with the impression that it was she who stared. It was a hard, belligerent stare, from small but by no means dull, black eyes.

"I won't take up much of your time, Mrs. Kane," Dr. Cavanaugh began courteously. "But won't you sit down?"

"I'm busy. Besides, I prefer to stand."

A dramatic old codger! Whoever first started the idea, firmly fixed in the cheaper sort of literature, that it was the thing to "prefer to stand" in the presence of an enemy? Had it an anthropological basis—readiness to give instant physical battle? Dr. Cavanaugh decided to look it up some time. Meanwhile, it had its advantages. It showed conclusively that Mrs. Kane was not merely indulging her usual forbidding manner but regarded him definitely as an antagonist.

"Indeed? I should have thought your duties would be considerably lightened in your mistress' absence," he remarked suavely.

"My duties concern myself. I believe you had something to say to me."

Dr. Cavanaugh had some difficulty in restraining his eyes from a fascinated attention to Mrs. Kane's mouth. The false teeth had indeed been installed too late. When she spoke, the upper set moved up and down beneath her lip, like a stage drop retreating and appearing behind a lifted curtain. But her manipulation was expert. The teeth moved with a gruesome independence, but they never quite fell out, and when she stopped speaking, the clamp of her jaws thrust them into place with a slight click. The necessity of this constant management gave her sentence a clipped, jerky brevity.

"Well, to ask you, rather," Dr. Cavanaugh amended. "Perhaps you know that Mr. Ellsworth came to me for advice when Mrs. Ellsworth—left?"

"Mr Ellsworth didn't seem to bother much until the police got busy," Mrs Kane remarked grimly.

"At your request, I believe."

"He made me mad. I don't say I had ought to done it, if I'd stopped to think. But when I asked him what he was going to do, he said, 'I druther not discuss it.'" Mrs. Kane's thin lips snapped shut, and Dr. Cavanaugh found himself waiting anxiously for the reassuring click. "He druther not, indeed!" The voice rose harshly. "Well, there's other folks as has their druthers, as well as him. I've got my druthers, too, if you want to know!" As if realizing that she was opening too much of her mind to this stranger, she stopped. Her whole face seemed to shut down, to become an expressionless mask.

"I think you did quite right, Mrs. Kane. You showed excellent judgment."

The praise brought a momentary flash from the small black eyes.

"I don't know about that," she said grudgingly. Then the impulse to unload a 'piece of her mind' to a willing listener became too strong. "Fancy losing a lady like Miss O'Shay and paying no more attention than if it was a lost dog that you might enquire for at the pound when you got around to it! An insult to Miss O'Shay it was—her that's had lords of Europe waiting at the stage door for her, and princes begging her to take their strings of pearls, and risking what their king-dads would do, which would be aplenty, if they ever found out. Twist them around her little finger, she would, in them days."

The theatrical orchestra was rehearsing the music of a new piece. The harmony was ruined by the eccentric behaviour of the trombone player, a new member. "What on earth are you doing?" roared the conductor. "You were a couple of bars ahead of the rest nearly all the way." "Sorry," apologized the offender. "You see, I once belonged to a street band, and the first to finish used to take round the hat."

A Parable From Nature

In the meadow behind the house
This morning I saw
Cows feeding on apple-blossoms.
Wrench,
Crunch,
Munch,
Shatter and scatter;
They bit off more than they could chew,
And splashed the grass
With pink bright petals.
There they stood, crushing
In wrinkled and crinkled,
Asquint and askew,
Wicked black jaws
Mouthfuls of present beauty
And harvest to be.

I told my neighbor the poet,
He scowled, and said he knew
Reviewers exactly like those cows.

The ADVENTURES of CAPTAIN JIMMY and his Dog SCOTTIE

What came before: Captain Jimmy is forced down on a deserted island while flying General Lu from China to Japan. They find no game, so decide to try their luck at fishing.

That was an idea. The shores of that island had never been touched in a thousand years. No doubt the water fairly teemed with fish. But the suggestion nearly cost the lives of two of us on the next day.

Early the next morning we kindled a hugh bonfire on the bald peak of the island, and piled on plenty wet grass to make smoke. If any ship passed within miles, it would be sure to see our signal.

All day we gathered wood and piled it near, so we could make a big bright fire through the night. The interpreter and I went down to the shore to fish.

Taking a pin from my coat I made a rough fish hook. This I fastened to the end of a long cord, and cutting off a corner of General Lu's bright colored cloak, we had a homemade, but attractive fish-bait.

The interpreter begged for a chance to try his luck, and I let him go first. We selected a little sandy cove, where the tides cut a deep hole between two rocks. At high tide the water formed a clear, round pool, shallow at the edge, but rapidly sloping down until the bottom disappeared among the green shadows.

The interpreter waded out to his waist, then dropped his bait into the pool. General Lu and I sat lazily on the shore and watched him. Suddenly he gave a quick yank—his pole bent almost double. A great silver fish leaped high in the air, and the battle was on.

General Lu sat still as a mummy, but I fought that fish all over again. Several times it rose to the surface and came down with a grand splash. Then we could see it scooting along just a few inches below water,—straight toward it's captor.

Right between the interpreter's legs went the fish, bowling him over and tangling his legs in the line. Then both fish and Chinese submerged out of sight. A tremendous fuss and splashing began, after which the Chinese arose dripping with his prize clasped tightly in his arms.

The pair looked too funny for words. I began to laugh, when the General gave a sharp exclamation and pointed to the entrance of the cove.

For an instant I froze with dread. A sinister black fin, clove the smooth surface of the water like an arrow, rushing straight toward the unsuspecting Chinese. With a yell I grasped a short sword which General Lu still wore at his side, and plunged into the water between the rushing black fin and Hsu Fu.

The shark turned and made for me instead. The water reached my belt—too high for quick action. I waited for the one chance I knew would come. The shark turned on his back and opened his huge mouth to grab me, while row after row of gleaming teeth, sharp as razors, glittered menacingly.

I dodged to one side, and lunged at his smooth white stomach with my sword. In excitement, I only scratched him, and he turned again, mad as a whole nest of bumblebees. Murder shone in his little pig eyes as he rushed into the fight.

Glasgow to Outlaw Smoke Nuisance

Glasgow.—The corporation of Glasgow has resolved that their contractors and sub-contractors must employ smokeless methods in carrying out their contract. This information was given by Sir Thomas Kelly, Lord Provost of Glasgow, who was speaking on the subject of smoke abatement at a conference of sanitary authorities held here.

Mr. W. Brownhill Smith, sub-convener of Glasgow Gas Committee, in his paper "Banish Smoke from Britain," said to prevent smoke they must prohibit the burning of coal in its raw state, but before they could do that they must provide substitutes that would be more convenient and more economical.

Sir Francis Goodenough, chairman of the British Commercial Gas Association, suggested that municipalities should consider the question of allowing a reduction in rates for property in which no smoke-producing fuel was used.

"Where did your wife spend the summer?"

"Abroad."

"And how about yourself?"

"Went into bankruptcy."

Safety First

Donald had heard the rumor that his neighbor Moses was obtaining remarkably good racing information. But Moses was a close secretive kind of man, from whom it was difficult to obtain much in the way of a tip.

However, Donald thought he would make an effort, so on the eve of a big race he invited his neighbor to take refreshment on a generous scale. When he thought Moses had reached the desired state of mind, Donald made his proposition.

"Mo," he remarked, "suppose somebody gied ye fifty pounds to put on a horse in the big race tomorrow, which horse would ye put it on?"

Moses jerked his head on one side and replied with a wink: "A non-runner, my boy!"

Ancient Mariner: "Did I find it 'ot out in the tropics? I should think it was 'ot! Oe day I went ashore and a crowd of blacks started chasin' me and, believe me, it was that 'ot both me and them walked!"

Multum Ex Parvo

(On giving a needle-case to a friend going abroad.)

You who are going to Europe, and would neither toil nor spin,
Pray let me paint a moral—with a needle or a pin:

Kindly stitch up all the rents that old Europe now presents,
Start the British workman toiling at his various trades once more,
Mend the Russian Bolsheviks,—while you chide them for their tricks,
And can't you patch up German Reichtum as it was in days of yore?

And strengthen France's border (this is rather a "large order"),
Sew up all the ravelled skin 'twixt Belfast and Sinn Fein,
Darn the haughty Turks and all their naughty modern works,
And fashion out a Concord cope for Italy again.

If you've any needles left, and you're just a wee bit deft,
Please make a Robe of Peace for all the weary world!
—And when you're welcomed home, after all these months a-roam,
We must declare you surely are a very useful girl!

Christianity says — Be Christ-like, give thyself.

Atheism and Light

From time immemorial electricity has been with us, around us, in the air we breathe. Yet we groped along in the darkness for aeons of centuries knowing practically nothing of it. There came a time when prophets foretold its coming but few believed the prophecy until, believing it or not, when the time came that the thin edge of the wedge was applied by the slow process of scientific research, darkness suddenly opened up into a flood of light and power hitherto undreamed of. The great power was here which could destroy as ruthlessly as it could belch out light and energy. Yet all at once it was harnessed in so safely by skilled human hands that we use it now without fear, taking it as a matter of course, even though most of us know little more about it than to turn on the switch.

But we must have some appliance installed in our homes if we wish to use it and benefit by it, and we must touch the button to secure the power in order to connect up and benefit by it.

If this is true, and we know it is, is it not comforting that we have been told by the noblest man who ever lived, whose integrity was unimpeachable, whose truth and magnetic spirituality placed him first among the greatest of all men, that there is a power, a God power which is likewise everywhere. This power is supreme and above all other powers, bringing order out of chaos wherever it touches.

This greatest man of all men told us it was necessary for the Father to send His Son, to come to this world in order to teach us how to build up this spiritual machinery for ourselves which will give us the eternal life of light.

At the time Jesus lived on earth history shows us that virtues were a mockery. Conditions were terrible, in fact we have no idea of the wickedness and consequent sufferings endured by those early people. This was when Christ came to apply the thin edge of wedge. So great was the need of Him that they killed His physical body in their ignorance of right thinking. He found it necessary to die in order to show them the importance of each individual actually living the principles of love, truth, kindness and all virtues even unto death, the development of which brings us into everlasting life where moth nor rust does not corrupt.

He has said we should pray. We do not understand why, but in some manner prayer does make the circuit complete and for those who touch the spiritual switch by following what he taught a beacon is set out which helps us along wonderously through the trials and sufferings on this murky road of life.

He has shown us that we are going through the process of being born again; we have come up through the infinite ages; passed through darkness, ignorance, violence and materialization and can now see the glimmerings of a great light ahead.

How then can there be annihilation? If there has been a past how can it be possible not to have a future? All the past was future at one time, was it not? We have come this far not knowing what we are or how we move, or have our being. The world becomes more illuminated physically by electricity and immeasurably more important, it becomes spiritually illuminated by good living when everyone will do as they would be done by.

Oftentimes we think our own sufferings and difficulties, though hard to bear can be tolerated, but looking at others for worse off we are often puzzled when something seemingly terrible happens. "Well now, that person is good, and yet see how he suffers," and then we are apt to allow the small seeds of doubt to grow, forgetting God's words: "Thy dross to consume and thy God to refine." It is God's way of making us fit to be born again.

After all what is one little life when gazing into the depths of eternity? Earthquakes, famine, sorrow, death are as nothing if they bring us into the eternity of Divine Love.

Twilight Hour Story

Chicks and Other Little Friends

No. 31

Last week I told you about Fluffy being so cross at Rover because he came into the same room where Mamma Lady and Billy had brought her little kitties. She was so cross she scratched him, then jumped on his back and scratched some more so he didn't know what ever could be the matter, for you know he came in the room all right, but he didn't have a chance to even see the kitties, so he hadn't the slightest idea what all the fuss was about.

After he got chased out like that he wouldn't come in for a long time. It was a little while before Mamma Lady noticed Rover didn't come in the house. It was really Billy who noticed it first. He said, "Say, Mamma, do you know Rover won't come in the house? I wonder why?"

Then Mamma Lady remembered and said, "I believe he thinks it isn't very safe for him in here. I never thought of that. We'll have to coax him in."

So Billy ran out and called him and when he got near the door he was going to disappear again but Billy caught him by the collar and hugged him and said, "Oh, come on in Rover, nothing will hurt you."

You see, Rover wasn't a coward if he know what was the matter, but he didn't know why Fluffy jumped on him like that, so he thought he would just stay away.

Well, just as he was trying to get away Mamma Lady came out and was extra nice to him. Come in, Rover, Fluffy won't hurt you, now come on, it's all right, come on in," and she opened the door so he could see it really was all right.

Rover looked at her and took a little step, then stopped, then another, and she kept saying "Come on in. It's all right." Then he looked warily around and took another few steps. "She won't hurt you, Rover."

But Rover didn't know whether to believe it or not. All at once he was going to back out pretty quick, for there was Fluffy sitting on the cushion on her chair. But would you believe it, she just looked good naturedly at him as though she had never done anything to him at all.

Wasn't that funny? You know I believe there are a lot of people like that. They get so very cross about something then forget all about it, and they want us to forget all about their crossness too, which isn't so easy to do sometimes, is it? But I guess it's just their way, so it really is best to forget.

You see Fluffy forgot all about it because her kitties were away off in a dark closet now and she liked Rover again, so that when he saw her she was a nice kitty again, and wasn't Rover a good dog, for he was soon good friends with her, although often he looked at her queerly, as much as to say, "Why did you scratch me?" Perhaps he'll know when he sees the kitties when they are bigger.

But whatever are the chicks doing all this time?

Popular songs are often so popular that they become unpopular.

"Did you husband bring home any fish?"

"No. I understand William had bad luck on this trip. He got into a game of cards and lost the money he took with him to buy fish."

Sunday School Lesson

August 9. Lesson VI—Saul Converted and Commissioned—Acts 9: 1-9, 17-19; 1 Timothy 1: 12-14. Golden Text—I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision.—Acts 26: 19.

I. SAUL, PHARISEE AND PERSECUTOR, Acts 9: 1, 2; 22: 3-5.

II. SAUL CONVERTED, Acts 9: 3-19a; 22: 5-16.

III. SAUL PREACHING, Acts 9: 19b-31; 22: 17-21.

IV. PAUL, LOOKING BACK, Galatians 1: 11|17; 1 Timothy 1: 12-17.

I. SAUL, PHARISEE AND PERSECUTOR, Acts 9: 1, 2; 22: 3-5.

(a) The Pharisee. Saul's family, although living in a Greek city, were of pure Jewish descent, and Pharisees. They also enjoyed the privilege of Roman citizenship, conferred upon them probably for some service to the emperor. According to Jewish custom, the boy was taught a trade, tent-making, Acts 18: 3. In the university city of Tarsus he would acquire a knowledge of Greek customs, literature and philosophy. His education in Tarsus completed, he was sent south to Jerusalem to study under a famous theological professor named Gamaliel.

The gentle and tolerant spirt of Gamaliel (Acts 5: 34), was not shared by his brilliant pupil. Saul was an ardent student of the Law. When religion becomes a matter of law and doctrines, intolerance is the result. So it was with Saul.

(b) The Persecutor. When, after Stephen's death, the authorities took measures against his followers, Saul threw himself into the work of repression. Not content with his efforts in Jerusalem, he secured authority to go to Damascus, where the Jewish colony had evidently been influenced by the new faith.

II. SAUL CONVERTED, Acts 9: 3-19a; 22: 5-16.

Saul's conversion was the most momentous occurrence of apostolic history.

(a) The Preparation. On the lonely road to Damascus, six or eight days' journey from Jerusalem, Saul would have time for reflection. By this time he was discovering that the Law was not an adequate religion, Romans, chapter 7. Failing in his quest for God, he was steadily sinking into pessimism. The memory was always haunting him of Stephen dying with the face of an angel—and with a prayer of forgiveness on his lips. The joyful courage of the men whom he was persecuting, their lives for each other, the calm confidence which told of an inner peace must have been undermining his old assurance. His troubled mind was working up to the crisis which he was soon to experience.

(b) The Crisis. As Saul and his men were approaching the city a blinding light suddenly burst upon them, the shock of which threw them to the ground, Chap. 9: 3. Saul heard a voice saying, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" Was it, then, really true that in harrying the believers he had been persecuting the Lord himself? "Who art thou, Sir?" he asked. He did not recognize the voice. The Authorized Version with "Lord" suggests that he did. The answer brought to Saul the transforming conviction that Jesus was, as his followers had claimed, the true revelation of God.

(c) The Result. Saul immediately placed Christ in complete control of his life, 9: 6. Brought to a believer's house in Damascus, he remained there three days, blind physically and spiritually, overwhelmed at the collapse of his past life and dark as to the future. Ananias, divinely prompted, found him and showed him that all that had happened was God calling him to his service. Saul, now healed in body and spirit (9: 17), was baptized, and thus admitted to the fellowship of the believers.

III. SAUL PREACHING, Acts 9: 19b-31; 22: 17-21.

After some days spent with the disciples, in Damascus, Saul retired "into Arabia" (Gal. 1: 17), probably some quiet village near Damascus where, in seclusion, he could ponder the meaning of his great experience and determine his future course of action. Not only the words of Ananias' vision (22: 14, 15), but his own nature made action of some kind inevitable. He returned to Damascus and began to preach controversially, 9: 22. Not yet, refined through suffering, mellowed and enriched by love, could he utter 1 Cor. chap. 13. A plot against his life forced him to leave the city. He went to Jerusalem, where he endeavored to make the acquaintance of the apostles. They, however, were afraid of him and, had it not been for Barnabas, his visit would probably have been unsuccessful. His bold preaching aroused antagonism. The "brethren," fearing persecution, brought him down to Cæsarea and sent him home to Tarsus.

IV. PAUL, LOOKING BACK, Galatians 1: 11|17; 1 Timothy 1: 12-17.

His Testimony. Looking back over the cars of his Christian life, he gratefully testifies that the Power which saved him at Damascus has always sustained him. The arrogance of the Pharisees has become the humility of the chief of sinners, 1 Tim. 1: 15.

What New York Is Wearing

BY ANNEBELLE WORTHINGTON

Illustrated Dressmaking Lesson Furnished With Every Pattern

Enhance our charm by wearing flattering jacket costumes.

It is a season of jackets!

The one sketched is in the green and white printed sportsweight linen in combination with plain green handkerchief linen.

The skirt shows slenderizing line in pointed hip yoke treatment. The jacket is in popular hip length.

Style No. 3436 comes in sizes 14, 16, 18 years, 36, 38 and 40 inches bust. The 16-year size requires 4 yards of 39-inch figured material with 1¾ yards of 39-inch plain material.

It is stunning with the dress made of chiffon print in hyacinth blue coloring with the jacket of flat silk crepe in matching shade.

Yellow and white sportsweight linen with plain yellow sheer linen for simulated tuck-inn bodice is very chic.

Dusty pink flat silk crepe, white shantung and cotton or silk striped shirting are swagger.

HOW TO ORDER PATTERNS.

Write your name and address plainly, giving number and size of such patterns as you want. Enclose 20c in stamps or coin (coin preferred; wrap it carefully) for each number, and address your order to Wilson Pattern Service, 73 West Adelaide St., Toronto.

Will

Ignatius Loyola was a great leader and master of men. One of his rules was: "What you want to be you can be. Will it then, and will it with all your might." Modern psychology tells us the same thing. Character is a matter of right will. Holiness is a will set toward God and His righteousness.

Carbon Monoxide Takes Heavy Toll of Bird Life

Washington.—A never-ending gas attack from the exhausts of automobiles is taking heavy toll among English sparrows and pigeons, says Austin H. Clark, biologist of the United States National Museum.

These two birds, which formerly were common in the cities of Eastern United States, have been disappearing rapidly.

They feed largely on street refuse, which brings them into contact with carbon monoxide gas from motor exhausts. It is a heavy gas that tends to cling to the ground when there is no wind.

It takes very little carbon monoxide to kill a bird or weaken it so it is easily caught by cats, hawks or other enemies, Clark explains.

This is because birds live "at high speed." Their bodies transform oxygen into heat much more rapidly than human bodies.

They must have plenty of oxygen at all times. Anything such as gas that tends to block the oxygen supply from their lungs has a bad effect almost at once.

English sparrows were imported from Europe before the days of modern sprays and insecticides, to eat the canker worms that were infesting the American elm trees.

They accomplished their purpose but aroused complaints among bird lovers because they drove away other birds from birdhouses and feeding places.

To a Locomotive in Winter

Thee for my recitative,
Thee in the driving storm even as now, the snow, the winter—day declining,
Thee in thy panopl, thy measur'd dual throbbing and thy beat convulsive,
Thy black cylindric body, golden brass and silvery steel,
Thy ponderous side-bars, parallel and connecting rods, gyrating, shuttling at thy sides,
Thy metrical, now swelling pant and roar, now tapering in the distance,
Thy great protruding head-light fix'd in front,
Thy long, pale, floating vapor-pennants tinged with delicate purple,
The dense and murky clouds out-belching from thy smoke-stack,
Thy knitted frame, thy springs and valves, the tremulous twinkle of thy wheels,
Thy train of cars behind, obedient, merrily following,
Through gale or calm, now swift, now slack, yet steadily careering;
Type of the modern—emblem of motion and power — pulse of the continent,
For once come serve the Muse and merge in verse, even as here I see thee,
With storm and buffeting gusts of wind and falling snow,
By day thy warning ringing bell to sound its notes,
By night thy silent signal lamps to swing.

Fierce-throated beauty!
Roll through my chant with all thy lawless music, thy swinging lamps at night,
Thy madly-whistled laughter, echoing, rumbling like an earth quake, rousing all,
Law of thyself complete, thine own track firmly holding
(No sweetness debonair of tearful harp or glib piano thine),
Thy thrills of shrieks by rock and hills return'd
Launch'd o'er the prairies wide, across the lakes,
To the free skies unpent and glad and strong.

—Walt Whitman, in "Leaves of Grass."

Maternal Instinct

It is a mistake to suppose that the maternal instinct is universal on the one hand, or that it is developed only by personal experience on the other. Even women who are mothers may be found wholly destitute of it, with not a ray of natural feeling for their offspring; and some who are neither wives or mothers in fact are all the latter in feeling. These are the women who are the chosen friends of both sexes and all ages. To them flock all who have troubles, sure of a patient hearing and that sweet sympathy which of itself heals the wounds laid bare to its touch.

Wisdom of the Foolish

The foolish think that they can escape punishment; but every wrongdoing carries its own punishment. Punishment is not always something that happens to us, but rather something that happens in us. The greatest of all punishments is the loss of our humanity. What is more terrible than to lose the open countenance—to be forced to wear the fox's eye and the wolf's mouth?—Markham.

Vote or Be Arrested

Aim of Bill in France

Paris.—A law compelling all French citizens to vote, under penalty of fines, has been proposed by a group of conservative members of Parliament.

Voting, they declare in the bill they have laid before the Chamber of Deputies, is a duty and not a mere privilege.

The Chamber of Deputies and the departmental and communal elective bodies are, they maintain, composed too largely of the representatives of minorities because the other fellows shirked their duty at the polls.

In France, as in most countries, the well-to-do citizens are inclined to forego their right to vote. It is with the purpose of getting out this portion of the vote that the backers of the bill, led by Louis Marin, have moved for the reform.

Fear

Fear and lack of faith go hand in hand. The one is born of the other. Tell me how much one is given to fear, and I will tell you how much he lacks in faith.

Fear is a most expensive guest to entertain, the same as worry is: so expensive are they that no one can afford to entertain them. We invite wha we fear, the same as, by a different attitude of mind, we invite and attract the influences and conditions we desire. The mind dominated by fear opens the door for entrance of the very things, for the actualization of the very conditions it fears.

Fear is, so to speak, the direct opposite of faith, and faith is perhaps the strongest and most effective mental-spiritual force that we can possess or grow.—Ralph Waldo Trine.

Argentine Grain Output Grows

Buenos Aires. — Argentine wheat, corn, linseed and oats shipments this year show a considerable increase, private statistics of cereal exports reveal. A total of 1,928,752 tons of wheat was shipped from January 1 to May 22, as compared with 1,291,104 tons for the corresponding period a year ago; 2,480,795 tons of corn, against 1,2265,432 tons; 951,045 tons of linseed, against 683,378 tons, and 301,963 tons of oats against 162,457 tons a year ago.

Impossibilities

Nearly everything that is worth while, that has been accomplished by men, has been considered impossible by many others. Every man who has ever done anything great has been ridiculed and advised by others to let it alone.

"Yes, I fitted up my flat at a ridiculously low price. In fact, it cost me but a song."

"How's that?"

"Well, you see, I started up a solo on the back fence at 2 a.m. and the donations I received in the shape of furniture, etc., just filled the bill."

CANADIAN ROCKIES ECHO WI' SKIRL O' THE PIPES

From the four corners of Canada and from across the seas, men, women and children of Scotch ancestry are preparing to meet at the Canadian Pacific Railway's palatial Banff Springs Hotel, Banff, Alta., for the annual Highland Gathering, August 27–30, 1931. The event, which has become historic, is under the distinguished patronage of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales and will be formally opened by H.R.H. Prince Sukhodaya of Siam. A feature of this year's program will be the inter-regimental piping competition between representatives of the 17 Highland Regiments in Canada. There will also be the other bagpipe competitions and displays which have made the Gathering famous, as well as dancing and highland games. The meeting always draws a large gallery, in addition to the army of costumed participants. Juvenile competitions in piping and dancing are particularly attractive. In addition to the regular events, two Scotch light operas: "Prince Charming" and "Prince Charlie and Flora" will be presented by members of the resident company. The setting is ideal for the Gathering; the peaks of the famous Canadian Rockies, with their gracious valleys and sprayflecked streams forming a magnificent background for the Banff Springs Hotel, which is built in the Scotch baronial style.

Don't be a road hog!

The person who drives in the middle of the road at any speed, but especially the extremely slow driver, offers a silent insult to every other driver on the highway.

But this disregard of every rule of common courtesy is merely incidental.

The real offense of the Road Hog is that he forces others to risk life and limb. He obstructs the vision of those drivers behind him and makes them either drive at his speed or risk a head-on collision in passing him.

Probably no form of law-breaking on the highways causes directly or indirectly so varied a list of accidents as does middle-of-the-road driving.

Every man who drives a car helps to pay for the highways. Every motorist is entitled to use them safely.

Why deprive any man of his right?

Don't be a Road Hog.

KIDNEY DISEASE

Waste products are produced in the body as the result of the activities of the body. The body gets rid of these waste products through the eliminative organs, of which the kidneys are two important members. The blood passes through the kidneys and there the waste substances present in the blood and which are to be passed out of the body are eliminated.

The normal healthy kidney does this readily. There is a large margin of safety and so the kidneys are able to do their work properly as long as they are healthy. Indeed one healthy kidney is capable of doing the whole work, consequently if one kidney is diseased, it can be removed as long as the other one is healthy.

As is the case with other organs of the body, the kidneys may suffer from disease. The term nephritis means inflamation of the kidney. The inflamation may be acute or chronic, and so we have conditions which are known as acute nephritis and chronic nephritis.

In chronic nephritis or Bright's disease, the tissues of the kidney, which carry on the function of waste removal from the blood passing through the kidneys are destroyed. The amount of destruction and whether or not further destruction takes place depend upon the cause and upon how long it continues to act.

Chronic nephritis is very apt to be progressive because, as a rule, it is allowed to go on for a long time untreated as the condition is not recognized. The kidney functions improperly. It allows substances to pass out which should remain in the blood and it fails to eliminate the substances which should pass out, as a result of which they are thrown back into the body.

Chronic nephritis may follow the acute disease. The individual who overeats or who consumes excessive amounts of rich foods or alcohol throws a heavy strain on the kidneys and this may lead to their wearing out. Hardening of the arteries interferes with the blood supply of the kidney, and the tissues of the kidney suffer as a result. Wearing out of heart, arteries and kidneys often occur together.

Once the kidneys are known to be damaged, the right thing to do is to protect them as much as possible. The amount of work which they are called upon to do should be reduced. This can be done by practising moderation in diet and by taking care of the body through fresh air, sunshine and rest.

The treatment needed in each case can only be decided upon after the necessary examinations and tests have shown the extent of the condition. It is chiefly a question of how to give the kidneys as much rest as possible and so enable them to recover or, at least, not to become worse.

The periodic health examination allows for the early detection of any abnormal kidney condition, and this is one reason why such examinations are desirable.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Farm boys between the ages of 10 and 18 years are eligible for the club, and all colts handled must be 1931 foals, sired by enrolled stallions of heavy breeds, Clydesdales, Percherons and Belgians.

Already 15 boys have signed up, and a total membership of 25 is expected. These boys were lined up during the past week by Norman Hogg, of the Ontario live stock branch, and J. C. Shearer, district representative of Peel.

The boys must train and exhibit their colts, and any decorations used on the colts at the time of showing must be of the boys' own design and manufacture. The colts are to be shown on the second afternoon of Brampton fall fair, the judges to be R. W. Wade and Prof. J. C. Steckley.

Winners at the fair will take their colts to the Royal Winter Fair and compete with winners from other counties for the $500 donated by the federal branch. The sponsors of Peel's club are each donating $30 towards the club funds.

POSTPONED PEEL JUNIOR ATHLETIC FIELD DAY TO BE HELD AT HUTTONVILLE PARK

Wednesday—August 26th.

The executive of the Peel Juniors at a recent meeting decided to hold their annual Athletic Field Day at Huttonville Park on August 26th. The heavy rain on June 6th caused the postponement on that date. It was felt that the harvest should be practically finished by Aug. 26th. which is before the Toronto Exhibition.

Standard sport events such as sprints, jumps, shot-put, pole-vault etc. are on the programme as well as novelty events like the nail driving contest, coat and plate races, and Tug-of-war. An added feature will be an exhibition game of softball between an "All Stars" team versus Streetsville Juniors, who were winners in the softball series conducted among the Junior Farmers Clubs in Peel during May and June of this year. Mr. Wm. Hostrawser, Reeve of Toronto Gore will be on hand to present his Silver Shield to the Streetsville Club. This shield has to be won three times before becoming permanent property of a club. Streetsville is the first club to have their name engraved on it as they won every game played—(six straight) against Ebenezer, Trinity, and Bolton.

Sports begin at 1.30 p.m. Standard Time and the events will be followed by a dance in the Huttonville Pavilion in the evening. Carter's six-piece orchestra from Brampton will supply the music.

Mr. Bill Bovaird, Brampton, Pres. of Peel J.F.S. and Miss Beatrice Quennill, Streetsville, Pres. of J.W.I. are making special efforts to present a balanced and entertaining programme.

Presentation to Rev. H. V. Thompson

On Monday, evening, August, 10th, over 150 members and adherents of St. Peter's Anglican Church, Erindale, gathered at the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Evans, Streetsville Road, to say good-bye to Rev. H. V. Thompson, who has completed 25 yrs. as Rector of the Parish of Erindale and Dixie, his wife and family.

The Rev C. W. Holdsworth, of Mimico, occupied the chair and called the meeting to order, when an interesting program of speeches and music was enjoyed, in which the following took part: Rev. C. W. Holdsworth, Rev R. W. Allen, Brampton; Rev. R. J. W. Perry, Streetsville; Rev. Archdeacon Perry, of Welland, and Rev H. V. Thompson; Mrs Armstrong and Miss Gwen Croxon.

The occasion was made very pleasant by the presentations of a purse to Rev H. V. and Mrs. Thompson as a token of the high esteem in which they are held by their Erindale congregation. The address was read by Mr. E. H Norman, People's Warden, and the presentation made by Mr. W. G. Conover, Rector's Warden. A very appropriate reply was made by Mr. Thompson, who thanked his friends for the handsome gift to himself and Mrs. Thompson, and for all their kindness to them during their stay in Erindale.

A very pleasing feature was when two little girls, Francis Brundige and Audrey Norman, marched up, carrying a beautiful basket of flowers and presented it to Mrs. Thompson.

Mr. Hugh Thompson was presented with a fountain pen by his friends. The address was read by Helen Wilson and the presentation was made by Gladys Barker.

Mr. Noel Thompson received a nice club bag, the gift of the Sunday school the address being read by Hugh O'Neil, and the presentation made by Gordon Barker.

Very suitable replies were made by Messrs. Hugh and Noel, who expressed their thanks to their friends for their kind remembrances, which they appreciated very much.

A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Evans for their kindness in throwing open their home for the occasion, was moved and seconded, and the appreciation of those present was shown by a vigorous applause. To this Mr. Evans replied very nicely, saying it was a pleasure to himself and Mrs. Evans to entertain their friends of Erindale.

Messrs. Norman and Conover the Wardens, and all others who assisted in arranging for this pleasent event, are to be congratulated on its success.

After the close of the program, the company had the pleasure of looking through the beautiful mansion, and were then treated to light refreshments.

Mr. and Mrs. Thompson expect to leave shortly for their new home in the Niagara Falls district, and the best wishes of the people of the parish will follow them, and all hope they may be spared for many years to enjoy the evening of life.

The Address

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Thompson:

For twenty-five years past, we, and our parents, as members of your church and congregation, have greatly profited by your ministrations; and within that period you have greatly endeared yourself to us by your amiable character, your earnest devotion to duty and the hearty interest you have manifested in our welfare as a people. Each of us has had reason to remember your many kind acts, as well as the gentle and soothing words which you have spoken to us.

We consider that we are better, as well as wiser from the words of advice and encouragement which we have received from you. "For the word of the Lord is right and all His works are done in truth."

In the pulpit you have faithfully presented the precepts of our religion have warned us against the evils which continually beset us, and have earnestly pleaded with us to seek our truest happiness in the paths of rectitude and peace.

In our homes you have been our sincere and sympathizing counsellor and friend. In our hours of pain and sorrow you have spoken gentle and soothing words to our troubled hearts, our children have profited by your instruction both in church and school; your benediction has rested upon us in our domestic and business affairs; and in all things you have proven yourself our competent and loving rector.

Not only have you yourself rendered unestimable service to us, as a people, but your wife, and each member of your family, has been of great assistance in any work in connection with the church and community.

We have learned with great regret your intention of leaving us, and before you make your departure to your new home, those assembled here to night wish to express in some humble way the esteem with which we regard you, your wife and family. We therefore ask you to accept this purse of money, as a token of our mutual and increasing admiration and esteem for yourself, and of our gratitude for your labours in our behalf. We ask you to accept it as freely as we offer it and may the blessings of God rest and abide with you and yours as you go to your new home.

MANITOBA LETTER

348 Colony St., Winnipeg,

Dear Editor,—

Aug. 4.—Here we are in the city again. We went out to the country 1st May. The weather was still cold. The spring was very dry. 1st July we came into the city again—no rain in all that time. Plenty of grain was just laying in the ground, and the lawn just looked as it does in the fall, all dead. The 23rd we went out to the farm again. It had rained and rained, and you cannot imagine the change—grain up, and the lawn all green. Only seeing the change could make it believable, and the farmers were feeling so hopeful. There will be feed, anyway, and quite a good return in a few places. From Westbourne into the city, are some very fine crops. A few farms near McDonald are very short, but may spring u[illegible] before ready to cut. We stayed a week, then came to the city again. Roads were fine then, but last Friday there was a big rain, and they are no[illegible] good now.

This is holiday and the city is full of visitors from north, south, east and west. Last Friday a motorcade, 75-Highway Association starting from Galveston, 1700 miles from Winnipeg, joined by others as they came along. Galveston is chosen for next year's convention. Mr. Wesley McCurdy will take the place of Mr. Nearing as vice-president for Manitoba.

They held a picnic in the city park, refreshments were served afterward. There was speech making by Mayor Webb, Alderman Honeyman, Mr. Wood, president of the highway, and Dr. Hayes. Princess Patricia's Band furnished the music. I was introduced to Mayor Webb, Mrs. Webb, Mr. Wood and several others, and we surely had a most enjoyable time. In saying good-bye's, I said, I am a descendant of U. E. L., and isn't it fine we can meet like this. They agreed it surely was. After playing the Star Spangled Banner and God Save the King, all went their different ways.

August 3rd was the city civic holiday, and there was a large demonstration on Stevenson flying field. I was not able to be there, but those who did go say it was most thrilling. A very large crowd attended.

On the 1st August 10,000 labor, unemployed and communists paraded. The police had given their consent and there was no disturbance. A fine rain was falling, but that did not seem to annoy them in the least.

Mr. and Mrs. Matheson, from Clanwilliam, are in the city visiting her sister, Mrs. James Flynn.

Mrs. Vernon Shaver is out at Neepawa visiting her sister-in-law, Mrs. A. Harris.

Mrs. Fred Harris is visiting at the same place.

Miss Elveretta Harris is in the city for her holidays, with her parents. She returns to the same school she has taught in the last year—Lund School, in Clanwilliam municipality.

PRAIRIE ROSE.

Mrs. Wm. Broderick, Creditvale, has received word of the death of her father, Mr. William Young, at Newfoundland. His wife preceded him some years ago. The late Mr. Young lived in Toronto for twenty years. Some time ago his daughter went down to Newfoundland to visit him not having seen him for 22 years.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of My Dear Father, William Young, who passed away at his home in Newfoundland on July 28, on his 81st. birthday.

To think we could not say good-bye,
Will always bring regret
But the ones who loved you dearly,
Are the ones who don't forget.

The other responded: "Horatio, I regret I cannot lend you a pound."

"Indeed! And why not?"

"Because I have known you these ten years."

Schmul—"Which would you rather have, a million or twelve daughters?"

Levy—"Twelve daughters."

Schmul—"Why?"

Levy—"If I had a million, I'd want to have two, three, ten, a hundred millions more. But if I had twelve daughters, that would be enough!"

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS

Don Ellsworth's wife, formerly the famous actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears, leaving no trace. Dr. Cavanaugh, the great criminal psychologist, learns that their married life has been unhappy.

Peter Piper, Herald reporter, tries to get an interview with Dr. Cavanaugh. Instead he meets Barbara, the attractive daughter, and finds that she was engaged to Don before his marriage.

An unidentified body is found in the tule marsh outside the city. The only thing by which the body can be identified is a patch of scalp with some hair attached. Dr. Cavanaugh takes this home with him. He asks Ellsworth to secure for him a strand of Sheila O'Shay's hair, and Don violently refuses. Dr. Cavanaugh then goes to the Ellsworth house to see if he can secure the needed hair. He interviews Mrs. Kane, Sheila's maid.

"You must have been with her for a long time," Dr. Cavanaugh ventured, in a voice from which he banished all undue curiosity.

But Mrs. Kane was instantly on guard.

"Oh, you needn't think Miss O'Shay was a has-been. She didn't have to take up with that millionaire whipper-snapper because he was a last chance, not by no means! And why wouldn't she leave him, if she had a mind to, I'd like to know?"

"She did leave him, then?"

"I know nothing about it." The click this time was clearly audible. With amused admiration, Dr. Cavanaugh recognized its effectiveness as a means of emphasis.

"Still," he mused, "she might not have meant to go. Did you ever notice in Miss O'Shay"—tactfully he avoided the title "Mrs. Ellsworth," toward which Mrs. Kane had shown such marked aversion—"any signs of eccentricity, of unstable mental balance?"

"You mean, was she crazy?"

"I should not put it so strongly, but that is the idea."

"If you doctors would learn to speak plain English, maybe fewer of your patients would die. If Miss O'Shay was crazy, I'd say it was her own business."

"Yes, it might be," Dr. Cavanaugh's tone was placating. "By the way, do you read the newspapers?" He shifted ground suddenly.

"Do I read the newspapers! I've kept Miss O'Shay's scrap book of clippings since—for years. And the books would fill a shelf as long as that,"—pointing to the book case behind him—"I'm telling you."

"Then you know," Dr. Cavanaugh's voice was still unhurried, but he was forcing the pace now. "That an unidentified bory has been found in the tule marsh, and that I have been asked to aid in the attempt to identify it. I may be able to make that identification complete, if I can secure a hair belonging to Miss O'Shay. I came to ask if you will be so kind as to get it for me."

For an instant Mrs. Kane's eyes widened, showing a rim of white around the iris. The nostrils of her beak-like nose flared with the sudden intake of her breath. The network of veins on her cheeks stood out against the surrounding pallor like a miniature railroad map drawn in red ink. Her lips worked convulsively.

"I'll do nothing of the sort!" she said in a high, strained voice.

And then it happened—the thing for which every one who talked with Mrs. Kane watched with horrified expectancy. Those imperfectly fitted upper teeth fell out, and clattered to the floor.

"Oh," said Dr. Cavanaugh gently, "I'm sorry. Allow me."

His heavy bulk covered the space between them with incredible swiftness. He stooped to recover the ghastly white semi-circle and, as he rose, the fingers of his left hand plucked, unnoticed, a long, auburn hair from Mrs. Kane's skirt.

CHAPTER XV.

Dr. Cavanaugh carefully tucked the hair between thumb and forefinger into the envelope which lay ready in his coat pocket. The gesture was apparently merely that of reaching for a folded handkerchief with which he dabbed his fingers after restoring the teeth to their owner.

Mrs. Kane, with a sublime disregard of germs and complete lack of embarrassment, popped the teeth into her mouth.

"But aren't you, to say the least of it, interested in knowing the fate of the lady to whom you have been so long devoted?"

"Devotion's neither here nor there," Mrs. Kane responded cryptically. "I guess I'll find out all I need to know soon enough—maybe sooner."

"Perhaps. And yet I take it you would want to do all in your power to bring the criminal—supposing there is a criminal—to justice." Dr. Cavanaugh spoke with a mild positiveness, as if stating an obvious fact.

But Mrs. Kane was not accepting any statement merely because it was positively made.

"Justice!" she retorted with an angry snap of her jaws. "What good would that do? Justice generally is just somebody's fool notion of the way other folks' affairs ought to be fixed for them. Besides, you've got a long way to go to prove that there's any criminal in it at all."

"Oh, yes, quite." Dr. Cavanaugh waved the point aside as if it were not worth arguing.

"I reckon a lady could leave her house without being murdered. There's plenty that does, anyway."

"You're quite right. It isn't certain," Dr. Cavanaugh conceded. "Still, I believe you were the one who was sufficiently worried over Mrs. Ellsworth's absence to notify the police."

"Yes, I did that. I already told you I was mad at the way Mr. Ellsworth acted. And if Miss O'Shay comes back, she may call me a fool for my pains. It wouldn't be the first time she's done that. At any rate, letting the police know she's gone is different from getting her mixed up with the murdered corpse of some nobody that Miss O'Shay probably wouldn't touch with a ten-foot pole. If Miss O'Shay ever got killed, she'd see to it that it was done with more—more—style!"

Dr. Cavanaugh's wandering gaze unobtrusively followed the movements of Mrs. Kane's bony fingers plucking at the folds of her skirt. He was listening more to the modulations of her voice than to her actual words. Was there an undercurrent of acute anxiety beneath these disconnected asseverations?

"Unfortunately, one cannot always control the stage setting in such matters," he said dryly. "I'm sorry you don't feel inclined to help us out; but if you won't, I suppose you won't."

He picked up his hat from the table and spoke with the mild disappointment of one who has been refused a subscription to his pet charity.

"Well, I won't, so you might just as well quit right now!" The click with which Mrs. Kane's teeth dropped into place was a very determined click indeed.

As he switched on the lights of the car, it occurred to Dr. Cavanaugh that not once had she referred to the missing woman as her mistress, nor addressed him in any other fashion than as an equal.

It was late when he entered the lamp-lit serenity of his most unofficial looking office, but he lifted the wooden box containing the microscope from a cabinet which looked better suited to liquor bottles than laboratory equipment, deftly transferred the hair to a glass slide, and for a long time sat motionless at his desk, one eye glued to the instrument. Without looking up, he transcribed a series of minute, indecipherable notes on the sheet of paper under his hand.

Barbara, returning from her party, saw the thread of light under the office door. She hesitated a moment, her hand lifted to knock. Then, with a weary little shake of her head, she thought better of it and flitted noiselessly up the stairs.

The next morning, at an hour when most late-hour folk have yet to begin consideration of breakfast, Peter Piper was also experiencing hesitations and head-shakings.

"It's one peach of a good murder!" the city editor said with the appreciation of a connoisseur. "We ought to get Cavanaugh's report in time to make the home edition—Camberwell said he expected it some time this morning. You never can tell about these 'Experts'; but if he doesn't turn up anything, play it up anyway as much as you can, and we'll nurse it along. You drop everything else, Piper, and stick to Camberwell. Stick if it takes all day. You might telephone in occasionally."

"Right."

Peter, the inevitable copy paper bulging from his coat pocket, lounged out of the local room. But he was not whistling. He was meditating disobedience to the city editor's orders—which meant the imminent and definite risk of losing his job, and, what was infinitely worse, of "falling down on a story." But if his hunch was right, he stood a chance of getting that report at least a full half hour before the boys gathered in the press room at the city hall—getting it in time to beat the opposition, and getting it direct from Dr. Cavanaugh himself.

He stood for a moment outside the entrance to The Herald building, and even took a few steps in the direction of the city hall. Then he shook his head and darted across the street, pursued by indignant squawks from the horns of intervening trucks. A moment later the sputtering with which "Bossy's" engine always preceded going into action was accompanied by a low, lugubrious whistle.

Peter was banking everything on a girl whom he had seen only once, a girl with whom he had matched wits as an antagonist—a girl who would have no idea what it meant to hear Jimmy say: "You may call at the cashier's desk for your money"—a girl who would think it a matter of no importance whether you let your paper down. And yet he was banking on her!

3 Cures For Unemployment To Be Proposed in Europe

Geneva.—Three courses of treatment for Europe's unemployment ills will be proposed to the co-ordination committee of the European Union Commission late in August.

One would be an international exchange of workers under jurisdiction of a "technical placing conference."

Another would be public works on an international scale, financed by long-term credits recruited from idle capital.

The third calls for use of Europe's surplus population in "exploitation of territories which are in a position to absorb it usefully." Proponents of this idea do not list the territories which might be in that position.

The co-ordinating committee will use these and other recommendations from special groups in formulating a general plan of relief which will be presented to the European commission itself the first week in September.

A Fact

It is a singular fact, that it is easy enough to clearly see and to acknowledge what is good and better, but when one attempts to make them his own, and to grasp them, somehow they slip away as it were between one's fingers.

It may sometimes be wise to pretend to be foolish, but it is always foolish to pretend to be wise.

The ADVENTURES of CAPTAIN JIMMY and his Dog SCOTTIE

What came before: Captain Jimmy is flying to Japan with the Chinese General Lu. They run out of gasoline and are forced to land on a deserted island in the Chinese Sea.

After our adventure with the shark, we climbed up on the high rock that stood in the centre of the little deserted island. Here we lit a roaring big fire, in hope that some passing ship would see us.

All night we kept it blazing but morning broke grey and cold without a sign of smoke or sail on the horizon. After daylight, we piled on wet wood until a great pillar of white smoke went up to the clouds but never a sign of life did we see on the still, glassy ocean.

Great smooth swells came in from the open water, rose and crashed with a dull boom against the rocks but apart from the sound of the waves, our island seemed to be the most silent, deserted spot in the world. Sometimes we'd find ourselves whispering—why I don't know—for we could have shouted all day at the top of our voices and no one would have heard us.

Day after day we kept the smoke pillar rising into the sky—night after night we kindled a huge yellow blaze on the summit rock. We almost gave up hope of being rescued. No doubt we were far from the regular steamer channels.

When we weren't gathering wood for the fire, we were hunting eggs in the sand—and believe me—they were certainly terrible. We caught a few fish—but they were very small and felt like pin cushions, they were so full of bones. Being left on a desert island isn't half as much fun as we were taught to believe when we were boys.

On the fifth night a dense cold fog came in from the sea. It smelled like sea-weed and salt water and was so thick that you could scarcely see your hand when you held it out straight. The branches dripped with moisture and we huddled close to the camp fire. Even General Lu shivered through his six suits of clothes. Scottie sneezed in disgust and hid himself in the woodpile.

Suddenly, I woke up with a start. A deep rumbling sound drifted in from the sea. I grabbed Chung and shook him and he jumped to his feet with a yell. Then the deep rumbling sound came again. Once—twice.

A steamer horn!

Sure enough. It was the deep-toned horn of a freighter. Frantically, we piled wood on the fire. I figured that some steamer was out there in the fog, not daring to move until the air cleared. Hour after hour, we fed the fire with armsful of wood and brush. Up and down we tracked until we almost dropped from weariness. Lu forgot that he was a General and worked like a Trojan. If only the blaze could be made bright enough to penetrate the fog—

Then morning came again, and a strong wind blew up from the East. Soon the air would clear. I paced impatiently up and down trying to peer through the thick white curtain of the fog.

Chung, to my surprise, lay down and prepared to go peacefully to sleep.

"Sloon we know—velly good—velly bad—no can tell," said the tranquil little Chinese. "Sleep always good—all men samee when sleep. No muchee worry."

Lima Bean Diseases

Spraying lima beans just before the plants are in full bloom, with later applications if needed, may mean the difference between a crop and complete loss from mildew or bacterial spot, say the plant disease specialists of the New York State Agricultural Experiment Station in Geneva, who are making a study of diseases of vegetable crops. While spraying after the pods are set will probably help reduce the loss from disease, the best results are obtained when the first application of the spray is made before the pods form, the specialists add.

The spray mixture recommended contains four parts of copper sulphate, six parts of chydrated lime, and fifty gallons of water. Three to six additional applications after the pods are set may be needed to hold the diseases in check, depending upon the season.

"The wise man will put on the early application regardless of the weather and the presence or absence of disease, and will then adjust his later sprays to fit the disease," say the station specialists. "Many growers insist on waiting until disease is present before spraying, but our tests prove that late spraying alone never gives as good results as early spraying plus late applications."

The regular traction potato sprayer is said to be easily adapted to the spraying of large plantings of lima beans by making a few simple adjustments that will insure complete covering of the plants with the spray material. If a dust is to be used in place of the spray, it is recommended that either a 15-85 or 20-80 copper lime dust without poison be used. In the station tests, however, dusts were not as effective as sprays in controlling lima bean diseases.

The experiment station has a bulletin describing these experiments and giving directions which may be had free of charge upon request.

Politics

We move, the wheel must always move,
Nor always on the plain,
And if we move to such a goal
As Wisdom hopes to gain,
Then you that drive, and know your craft,
Will firmly hold the rein,
Nor lend an ear to random cries,
Or you may drive in vain;
For some cry "Quick" 'and some cry "Slow,"
But, while the hills remain,
Up hill "Too-slow" 'will need the whip
Down hill "Too-Quick" the chain.

Vienna Courts Take Months To Define a Sheet of Paper

Vienna.—What is a sheet of paper? The answer might seem fairly obvious but it has taken the Austrian courts many months to decide it.

The question had its origin in the brain of an Austrian tax official who, noticing that in a certain legal document the foolscap pages had been cut apart and then refastened, conceived the idea that each separate page must bear a separate legal stamp instead of one sufficing for the whole document.

The lower courts sustained the contention. But the upper tribunal decided that so far as its liability to the stamp tax was concerned, a sheet was a sheet of paper, even when it had been cut into four separate pages.

Women in Russia

Celia Simpson in the Women's Journal (London): In Russia to-day there are no occupations to which women are not admitted. There are women soldiers. I saw them parading outside the Winter Palace at Leningrad, at a demonstration of the Communist League of Youth; flappers carrying rifles, but apparently well drilled and marching stoutly. In a turbine factory I saw many women machine hands working lathes, and women engineers in the drawing office. But women are also admitted to, and welcomed to, posts of supreme command. There are women Generals, the Russian Ambassador to Norway is a woman, and the Finance Minister belongs to the fair sex! There is no woman's question in Russia. Women are paid the same wages as men for the same work.

Ancient City May Contain Secrets Of Civilization

Weird Stories of Honduras Jungle Told by Visiting British Explorer

Buried in the Jungle of Honduras, riven by earthquakes and guarded by hosts of venomous reptiles and insects, lies a city older than any other yet found in Central America. So old is it that F. A. Mitchell-Hedges, explorer for the British Museum, believes it to be the origin from which the later Mayan and Aztec cultures sprang; and he believes the country round about it to be one of the ancient cradles of mankind.

It is no dream city; of that Mr. Mitchell-Hedges has already shown proof, for last year he brought to the Museum of the American Indian over 1000 pieces of pottery, fragments of tools and weapons, and ornaments from the ruins of the ancient city. Scientists have studied these. They have found them to differ entirely from the relics of other Indian civilizations discovered in the jungles of Central America.

"It is old," Mr. Mitchell-Hedges admitted guardedly when questioned about his find. "It is so old that there are not even any date stones to be found in it, as far as I can say. There are no carvings of the feathered serpent god of the Mayans whose cities we have dated back to 600 B.C. It is older than any of these.

"Do you know," he warmed up to the subject, "I'm a little diffident about speaking of this because it seems so extraordinary. There is a wall about the city. Inside there are two mounds. And these mounds have stones about them—exactly like Stonehenge!

"Nothing like it has yet been found in the three Americas."

Strange Happenings

Strange things have happened on the site of this ancient city, according to Mr. Mitchell-Hedges. Earthquakes have torn and tossed the masonry walls. They have opened great cracks through the old city. They have elevated portions of it and turned others over. The work of destruction has been aided by the jungle plants whose fast growing roots have torn to pieces what other structures there were built of stones.

'It's a weird sort of place," Mr. Mitchell - Hedges said reminiscently. "There is a three-acre patch of land, that is a lot like that 'Lost World' that Conan Doyle wrote about.

"On this patch there are gigantic lizards with a spine that makes them look as if great combs for the hair are growing out of their back bones. They are seven feet long," he continued. "They must have been cut off from the rest of the world for thousands of years, for I cannot otherwise understand how they can have developed in such fashion."

Peculiar Animals

Animal life, according to the explorer, has altogether received peculiar stimulation along that part of the Caribbean from which he will make entrance to his secret city next January.

"I have caught turtles there which were 11 feet long from front to back and over nine feet in width," he said. "I have found crabs three feet across, and in the lagoons towards the interior there are crawfish that are five feet long."

And then the explorer was once more discussing his city. He has had experience in judging the age of the old walled towns buried under the jungle of Honduras and Yucatan. For 17 years he has been collecting specimens for the British and other museums. In 1924 he was one of the co-discoverers of Lubaantum, oldest Maya city in British Honduras, whose site has been entirely taken over by the British Museum now.

"The only clue I have so far found to the age of this new city is a strange one," he confessed. "I have found statuettes, about 18 inches high, buried in the ground when I dug among the ruins. Now do not forget that they were granite. But when I touched them. I found that parts of them had become as soft as toothpaste; that they had turned to clay. A geologist could tell you more about their age.

There are other strange things about this ancient city, according to Mr. Mitchell-Hedges. There are great limestone caves under and around the city. Many of them have, of course, been filled by earthquake subsidences, but many are still left. And these have man-cut shafts going down into their blackness from what formerly was the great city."

Canada Drives Back The Last Frontier

By Russell Owen, in the New York Times Magazine

Canada's northern frontier—the last frontier in North America—has moved in the last two years 1000 miles nearer the pole. It rests now on the fringe of those Arctic islands which used to be so inaccessible, so far from civilization, that the fate of Franklin's expedition among them is still a mystery. The north country, once thought a land of ice and snow, valueless except to the trapper, has become the happy hunting ground of prospectors; to parts of it, homesteaders are turning; planes fly over it any time of the year, its barriers are down to stay.

Mining, the hope of mineral wealth, has been the greatest incentive to this northern movement. The rich discoveries of gold and copper a few years ago in conjunction with the advent of the airplane as a reasonably safe means of transportation, gave a tremendous impetus to northern mineral exploration. Planes flew all over the north country. It is known that they were disappointed in their first inspections just west of Hudson Bay, but what they have found further west they have kept pretty much to themselves. It is significant, however, that a company has been formed to build a railroad line from Churchill on Hudson Bay west to Lake Athabaska, where there are rich mineral deposits.

The airplane is the advance agent of the railroad, and Canada, always noted for pushing her railroads in advance of development work, is gambling heavily on what the airplane will find. And side by side with this far-flung exploration for minerals there exists the steady advance of settlement.

It is the advance of a machine age, using all the tools at its command to conquer swiftly a country hitherto inaccessible. If it had not been for the development of the air-cooled motor these northern flights would have been impossible, and without the stimulus of finding ore, and even coal, iron and oil, it is doubtful if the railroads would be willing to spend huge sums on pioneer building. As it is, they are largely subsidized by the government, in many cases government-owned and operated.

The obstacles which they have faced at times have been tremendous. At first glance much of Northern Canada seems an ideal country over which to build a railroad. South of the bay it is almost flat, rising slowly toward the height of land, and then sloping gently down to the north. Its rivers are broad and filled with smashing drives of ice in the Spring, but they can be bridged. The timber gets thinner and shorter as one travels north and finally disappears in the tundra. Further west, of course, there are mountains and broad valleys, but where most of the railroad extension has been taking place the country is apparently ideal. Canada, however, is cursed with a surface known as muskeg. It exists in large patches, almost everywhere in the North. It is swampy, a mushy mass of decayed vegetation, the bane of all railroad builders. Year after year the lines take on a snake-like or roller-coaster appearance and have to be reballasted. Storms also make railroad work often as dangerous as exploring.

The men who are doing this practical exploration and construction are as different from the old-time pioneers—prospectors and trappers—as could be imagined. The pilots are young, ardent adventurers, who will take their planes anywhere you wish to go, provided a fuel cache is in the neighborhood. They are used to forced landings when the thermometer registers 40 below zero; they know how to warm their engines under difficulties, and to fly by instinct and by their knowledge of landmarks over a desolate country.

Many of the prospectors now are young engineers or geologists, working on salary for large companies, hopping by plane from spot to spot where photographs have shown interesting formations. One of the most important pioneers of this new North is the construction engineer, the man building the railroads and hydro-electric plants, a man who does not know when he is licked, who will divert or dam a wide, ice-laden stream to build his bridge or furnish water for power.

The hydro-electric plants are built to fill a real need, but the railroads are built largely on hope, and the fever of mining. When one goes out from The Pas to Flin Flon, an 80-mile trip which takes more than five hours by train, it is possible to realize the lure of mining, the hope of rich reward which has made these towns spring mushroomlike in the wilderness. In The Pas, which only two years ago was a wilderness town coining money and filled with laborers, engineers and prospectors, they now play Badminton and wear dinner jackets to dances, but Flin Flon is a real mining town. The main street is built on muskeg, and is humpy in Winter and knee-deep in mud in the Spring. The houses and stores have dummy fronts run up to make them seem larger in the time-honored frontier manner.

Prospectors have found more than minerals in these areas of the once "barren" North. In the Peace River district and the Lake St. John country, areas which for years were thought unsuitable are being settled by farmers.

A map of the resources of this northern country is dotted with markings of copper and gold, lead and zinc, silver, bituminous sands and oil, coal and iron. Ore from the Coppermine on the Arctic Circle is no longer an impossibility. And between all these points, extending almost to the mouth of the Mackenzie River on the Arctic Sea, lies the limitless forest. Year after year the paper mills have been growing in number and size, and reforestation is being done to conserve their supply. In the Lake St. John country there are enormous paper mills, and there also a little town, Arvida, has been built around a mill which will turn bauxite ore from South America into aluminum, a mill made possible by water power.

A little further west in Ontario the town of Kapuskasing has been constructed as a unit, a modern, comfortable town, with all the household comforts and many of the entertainments of much larger cities in the south. It has its moving pictures, its community house, Badminton courts, hockey and curling rinks. This town was erected in a region formerly so desolate that during the war it was used as an internment camp because the prisoners could not possibly make their way out. A paper mill was built and the carefully planned town grew around it; a railroad was constructed over the muskeg to Smoky Falls and a hydro-electric power house built to supply the mill.

There are hundreds of such centers of activity in regions which used to be beyond the reach of all but the trapper, all along the southern fringe of the new frontier from British Columbia to Labrador. They explain why the Hudson's Bay Company has been forced to push its posts further and further to the north, even to the Arctic islands. Men dig for coal a short distance from the place where Hudson died, and drill for oil almost at the Arctic Circle. The trappers are turning from the trap line to the fur farm, and there is talk of a fishing industry in Hudson Bay as large as that of the North Sea. It may be years before some of the dreams are realized, but the skeptic is shouted down by the optimist of the north, who already has deeds for proof.

"My husband always puts ten cents on the plate on Sunday."

"I shouldn't think that would do much good in a case like his."

Avoid "Herd Instinct," Says Chief Scout

Adelaide, S. Aust.—"Reading, writing and arithmetic are important, but they do not matter so much as character," declared Lord Baden-Powell, Chief Scout, at a luncheon tendered him here by the Commonwealth Club recently writes a correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor. Character building, he said, is the keynote of the Scout movement.

Many of the boys, he went on, were learning too much of the "herd instinct" and were having every thing done for them. They did what was fashionable and therefore began to lose initiative, resourcefulness and courage.

Generous in Love

A man may be a miser of his wealth; he may tie up his talent in a napkin; he may hug himself in his reputation; but he is always generous in his love. Love cannot stay at home; a man cannot keep it to himself. Like light, it is constantly travelling. A man must spend it, must give it away.—Macleod.

Physicians Slow to Recognize Presence of Cancer in Themselves

Even doctors do not always know when they have cancer of the stomach, but may go on for years neglecting symptoms which should send them at once for an X-ray examination and if necessary to a surgeon. So reports Dr. Walter C. Alvarez, well-known stomach specialist of the Mayo Clinic at Rochester, Minnesota, in an account to the American Medical Association of 41 physicians operated on in that clinic during the past seven years. In some cases the physician's failure to realize in time what was causing his own trouble apparently was due to long standing symptoms of indigestion so that the victim did not at first recognize the relatively slight difference in the new symptoms of cancer. In other cases the trouble was regarded at first as a stomach ulcer presenting relatively little danger. In a few cases there were no important symptoms until the time for a successful operation had gone by, these individuals being victims of the kind of cancer which gives almost no warning until it kills. Even in physicians, who should be able sooner than other people to detect dangerous symptoms, stomach cancer easily may become fatal, Dr. Alvarez concludes, before it is recognized as dangerous. The only sure precaution, he suspects, would be for everybody over 35 to have a skilled X-ray examination every six months whether or not he feels ill, but this is recognized as impossibly expensive for the average individual. A more practical suggestion is that every disturbance of digestion that appears suddenly in a middle-aged or elderly person should be taken seriously and studied at once by an X-ray specialist.

Sunday School Lesson

August 16. Lesson VII—Sowing and Reaping (Temperance Lesson)—Galatians 6: 1-10. Golden Text—Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.—Galatians 6: 7.

ANALYSIS

I. GENTLY SCAN YOUR BROTHER MAN, Gal. 6: 1-5.

II. REWARDS FOR WORKERS, Gal. 6: 6.

III. NATURAL LAW IN THE SPIRITUAL WORLD, Gal. 6: 7-10.

INTRODUCTION—The painful news reached Paul that his converts in the Galatian churches were forsaking his teaching. Judaizing missionaries from Palestine had come among them. They were evidently belittling Paul as a mere underling, Gal. chap. 1. They were also rapidly persuading the Galatians to accept circumcision and with it the regulations of the old Law, 5: 2, 4. The Galatian church was in danger of becoming a sect of Judaism.

In the first part of this letter (Chaps. 1 to 5: 12) Paul vindicates his own independence as an apostle, and sets the choice before them—Christ or the Law. Another danger confronted this Galatian church. The liberty of the gospel was being abused. No longer under the law, some thought that they were free to indulge their lower impulses. In the second part of the letter (5: 13 to 6: 10) Paul warns against this danger and gives practical guidance for avoiding it. He mentions four safeguards. The first is love, 5: 13-15. They are, indeed, free from the Law, but if a man loves his neighbor as himself, freedom from a legal code will not tempt him to steal from him. The man who loves will observe all laws. The second safeguard is being filled with the Spirit, 5: 16-24. The man who follows the promptings of the new spirit within him is in no danger of breaking any law. The last two safeguards compromise our lesson today.

I. GENTLY SCAN YOUR BROTHER MAN, Gal. 6: 1-5.

There are two ways, other than ignoring them altogether, of dealing with other people's sins. They can be dealt with critically or kindly. One can "kick the dog that's down" or help him to his feet again. Paul says, help him to his feet again, "restore" him, 6: 1. A kindly attitude has redeeming power. It will result in a kindly, and therefore helpful, attitude toward ourselves if we also should fall. Whether we shall be able to help the man who is down or not, depends on how we look at him and his sin. We are to look upon him, Paul says, as one whom the sin has "overtaken," tripped up, as if circumstances had, somehow, been too much for him. Who knows what burden of bitterness, shame, discouragement he may be carrying because of that sin? Robert Burns, out of the bitterness of his own burdened heart, wrote in his Address to the Unco' Guid:

Then gently scan your brother man,
Still gentler sister woman;
Though they may gang a kennin' wrang,
To step aside is human.

One point must still be greatly dark,
The moving why they do it;
And just as lamely can ye mark
How far perhaps they rue it.

Sharing sympathetically our brother's load, we are fulfilling the new "law of Christ" (v. 2) and following his own example, Matt. 17.

The great hindrance to such a kindly attitude is self-righteous pride. The man who considers himself too good to have anything to do with a stumbling brother or sister is deceiving himself, v. 3. Let no one take another as his standard of goodness. He who takes Christ as his standard will be saved from the sin of the Pharisee who said, "Lord, I thank thee that I as not as other men." Each one is responsible for his own character. Verses 2 and 5 are not contradictory. They refer to different kinds of "burdens." Some can be shared; others cannot. Verse 2 refers to those troubles, sorrows, shames which our sympathy can lighten. V. 5, to a man's own responsibility which he must shoulder for himself.

II. REWARDS FOR WORKERS, Gal. 6: 6.

Paul turns to one special duty—that of paying the Christian teachers, v. 6. The Galatians had evidently been failing to remunerate adequately those who were rendering to society the most vital and important services. Those who teach the community how to live—the educationalists, social and

A crepe silk that you'll find useful religious workers, are among the most poorly paid of all public servants.

III. NATURAL LAW IN THE SPIRITUAL WORLD, Gal. 6: 7-10.

One more warning! The consequences of sin cannot be avoided on a technicality. God is not fooled. One is rewarded or punished according as his deeds are good or evil.

Rewards and punishments are of two kinds, arbitrary and natural. A diploma is an arbitrary reward for work well done. The enriched personality, the increased capacity for work, service, enjoyment, are the natural rewards. A jail sentence is an arbitrary punishment for drunkenness. Trembling nerves, lowered resistance, lessened efficiency, weakened will, are the natural punishments.

God's rewards and punishments are natural. As the ripened grain grows from the sown seed, so rewards and punishments grow from the attitudes and activities of man. After sowing his "wild oats" a young man may reform, but the disease which he has contracted will some day show itself in his children. Potentialities undeveloped, die. On the other hand, "sowing to the spirit" produces values which are eternal.

After the sowing comes the period of waiting until the harvest is ripe. So, too, in the spiritual realm. Therefore we are not to grow "weary in well-doing," v. 9. Columbus, with each day revealing nothing but interminable wastes of sea, with nothing to indicate that he would ever see land again, wrote in his log, "This day we sailed on."

Manchester Holds Clean-Up Campaign

Manchester, Eng. — Nearly 600 more receptacles for junk have been placed in the streets of Manchester during the last 12 months in a big effort to make citizens more tidy, and the total number is now nearly 1000.

The improvement in the streets, of which this is evidence, is regarded as satisfactory, but little improvement is noticeable in the parks. The authorities are holding in reserve as a last resource against untidy citizens the power of prosecuting offenders who leave litter in the parks.

"Yer couldn't see a man starve, could yer, lidy?" "Not very well. I've come out without my glasses."

Can't PLAY
Can't REST
—child needs Castoria

WHEN a child is fretful and irritable, seems distressed and uncomfortable, can't play, can't sleep, it is a pretty sure sign that something is wrong. Right here is where Castoria fits into a child's scheme—the very purpose for which it was formulated years ago! A few drops and the condition which caused the trouble is righted; comfort quickly brings restful sleep.

Nothing can take the place of Castoria for children; it's perfectly harmless, yet always effective. For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old reliable preparation always on hand. But don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be an every-day aid. Its gentle action will ease and soothe the infant who cannot sleep. In more liberal doses it will effectively help to regulate sluggish bowels in an older child.

All druggists have Castoria; it's genuine if you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature and this name-plate:

H. S. Exams.

The results of the recent exams at our High School are in the hands of the Secretary of the School Board Mr. F. A. Maas. When we asked for the list of those who passed, we were informed that we could not have it until after the Board had a meeting and approved of publication. The results are furnished by the Department of Education, and we would like to know what the School Board has to do with them. They are public property. The pupils may go to Mr. Maas and find out whether they passed or not—then why not give the list of successful ones to the papers for publication at once? Exams. results at other High Schools were published days ago.

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

WITH THE LONE SCOUTS

We are glad to note that recently a combined week-end camp was held at Markham by the members of the Lone Scout Patrols at Markham and Unionville.

About a dozen Lone Scouts attended in all and these included the Scoutmaster of the 2nd Troop, Mr. Don Hutchinson, and also the Assistant Provincial Commissioner for Lone Scouts, Capt. John Furminger.

A most enjoyable week-end was spent, which included many Scouting activities and during which opportunities were offered to these Lone Scouts to pass tests for proficiency.

Scout Question Box

No doubt quite a few Lone Scouts throughout Ontario look forward week by week to reading this column in their local paper, and quite probably some question regarding Scouting and its history frequently arises in their minds, which remains oftentimes unanswered.

Therefore we invite Lone Scouts and others who are interested in the Boy Scouts Association to send us your queries, and we will do our best to answer them through the medium of this paper. Questions must be confined to Scouting subjects, and should be addressed to "Lone E," in care of Boys Scouts Association, 330 Bay St., Toronto 2, Ont.

Recently Toronto was the scene of the International Y.M.C.A. Conference, and boys from all over the world attended, many of them Scouts, wearing their Scout uniforms, and others in the National Costumes of their country.

It was quite a unique sight to see Scottish Boys in kilts, walking in the streets of the city, side by side with Greek boys in their picturesque National Costume.

International fraternisation amongst the youth of the world, in such circumstances as this, is a sure method of establishing lasting peace and friendliness amongst the nations in the future.

Hutchinson, and also the Assistant

How to Become a Lone Scout

If you are between 12 and 18 years of age, and for any reason cannot join a Regular Troop, write to the Lone Scout Department, The Boy Scouts Association, 330 Bay Street, Toronto 2, giving all particulars of yourself, and they will be glad to advise you how to become a Lone Scout.

Lone Scouting is designed principally to give boys in rural districts and small villages a chance to become Scouts.

Rosedale Resident Perishes Trapped in Flaming Home

Guest Escapes Through Blaze—Flames Prevent Rescue of Major Arthur Murdoch—Alarm by Neighbor

Toronto. — Trapped by seething flames on the second floor of his Rosedale home, which blazed like a furnace despite heavy rain, Arthur E. Murdoch, aged 50, of 154 Douglas Drive, was smothered to death at three o'clock Sunday morning. His body, charred by fire that had crept along the flooring, was found by firemen where he had dropped, his arm around his face as a shield from the fierce heat.

Awakened when his trousers caught fire, Edward Walsh, 105 Kenwood Avenue, who had been sleeping on a davenport in the living room downstairs, dashed through a curtain of flame into the cool safety of the rainstorm outdoors.

When he recovered his self-command, Walsh attempted to run back into the house to assist his host, but he was pinned by the arms of two firemen until the rashnes of his impulse was brought home to him. Firemen worked like fiends to get Murdoch out of the raging furnace which defied the downpour and held out for 15 minutes against streams of water from five hose lines.

Cause Not Yet Known

The blaze, considered the most spectacular fire in recent years, apparently started in the living room and worked quickly up the oak panelling, through the ceiling and into the second storey bedrooms. Fire department officials have assigned no definite cause to the outbreak. Soon after Walsh reached the street, great tongues of flame shot from upstairs windows and through holes they had eaten in the roof.

Smelling smoke that drifted through an open window of her bedroom, Mrs. Elizabeth Bullock, housekeeper next door at 150 Douglas Drive, became curious and finally looked out to see a yellow flicker of flames in the windows of the Murdoch house. She immediately phoned an alarm.

When he staggered into the street, Walsh caught sight of Mrs. Bullock standing on her doorstep, and he began distractedly to implore her to call the fire department. She had difficulty convincing him that she had done so.

"Why don't they come? Why don't they come?" he kept desperately crying, wringing his hands and running back and forth. Just an instant before the first fire truck pulled up, Mrs. Bullock relates, it dawned on Walsh that his friend was still upstairs. It was then he headed back to the front door.

Arthur Murdoch's family was summering at Island Grove, Lake Simcoe, where he was to have joined them. He is survived by his wife, a daughter of the late Lawrence Cosgrave; a son, Jack, in New York, who rowed with Argos at the 1928 Olympic games at Amsterdam; and four other children at home: Betty, William, Jane and Patrick.

Overcome By Smoke

The fire is thought to have started from a lighted cigarette dropping on a chesterfield in the living-room on which Mr. Walsh was sleeping. Major Murdoch had gone upstairs and, it is thought, was asleep in his bedroom. He had wakened and struggled to get from a front bedroom to the sunroom, when he was overcome by the choking fumes and collapsed on the floor of the narrow hallway. Firemen on rushing up the charred tairs found his body on the floor. Lieutenant McDonald and Fireman Wells of Balmoral Hall found the body, and carried it to the street. Except for a slight burn on the left arm, there were no other burns on the body. Dr. I. H. Erb, pathologist, reported. The post-mortem, performed late Sunday morning, showed death from suffocation.

5 Totally Blind In Quebec Blast

Two Men Killed and Women Lose Sight in Examining Dynamite Box

Joliette, Que. — Examining a box which they found in a small cabin brought fatal injuries to two men and blindness to five women here Sunday when dynamite packed in the box exploded.

The dead: James Mickewic, 27, and Joseph Ekyaiwitch, 28.

The injured women: Lucy Senkeivitch, 22; Margaret Mickewic, 24; Elizabeth Walker, 19; Winona Barry, 20, and Stella Gordon, 23.

Authorities stated all the injured women were permanently blinded with the possible exception of Miss Mickewic.

The dead and injured were all Montrealers and members of a picnic party which was to have spent the day at St. Calizte de Kilkenny, a village 15 miles from here.

The five women suffered terrible burns about the eyes and face and general lacerations and bruises.

Nine other members of the picnic party were some miles away from the scene, repairing their truck, when the accident occurred. They heard the loud report and hurried to the scene, where they found James Mickewic dead and other members of the party scattered about the wrecked cabin. Skyaiwitch died shortly afterwards.

The survivors were suffering so severely they were unable to say what happened. It was thought they forced open a padlock on the cabin door and brought out a small red box which contained dynamite. It was apparent from the injuries the party had gathered closely around the box as it was being opened.

Provincial police have begun an investigation to discover why dynamite had been left in the cabin.

An inquest wil be held.

Happy Marriages Rewarded

Dunmow, Eng.—Three couples who convinced a jury of six bachelors and six maids they had been happy married for a year and a day were rewarded recently with the traditional flitch of Dunmow bacon.

Tradition says the Prior of Dunmow Abbey eight centuries ago awarded a flitch, or side of bacon, to a married couple who had found happiness. The custom was revived last year after being discontinued during the war and post-war years.

It was learned recently that one 2,000 horsepower engine was delivered to an aeroplane manufacturer a fortnight ago for installation in a cup challenger.

Isolated Germ Believed To Produce Influenza

Evanston, Ill.—A mysterious germ, called diplococcus, and found in cultures from seven cases of influenza, has been isolated and is under study by Dr. Isaac Arthur Kendall, Northwestern University professor, who recently announced discovery of medium "K." He makes hitherto unknown bacteria visible.

Whether this organism is the actual cause of influenza has not been determined, Dr. Irving S. Cutter, dean of the Northwestern University School of Medicine, told the United Press.

"We can only hope that we are on the right trail toward finding the cause."

Prince of Wales Orders Car With Airship Design

London.—The Prince of Wales soon will be driving about London in a new car, built like an airship. From the side it looks like a segment of a circle.

The engine is placed at the back, and the front of the car rises in a sloping line from the wheels to an arched roof and tails away at the rear like a dirigible. The windshield is in line with the coachwork, at an angle of about 45 degrees.

Its designer, Sir Dennistoun Burney, builder of the R-100, claims a saving of 50 per cent. in gasoline and in horsepower required on a level road.

Manchurian Schools Get $10,000,000

Harbin, Manchuria—Marshal Chang Hsuehliang, Govenor of Manchuria, has made gifts to Manchurian educational institutions that already total $10,000,000.

Canning Laboratory Opened in Norway

Oslo, Norway—In support of the canning industry of Norway a laboratory has been erected in Stavanger for scientific research with the intention of finding ways of canning that might be less dependent upon the seasons. This laboratory was recently opened.

The laboratory, which with its three-story building covers an area of 580 square meters, is estimated to cost about 500,000 kroner ($135,000).

British Railway Receipts Exceed Pre-War Total

London.—The gross receipts of the four leading British railroad groups for 1930 amounted to $953,33,000, as compared with $626,246,250 in 1913. Despite the increase in gross earnings, amounts available for interest and dividends have decreased seventy-four cents on each $4 °5, or a total of $36,389,550.

In 1913, $1.68 out of each $4.85 of gross receipts was available for interest and dividends. During the past year 92 cents was paid over to interest and dividends.

Salaries and wages account for the major difference in amounts available for interest and dividends. During the year before the war seventy-eight cents of each $4.85 was the proportion paid out in salaries and wages. During 1930 the amount was $2.66 out of each $4.85.

Railroads during the last year spent eight cents less on each $4.85 of gross receipts for materials than in 1913; two cents less on rates, taxes and national insurance, and six cents less on sundry items.

Diamond Drilling Begun in Far North

Winnipeg.—New mining history is being written in the northland. Diamond drilling operations are under way on the shore of Hunter Bay, Great Bear Lake, within ten miles of the arctic circle. The property under examination, discovered by Dominion Explorers and Ventures, Ltd., is said to contain a massive body of copper sulphuric ore.

More than 27,000 pounds of drill equipment and supplies was flown into Hunter Bay by two pilots and work is proceeding 24 hours a day—because just now the sun doesn't set at all up there.

Youth Kills Self Dared to Fire Gun

Victim on Woodbridge Farm Did Not Know Rifle Loaded

Woodbridge—Acting on a meaningless dare from his younger brother on the verandah of a farmhouse Sunday afternoon, Walter Durant, of Vellore, put the barrel of a .22 rifle to his breast and pulled the trigger. The 21-year-old youth didn't know the gun was loaded. A bullet pierced his heart and he was dead in a few moments.

With his brother, Harry, aged 15, who lives at 401 Caledonia Road, Toronto, he was sitting on the verandah looking over the gun. The boy's interest in the gun was stimulated by the fact that his older brother would never let him shoot it.

"My brother always told me that I was too young to play with a gun," Harry said. "We had been over in the back fields of Britton Plunkett's farm where my brother worked, shooting sparrows.

"When we came back we were sitting on the verandah, and just for fun I dared Walter to point the gun at himself and pull the trigger.

"I was just joking, and after I made the dare I looked away. Then I heard the gun go off. I looked around just as the gun was falling from his hands. The barrel was pointed towards him."

After investigating, Constable Sam Ireland said he believed the shooting was accidental. A post-morten examination was performed by Dr. W. E. Berry and Dr. G. D. McLean of Woodbridge.

"I've half a mind to get married." "That's all you need."

Duties

Duties have a law which rules the accomplishing of them. No good feeling ought to exceed the circle of its appropriate order. Six Killed When Ohio Plane Crashes

Five Men and Woman in Crash When Plane Loses Propeller

Cincinnati, O.—Six persons, five men and one woman, were killed instantly her Sunday, when the Cincinnati-Atlanto plane of the Embrey-Riddle Division of American Airways crashed on the bank of the Little Miami River, one minute after its take-off from Lunken Airport at 8.40 o'clock.

The dead—William E. Keith, 196 Runyon Avenue, and W. P. Brimberry, 393 Peachtree Street, both of Atlanta, Ga., V. B. Baum, 1795 Foster Avenue, Memphis, Tenn.; M. T. Odell, Cincinnati, pilot; Miss Wrenna D. Hughes and William J. Dewald, co-pilot, both of Port Thomas, Ky.

Propeller Hub Breaks

A broken hub of the propeller on the right-hand motor of the Ford tri-motor plane caused the tragedy, airport officials said. The plane was in charge of Odell, who was transferred to the Cincinnati Division of the American Airways on Aug. 1, with Dewald.

In the minute which elapsed between the take-off and the crash, Odell staged a dramatic struggle with his controls. He was less than 500 feet in the air when the propeller was torn loose and fell from the plane. This lightened the load of the motor, and caused it to revolve at such a terrific speed that it, too, was torn loose. With one propeller Odell experienced difficulty in managing the machine, and apparently made for a sandbar in the Little Miami River, near the airport.

Plane Loses Altitude

He was unable to make the plane hold its altitude, however, and it fell on the sand and nosed over, killing the occupants instantly.

The passenger cabin was crushed like a shell when the plane turned over completely.

Gasoline was sprayed all over the wreckage, but Odell had shut off his motors before he died, and there was no fire.

When Were Horseshoes First Used?

The practice of nailing iron plates or rim-shoes to the hoofs apparently originated about the second century, B.C., in the countries bordering on the Mediterranean. It was not commonly known till about the fifth century, and iron horseshoes were not regularly used until the middle ages.—Animal Life.

Royalty's Hobbies

London.—It was revealed by an intimate of the King's household recently that in addition to stamp collecting George V. includes among his hobbies the collecting of curious watches and clocks. When his time and health permit he likes to wind them himself. The Queen, on the other hand, loves to collect miniature furniture, in which she has been interested from childhood and which inspired her to build the wonderful doll's house which is now at Windsor Castle.

Graf Zeppelin Adds to Long Log

Big German Dirigible's Trip to Arctic Caps Remarkable Record of World Voyages

By Lauren D. Lyman, in the N. Y. Times.

The Graf Zeppelin, which recently has been nosing about in the North Polar regions, although no longer a novelty, is still one of the marvels of this aeronautical age.

Finished in September, 1928, the Graf started on her career as a world rover the following month and since then has flown close to 125,000 miles, has carried about 2,000 passengers and has returned many thousands of dollars in mail, freight and passenger tariffs to her owners. She cost about $800,000 and, although during her eventful career she has triumphantly vindicated Dr. Eckener's confidence in lighter-than-air craft, she has been close to disaster on two occasions. Once, members of her own crew saved her and another time a detachment of French soldiers, hastily mustered as a ground crew, went to her rescue in Southern France when propeller shafts on several motors cracked at the start of one of her six transatlantic voyages.

Off to a Good Start

The first voyage of the Graf Zeppelin started auspiciously enough. With sixty-one persons aboard, including the eighteen passengers, and nearly a ton of pay load in the form of mail and goods, the Graf left Friedrichshafen on Oct. 11, 1928. She cruised slowly across Europe over France to the Mediterranean during the day and then hugged the coast line, crossing near Gibraltar to the African coast and then went out to sea. Weather to the north was not the best and Dr. Eckener guided the big dirigible on a southerly route for the first 1,000 miles of the ocean crossing.

Everything went well until the Graf reached the vicinity of Bermuda and started north toward Lakehurst. Then, caught in the grip of vertical air currents, the Graf swung out of its parallel plane almost to the perpendicular. Young Knut Eckener, son of the commander, was at the helm. In the cabins, passengers were tossed about as they never had been on a liner. Slowly the big ship responded, but the strain on the tail surfaces was too great. The fabric on the lower side of the port fin ripped and the wind, getting inside, whipped up a small hurricane and tore its way through the upper side of the fin, rending scores of square yards of the heavy cotton cloth.

In two hours, however, the agile sailors had cut away shreds from the big fin and had bound the edges to the duralumin frame. They were swinging around up there over the water in violent wind and rain with every chance of falling and no chance of rescue if they had fallen.

The airship reached land over the Virginia coast and came north to dock at Lakehurst 111 hours and 38 minutes after leaving Friedrichshafen. On the way back Dr. Eckener elected a northern route and followed the Great Circle. The return trip was made in 68 hours and 46 minutes.

The next voyage of importance came in March, 1929, when the Graf Zeppelin, with a passenger list of 20, visited Palestine, flying down across Eastern Europe and Turkey to Asia Minor and return, a distance of 4,968 miles, with everything working smoothly. Two months later came the second start for the United States as a preliminary to a world voyage.

The start of the delayed voyage came on Aug. 8, and she made the westward passage to Lakehurst by the southern route in 93 hours, flying 5,185 miles. Three days were spent in final preparations, and then the Graf Zeppelin started on her record-breaking trip around the world. That fourth Atlantic crossing was a record for airship travel that still stands—55 hours 30 minutes to Friedrichshafen at an average speed of close to 100 miles an hour. It was a great start for the world cruise, and refueling and gassing were hastened at the home port.

Aug. 14 she started for Tokyo, the longest leg of the world journey. The course lay north of Moscow, and to Viatka the airship followed the 60th parallel. Then, entering Siberia, Eckener elected a Great Circle course, cutting up as far as Lat. 63 and then down again over Ajan and Nikolaievsk and across to Tokyo. The distance was 6,880 miles, and the airship made it in 101 hours 50 minutes, arriving Aug. 19.

Four days later the airship started for the United States. Following generally the Great Circle course between the 40th and 50th parallels, she made the Pacific crossing in 66 hours 12 minutes between Tokyo and San Francisco.

After circling San Francisco Bay the airship continued to Los Angeles, completing this 5,500-mile leg in 78 hours 59 minutes. Here several members of the crew left the airship to lighten the load across the high plateau region of the Southern United States. Coming by way of Texas, she visited El Paso, then swung north over Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland and Akron, arriving at Lakehurst the morning of Aug. 29, twenty-one days and a few hours after the start.

It was a great achievement, and the record stood until this Summer, when Post and Gatty made the trip in a little more than eight and a half days in an airplane. The return flight to Friedrichshafen was uneventful, the Graf completing it in 67 hours 9 minutes.

Last year the dirigible made perhaps its most significant voyage when it flew with mail, goods and passengers from Friedrichshafen to Pernambuco, Brazil, in four days. It continued to Rio de Janiero and then turned north for Lakehurst, and after a refueling stop, for which the navy charged at the rate of $2,000 a day, the wanderer again sailed for home. The round trip was made in nineteen days. In that trip, which covered close to 16,000 miles, the airship stopped at ports in four countries, and Dr. Eckener announced that an airship service connecting Europe with the South American markets on a three-day schedule was feasible.

This scheme is to be tried with three round trips this year, according to Lufthausa plans, in which planes and airships will combine to speed the travelers and the air freight.

Vegetables Called Secret Of Quiet Life in China

Peiping.—Chinese men and women take life easier than Americans or Europeans, because they eat vegetables almost entirely, is the opinion of Dr. H. Necheles, German research physician, who has completed several months of study of Chinese diet and its effect upon the race at the Peiping Uionn Medical College here.

Dr. Necheles came to China from Chicago, where he had made similar studies of the effect of diet upon behavior. He is returning to Europe to carry his studies further. Experiments here have convinced Dr. Necheles that diet will explain many important Chinese characteristics, as well as those of Americans and other races.

City of Berlin Runs Farm

Berlin.—Although Berlin with its more than 4,000,000 inhabitants suggests anything but agriculture, its municipality owns and farms 49,400 acres within the city limits.

The principal crops are potatoes and carrots, of which 28,600 tons and 17,600 tons, respectively, were harvested last year. Grains, hay and feeds brought the total yield to 55,000 tons.

This year's yield is expected to show a considerable falling off because of a cool, wet Summer, which has retarded and stunted grains.

A farm paper says that cows that are milking heavily may drink 300 pounds of water a day. In the old days when we had to pump water for 'em we had the idea that the amount was nearer 300 barrels. The average girl's idea of a husband is a combination of Buddy Rogers, Rudy Vallee, John D. Rockefeller and Job. But you ought to see the one she eventually marries! Have you heard of the Scotchman who took his own tablecloth to a night club to avoid the cover charge? A street corner grouch was shocked yesterday when he saw a girl with two holes in one stocking, but sporting a brand new permanent wave, and what do you think of that? "What we think is how in the world did he happen to notice the permanent wave."

Old men who work are usually happier than those who loaf. An old man hasn't such pleasant things to sit down and think about, that he can have very much fun loafing. Some men are chronic failures because they are eternally trying to do something they can't do. But more of them get nowhere because instead of trying to do something, they persist chiefly in doing nothing.

Fiancee—"What cowards you men are! Father hasn't the courage to tell you of his debts."

Esther—"I'm not on speaking terms with Jimmie. The mean thing would not give me his seat at the barber's this morning."

Jimmy—"Did Moses have dyspepsia like what we've got?"

Two Seasons Only

Before the winter with a sword of ice
Advances under flurries snowy-gaited,
The leaves of bronze shall sturdily be plated
And armored as the trees are! I shall twice
Watch frost engrave the ground with its device,
Shall once, with many a blowing branch, withhold
The silver snow upon a leaf of gold.

So do I fight the winter year on year.
And in the spring, heeding the gentle quarrel
Between the birds, the squirrel and the squirrel,
The boys who play with agate marbles, I would hear
No summer sounds—no morning chanticleer
Or droning bee, or cattle munching cud;
Would see no bursting rose deface the bud;

Would have a world of autumn and of spring;
Would have two seasons only, that I might
Forever watch the flying, not the flight
Of birds; forever hear the thrushes sing
Of summer—summer be the unknown thing,
Or winter be unknown—and never know
That snow, in falling, only falls on snow.

FACE COVERED WITH PIMPLES

Now it is Almost Clear—and Her Health is Better

It needed courage to make this admission: "My face was covered with pimples." But evidently this woman sympathises with others who suffer the embarrassing condition which troubled her.

She wrote to us entirely of her own accord—giving her name and address—out of sheer gratitude and a desire to help others. This is the letter which we have on our files:—

"Some time ago my sister recommended me to try Kruschen Salts for my blood, as my face was covered with pimples. I am now using my second bottle, and I am delighted with the results. My face is almost clear and I feel better in health. I have advised several of my friends to give it a trial, as I want them to benefit the same as I have done. You are at liberty to publish this, as I cannot be too generous in my praise of Kruschen Salts."—W. C. S.

Pimples, acne and blackheads are caused by a rundown, disordered system, by those harmful acids and toxins which make your skin break out. So if you want swiftly to rid yourself of that ugly, blemished complexion and to obtain beautiful, smooth and soft skin—take Kruschen Salts.

Kruschen Salts are a perfect blend of the six vital salts which nerves, glands, blood and body organs ought to receive from food if they're to work properly—but it's simply impossible to obtain these salts in these days of modern cooking!

Kruschen provides just that gentle assistance your body organs need to rid your system regularly of all clogging waste matter. When your inside is clean and serene your blood courses through your veins pure and uncontaminated. You are healthier and you feel it. Your clearer complexion and your brighter eyes proclaim it. And your persistently high spirits prove it.

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at all Drug Stores at 45c. and 75c. per bottle.

HAS IT HAPPENED TO YOU ?
by P.C.1

Time: 5 p.m. Sunday.

Place: Kingston Road, 15 miles out of Toronto, coming west.

. . . about half a mile of cars moving very slowly and more cars joining the procession every minute. Brakes screeching, horns honking, heads thrust out of windows.

I flashed up to the head of the line . . . and got him with the goods. Ten miles an hour he was driving.

I steered him onto a wide spot off the road and I told him . . . plenty!!! Says I, "How do you know there wasn't a doctor in that line going on an emergency call?"

"Anyhow, what's the idea of holding up several hundred people just because you want to dawdle along 'till church time?" Funny thing was he didn't relize he was doing wrong . . . they never do. Didn't know he was insulting every other driver on the road . . . they don't think of that.

But I'll bet he will give others a little consideration hereafter.

If he doesn't . . . well, for his sake, and the sake of all the rest of us, let's be hopeful.

Station-to-station ("anyone") calls between 7.00 p.m. and 8.30 p.m. local time are on the low evening rate. Between 8.30 p.m. and 4.30 a.m. they are on the "night rate" basis and still lower.

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA

Nita was worried . . . she could not imagine where she had lost her bracelet—in the hotel or on the journey home.

"I can't think what I could have done with it," she kept telling her mother.

"Why not telephone to the hotel," mother suggested. "It's after eight-thirty now and a call will only cost a few cents."

Imagine Nita's joy when the hotel clerk told her that the bracelet had been found in her room and would be mailed to her right away.

Thanks to her mother's suggestion, Nita's anxiety was relieved at once . . . and the cost of the call was considerably less than her taxi fare from the station.

Don't be a road hog!

The person who drives in the middle of the road at any speed, but especially the extremely slow driver, offers a silent insult to every other driver on the highway.

But this disregard of every rule of common courtesy is merely incidental.

The real offense of the Road Hog is that he forces others to risk life and limb. He obstructs the vision of those drivers behind him and makes them either drive at his speed or risk a head-on collision in passing him.

Probably no form of law-breaking on the highways causes directly or indirectly so varied a list of accidents as does middle-of-the-road driving.

Every man who drives a car helps to pay for the highways. Every motorist is entitled to use them safely.

Why deprive any man of his right?

Don't be a Road Hog.

TREATMENT

The treatment of disease, in many cases should never be necessary, because it is treatment of a condition which should have been prevented. We should not have to talk about the treatment of diphtheria and typhoid fever; such diseases can and should be prevented.

However, when illness does occur the time to discuss prevention has gone by and treatment should be secured without delay. Next to absolute prevention comes proper early treatment. It is not of course as satisfactory as prevention, but it may be preventive in large measure, because it will in many cases, prevent the development of more serious conditions.

There are certain acute diseases which strike suddenly. They are not the rule, and it is well to understand that in practically every case of advanced disease, that case will have passed through a period when the disease was not severe or serious. The advanced, serious case of heart or kidney disease or of cancer did not become so all at once. If such cases had been under proper treatment during the early stages of the disease, then the more advanced and serious later progress would in many cases have been prevented.

Much of the suffering which occurrs, and the reason why so many cases first come under care with disease far advanced is due to the fact that the beginnings of disease are not considered as being serious, and people attempt to treat themselves.

Proper treatment can not be prescribed until the nature of the condition to be treated is known. The diagnosis must be made before treatment can be prescribed. The diagnosis is the most important service which the physician renders his patient. It is comparatively easy for a phsician to diagnos an acute or advanced case of illness; it is in the early stages of disease that it is difficult.

The untrained person who attempts to treat himself for something which he thinks is of little importance is attempting to do the more difficult thing. When he feels that he has arrived at a certain point, he will likely admit that he is "sick enough to have a doctor", but not before.

Every minor illness or upset does not progress and lead into a serious disease. The difficulty is that because of the neglect of minor illnesses serious conditions do develop in some cases. There is only one practical way to meet this problem and that is for people to make more use of their physicians for the early treatment of disease, knowing that if they do so, they will not have to call them so often to treat the long drawn out serious conditions that grow out of the improperly treated or neglected illness.

Better still would be to have a health examination each year and so make the doctor responsible for the early detection of any abnormal conditions.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

RECEIVER NAMED FOR GUELPH RADIAL

The Toronto-Guelph suburban line of the Canadian National Electric Railways, which ceased operations on August 15th, this year, is involved in an action commenced at Osgoode Hall by the British Empire Trust Company trustees for the English bondholders, against the C.N.R. Electric Railways Company.

The trust company seeks to enforce the security created by a trust deed between the Toronto Suburban Railway Co., and the plaintiffs, made for the purpose of securing an issue of 4½ per cent. mortgage debenture stock of the T.S.R. Co. They ask that the assets covered by the trust deed, now owned by the C. N. E. Electric Railways, be sold.

Plaintiffs demand the appointment of a receiver of the property and assets mortgaged and charged to the plaintiffs by the trust deed.

Defendant company was constituted by the amalgamation of the Toronto Suburban Railways Co., and the Toronto Eastern Railway Co.

The trust company further claims, for the benefit of the holders, the principal amount of the debenture stock outstanding, together with interest as provided by the deed.

The defendant company defaulted on its interest payment on July 15 this year. It was explained that the Toronto-Guelph line was the only system concerned.

The amount of bond issue was $2,700,000 of which it is stated about one-half is held in England.

W. A. Walker, of A. J. Mitchell and Company, of Toronto, was appointed receiver.

JUDGING CONTEST TEAM ANNOUNCED

The county team to enter the girl's judging competition at the C.N.E. was announced yesterday by Miss Pearl Church, home demonstrator, as Mrs. Jack Fraser, Miss Jean Fraser and Miss Jean Verner.

The first two young women represent the west side of the county and live at Huttonville. Miss Verner represents the east side, and comes from Bolton. Miss Church starts in struction classes in the home demonstrator's office next week for this group. There will be thirty girls taking part in the open classes in judging, and senior girls from the J.W.I. branches will act as coaches.

It is expected that there will be an unusually large group of Peel boys judging at the C.N.E., 60 names having been registered at the Department of Agriculture office already. John Fraser, Huttonville; Jim Hinkey, Cooksville; Arthur McKane Terra Cotta; William Hunter, Terra Cotta; H. Y. Castler, Cheltenham, L Smith, Snelgrove, and George Downey, Bolton, are already at work coaching this group, under the direction of J. C. Shearer, district representative.

NEW OFFICES

A wonderful transformation is being made in the old brick building on the corner of Queen and Main Streets, formerly owned by Mr. T. H. Goodison.

The exterior has been plastered all over and painted white. The interior has been renovated, and a wooden wainscotting built around the walls. This is now being varnished. Hot water heating is being installed and new furniture and fixtures will adorn the place. The Post Office will be located in the north side and the customs office in the south, and they will be entirely separate. Each office will have toilet fixture and other conveniences.

The contractor is the Streetsville Building Supply Co., Mr. Fred Haddon had charge of the plastering, and Messers. Geo. McClintock Sr. and Jr. are doing the painting and decorating.

The owner is J. E .Baily and he is to be congratulated on the improvement he is making to one of the main corners of our town.

RECEIVER NAMED FOR GUELPH RADIAL

The Toronto-Guelph suburban line of the Canadian National Electric Railways, which ceased operations on August 15th, this year, is involved in an action commenced at Osgoode Hall by the British Empire Trust Company trustees for the English bondholders, against the C.N.R. Electric Railways Company.

The trust company seeks to enforce the security created by a trust deed between the Toronto Suburban Railway Co., and the plaintiffs, made for the purpose of securing an issue of 4½ per cent. mortgage debenture stock of the T.S.R. Co. They ask that the assets covered by the trust deed, now owned by the C. N. E. Electric Railways, be sold.

Plaintiffs demand the appointment of a receiver of the property and assets mortgaged and charged to the plaintiffs by the trust deed.

Defendant company was constituted by the amalgamation of the Toronto Suburban Railways Co., and the Toronto Eastern Railway Co.

The trust company further claims, for the benefit of the holders, the principal amount of the debenture stock outstanding, together with interest as provided by the deed.

The defendant company defaulted on its interest payment on July 15 this year. It was explained that the Toronto-Guelph line was the only system concerned.

The amount of bond issue was $2,700,000 of which it is stated about one-half is held in England.

W. A. Walker, of A. J. Mitchell and Company, of Toronto, was appointed receiver.

JUDGING CONTEST TEAM ANNOUNCED

The county team to enter the girl's judging competition at the C.N.E. was announced yesterday by Miss Pearl Church, home demonstrator, as Mrs. Jack Fraser, Miss Jean Fraser and Miss Jean Verner.

The first two young women represent the west side of the county and live at Huttonville. Miss Verner represents the east side, and comes from Bolton. Miss Church starts instruction classes in the home demonstrator's office next week for this group. There will be thirty girls taking part in the open classes in judging, and senior girls from the J.W.I. branches will act as coaches.

It is expected that there will be an unusually large group of Peel boys judging at the C.N.E., 60 names having been registered at the Department of Agriculture office already. John Fraser, Huttonville; Jim Hinkey, Cooksville; Arthur McKane Terra Cotta; William Hunter, Terra Cotta; H. Y. Castler, Cheltenham, L Smith, Snelgrove, and George Downey, Bolton, are already at work coaching this group, under the direction of J. C. Shearer, district representative.

NEW OFFICES

A wonderful transformation is being made in the old brick building on the corner of Queen and Main Streets, formerly owned by Mr. T. H. Goodison.

The exterior has been plastered all over and painted white. The interior has been renovated, and a wooden wainscotting built around the walls. This is now being varnished. Hot water heating is being installed and new furniture and fixtures will adorn the place. The Post Office will be located in the north side and the customs office in the south, and they will be entirely separate. Each office will have toilet fixture and other conveniences.

The contractor is the Streetsville Building Supply Co., Mr. Fred Haddon had charge of the plastering, and Messers. Geo. McClintock Sr. and Jr. are doing the painting and decorating.

The owner is J. E .Baily and he is to be congratulated on the improvement he is making to one of the main corners of our town.

UNITED STATES TO CANADA

(A Gesture of Friendship)

Elder brother am I,
You are the younger son;
Bound by ties of kinship,
We work together as one.

The weblike line between us,
Needs not sentry nor gun;
In mutual understanding,
We work together as one.

Some may boast of warfare,
Of that we will have none;
In peace and fruitful labor,
We work together as one.

The race now set before us,
Alike with patience we run;
Girded with truth and honor,
We work together as one.

Elder brother am I,
You are the younger son;
Under the guidance of God,
We work together as one.

British Picture Causes Controversy

To Be Shown This Year at Exhibition Art Gallery

Cause of more controversy than any other British work of art in recent years, Mark Symon's famous painting, "My Lord I Meet in Every London Lane and Street," is to be on view at the Art Gallery of the Canadian National Exhibition.

The huge canvas, most discussed of modern masterpieces, depicts Christ, with St. Peter and St. John, in a modern English street, surrounded by crowds of present-day people in modern dress. Despite unquestioned artistic merit, this treatment of a religious theme caused its rejection by the Royal Academy. Shown later at a dealer's gallery, it drew mobs of artlovers and ordinary citizens.

Symon, the artist, an intensely religious man, first planned to become a clergyman but later decided to convey his spiritual messages through his brush. His technique revives the intense religious painting of the Renaissance and his style is that of the early era. All his works are religious in character. Hours could be spent seindying the detail in this, his most famous study. A sick child is being carried from a motor, in one corner. In the background are store windows filled with manikins, a steam-roller; on all sides, every-day men and women of all kinds. The artist has even included in the throng a picture of himself wheeling a baby carriage.

Earl Jellicoe Has Left for His Visit to Canada

London.—Earl Jellicoe, president of the British Empire Service League, sailed on board the steamer Duchess of York Sunday for Canada. The distinguished admiral will attend the Ontario provincial meet of the Canadian Legion at Oshawa, the meeting of the Dominion body at Niagara Falls, open the Canadian National Exhibition at Toronto, and preside over the deliberations of the convention of the British Empire Service League at Toronto. He will arrive in Quebec on Aug. 22 and proceed directly to Montreal.

Note by Lost French Fliers Found Floating in a Bittle

New York.—What may be the last note written by Nungesser and Coli, Frenchmen who perished on an attempted east-west flight across the Atlantic, was brought to Roosevelt Field by two men who found it floating in a cognac bottle near Fire Island.

The note, written in French, was signed "Nungesser and Coli," and read:

"We are sinking at this moment near Labrador."

The fliers left Le Bourget Field, near Paris, on May 8, 1927, and were never heard from.

Lindberghs Rest On Siberian Plain

Preparing for Their 897-mile Flight to Japan

Tokio.—Guests of the humble people of Petropalovsk, Siberia, Colonel and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh rested in preparation for their 897-mile flight to Nemuro, Japan.

The couple landed there at 3 p.m. Sunday (1 a.m. Sunday E.S.T.) after a flight of 554 miles from Karagin Island, off the eastern Siberia coast.

The Lindberghs were met by two launches, which escorted the plane to an anchorage while 60 school children stood under a crude arch, erected on the landing stage, in welcome to the Americans, and sang Russian songs.

Petropavlovsk, a town of about 10,000 Russians, Japanese and Mongols, lies on a plain with steep mountains five or six miles back of its excellent harbor. Gold mining, fishing and fur trading are the chief sources of livelihood.

Declares British Coal Coming to Churchill

Winnipeg.—Welsh anthracite coal will provide the major part of the cargo of two tramp ships which will come from England to Churchill through the Hudson Bay route for this year's test shipments of grain, the Manitoba Free Press said in a special despatch from Churchill.

Remainder of the cargo, the Free Press states, is expected to be British machinery. It is not known what amount of coal wil be carried by the steamers. It will be laid down in Churchill for about $7.85 a ton. Docking facilities at the bay port are not quite ready to handle the imports, but there is expected to be little difficulty in handling the cargo.

Sub-Soil Heating Plant

Aiding the florist to speed plant propagation in the hothouse is one of the uses that has been found for electricity. Metal trays containing a 200-watt heating element are placed under the plant boxes and thermostatically controlled. In experiments one florist, by maintaining a sub-soil temperature of between 60 and 70 degrees, was able to root 95 per cent of his plants in fifteen days, as against only 40 per cent. in ninety days under ordinary hothouse conditions.

J. F. Knoll, well-known composer and formed soloist with Sousa's Band, has written a new march "Hands Across the Border," dedicated to the Canadian National Exhibition. The manuscript has been sent to England, where the march will be rehearsed by the famed St. Hilda's Band, which will play it in recital at the Exhibition.

Meeting Place For Canadians

The Only Place Where Canada May Be Seen As a Whole

"It is," said the reeve of an Eastern Ontario township when discussing the Canadian National Exhibition, "the greatest meeting place for Canadians from every community. There are many gatherings of representatives of the Canadian people as a whole, for representatives of various sections of the Dominion; places where Canadians bound together by their special interest in special things, meet; events which bring together Canadians on some particular common ground.

"But there is no other spot in the entire country where one sees Canada as a whole except at the Canadian National Exhibition, and no other time in the year when every shade of Canadian opinion is focussed unanimously on one thing as it is at Exhibition time."

International s it is a great show window of all nations, recognized as a potent force in world trade by governments scattered throughout the entire world, mecca for thousands of visiting Americans, a great panorama of progress which is watched by observers who cross the seven seas to view it, the Canadian National Exhibition is, nevertheless, the Dominion's great annual celebration of her belief in her self. Paradoxically, it is perhaps the most Canadian of Canadian institutions, since it is unique and alone, a development which is entirely our own, which may be copied in certain of its aspects by other national expositions elsewhere but which can be duplicated nowhere else since the basic thing which sets it apart is its fundamental Canadian spirit.

For 53 years now it has been without equal and steadily growing. No small degree of its success is traced by the Exhibition's own officials to the support of Canadians in rural sections and in smaller towns and villages. Some may overlook this fact but not those who are most closely linked with the direction of the great exposition itself.

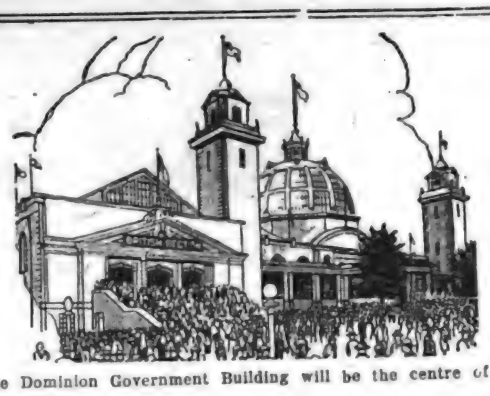
It is only necessary to interview either the President, Mr. Sam Harris, Waters, to understand how keenly these directing heads are aware of it and to learn what great value they place on this loyal co-operation. Significant of the importance they place in this is the huge expenditure on the agricultural prize list each year when $125,000 is devoed to this item. Equally significant is the fact that the newest and one of the most striking of the great institution's modern edifices is the million-dollar Horse Palace which is being opened in 1931 for this first time. Nowhere else in the world is there as magnificent a structure devoted solely to the exhibition of a country's prize livestock. The most important of the Exhibition's scores of beautiful buildings and the largest exposition structure in the world is the Coliseum and Livestock Pavilion with its 24½ acres under one roof.

In less than a large volume, it is only possible to give the briefest reference to only a few of the outstanding features of the 1931 celebration which opens on August 28 and closes on September 12, but it will be noted that this year's dates are particularly well suited to Canadians and arranged at a time when it is generally feasible to plan a brief trip.

This year, the war-time Admiral of the British Fleet, Earl Jellicoe, formally opens the Exhibition It is also expected that Canada's new Governor-General, the Earl of Bessborough, will make his first visit.

Special preparations have been made to increase the size and appeal of the Horse Show and all the agricultural and horticultural shows, with the increased exhibit space, will be outstanding. There will be trotting and pacing races and, a new innovation, pigeon racing.

The great grandstand pageant, this year, with 1,500 performers, and preceded by a score of circus attractions, will be "Orientia," an Eastern spectacle in which more attention than usual will be paid to the presentation of a huge dance spectacle. The famed 2,000-voice Exhibition Chorus under Dr. H. A. Fricker will give four concerts in the Coliseum. The Chorus has now given two concerts over coast-to-coast radio networks and has scored a sensational success. Tributes from musical listeners came from every section of America.



Among the scores of bands, there will be the St. Hilda's Band from England, five time world champions and entirely composed of soloists as well as Cavallo's celebrated ensemble.

In sport, the two races for the world's professional long distance swimming titles and a purse of $25,000 will again be staged with more than 300 athletes of all nations entered. In addition, there will be two Gold Trophy Swims for amateurs and a full meet for Canadian amateurs only. Three track meets will be held and a record program of outboard motorboat speed trials, yacht races, other acquatic sports, including races for navy gigs, a girls' baseball tournament and a dozen special sport events.

The Government Buildings give a birdseye view of the entire Dominion and its art, industry, recreation and education. There will be elaborate British displays and exhibits from foreign countries, including a spectacular show from Florida. There will be the National Automotive, Radio, Electrical, Process, Manufacturers', Construction, Office Equipment, Furniture, Implement and Machinery , Flower Shows, as well as scores of minor displays.

Last, but not least, there will be, for 1931, a new midway when the Model Shows of America, supplemented by units from Coney Island, Atlantic City and U.S. and European beaches, wil pay its first visit to Canada.

In addition to the marathon swims of 10 and 15 miles for the world's professional distance title and a $25,000 purse, the Canadian National Exhibition will, this year, stage two Gold Trophy Races for amateurs. On August 28 there will be a one-mile race for women and on September 5 a two-mile race for men. In addition, a swimming meet for Canadian amateurs only is planned for September 7, details of which are obtainable from the Canadian Amateur Swimming Association as well as from Exhibition officials.

The Dominion Government Building will be the centre of strong foreign exhibits.

For more than a quarter century, Mrs. C. Stevenson, now 76 years old, of Buckingham, Eng., has been sending examples of her beautiful handmade lace to the Canadian National Exhibition. This year, she has just sent her last entry. Slowly going blind., her eyesight will no longer permit her to do the fine work which has won so many Canadian awards.

Nearly completed, the new million-dollar Horse Palace of the Canadian National Exhibition will receive its final touches within the next few weeks and be ready to house the scores of prize animals from all sections of the Dominion in ample time for this summer's shows.

The Principles Of Life Saving

By Paul William Gartner

Back in the days when I was little more than excess baggage on an outdoor excursion, I happened to see a near tragedy in the Minnesota north woods. A canoe bearing a wiry Indian guide and a white man of considerable weight capsized about 100 yards offshore in the frigid waters of early spring. Neither the Indian nor the white man was a capable swimmer, and in the case of the latter the suddenness of the plunge, the coldness of the water, and the encumbrance of heavy clothing had him fighting desperately for air in less than a minute. He was within ten feet of the inverted canoe, but he might as well have been ten miles, so blind and frantic had the fear of death made him. The guide had succeeded in grasping an end of the craft, but apparently was unable to aid him without coming within reach of the powerful clutching arms.

The party to which I belonged was without water craft, but an older member, an excellent swimmer, quickly took off most of his clothing and then swam, without haste, it seemed, toward the scene of the mishap. I recall having criticized, with the impulsiveness of youth, his slow progress.

I was further shocked to behold the rescuer, upon reaching the drowning man, deliberately evade the clutching arms and livid face and swim to the canoe, where he clung for at least 30 seconds, unquestionably resting. Shortly, however, with the aid of the guide, he drew the canoe to the now feebly struggling man, who was very near to death, I presently learned. Indeed, when he was finally brought to shore no indication of life was apparent—yet, he was revived by the prone pressure method of artificial respiration after more than an hour of application.

Proficiency in life saving is the result of cool, deliberate thinking, as in the incident just given. In the first place the rescuer removed practically all of his clothing—as any person should do who finds himself suddenly confronted with a considerable swim to safety. Swimming at what appeared to be a slow rate of speed toward the drowning man was another example of sensible procedure. Even the seasoned life guard cannot swim at the same rate for 200 yards that he can for 50, and in either case he must have considerable reserve energy after he has arrived. A good swimmer could be drowned in less than a minute by a desperate, fighting victim. Indeed, battling with a subject who has felt the icy breath of death requires almost titantic energy.

The best way to deal with strangle holds is to avoid them; that is to say, the drowning person should be approached from the rear whenever possible. This strategy keeps the rescuer free of the other's arms and gives him opportunity to gain a good carrying grip.

Sometimes, before approaching, it is advisable to wait for a fighting person to exhaust himself, although it may not seem humane. This precludes the possibility that he will attempt to climb to the highest point at hand which, of course, is the top of the rescuer's head.

But despite all precautions there are occasions when a drowning person will obtain what is commonly called a death hold on a would-be rescuer. In this contingency the rescuer should remember to take a deep breath—if he can—and then without hesitation to submerge himself with the drowning person. This move will tend to make the subject release the hold as he struggles to climb upward again. The rescuer can utilize this tendency, in case of a front strangle hold, by shoving him upward. The back strangle hold is broken by twisting a subject's arm, by elbow and wrist, into an arm lock. The feet at times can be brought into play, not in a kick but in a powerful shove against the subject's shoulder. The carries for towing drowning persons to safety all follow the principles of maintaining the subject in a horizontal position and of keeping the rescuer out of his reach.

But it is frequently after the near victim has been towed to safety that some of the most difficult life-saving problems are faced, especially if he has ceased to breathe. However, artificial respiration is adopted only when the subject is not breathing. If he is unconscious, but breathing faintly, aromatic spirits should be applied to the nose and he should be massaged toward the heart, and kept warm.

As a rule, swallowed water is not dangerous, although it may bring a seizure of sickness. It is the water on the lungs which paralyzes the diaphragm. A man can fast for 40 days or more if plentifully supplied with water, but if his diaphragm is paralyzed for three minutes he may die. In this case never give mouth stimulants, for they will merely clog the throat passages. What must be accomplished is the removal of water from the lungs and the stimulation of respiration and heart action. And, without apparatus, the prone pressure method of artificial respiration (resuscitation) is the simplest and most effective method known to achieve this end. The method may be used with equal success in cases of suffocation by gas or smoke.

The victim should be placed face downward, arms up to allow the lungs their fullest expansion. Naturally the throat and mouth should be opened and cleared as well as they may be. Then the operator, on knees astraddle the subject's thighs, places his hand on the small ribs of the back with the fingers along the sides. Pressure is induced by swinging forward slowly, arms straight, thus contracting the lungs, and releasing with a snap which causes the lungs to expand and inhale. With the incoming air water will tend to be displaced and forced out. Pressure is applied for approximately three seconds with two seconds between contacts, thus allowing between 10 and 12 movements of compression and release each minute. Resuscitation should be continued until the patient starts to breathe again, which may not be for several hours.

Liquid mouth stimulants, such as hot coffee or tea, should never be administered until the patient is fully conscious. He should be wrapped in warm blankets, for it is heat, both external and internal, which is essential for a complete recovery.

The swimming method can properly be considered only the last resort in the performance of a rescue. It is, by far, more practicable to use a boat or to throw a life preserver. Some very effective rescues have been performed with the aid of a pole. One should never hesitate to throw some object that will serve to buoy another up, a bit of wood, a chair, table, or box, if nothing more suitable is at hand. I know of an instance when an individual was saved from drowning by a man who could not swim but who had the presence of mind to shove into the water a municipal park bench. It is not colorful rescues that the world desires, but safe ones.—"The Sportsman."

Little Daughter—"Why is father singing so much to-night?"

Mother—"He is trying to sing the baby to sleep."

Little Daughter—"Well, if I was baby, I'd pretend I was asleep."

Caution to Young Editors

If you take the advice of the fellow who says he doesn't care to see his name in the paper, you are making a great mistake.

Clarence—"Do you know what your one great defect is?"

Isabel—"I simply can't think."

Clarence—"Right—but I didn't think you'd acknowledge it."

A man unaccustomed to praising his wife went out of his way to call her an angel. "Mary," he said one morning recently, "you are an angel," and she felt charmed all day. In the evening she ventured to ask him why she had been so honored. "Well," said the wily man, "you are always flitting about; you are always harping on things; and by your own account, you have nothing to wear."

Alexander—"Which is right: 'The girl began to walk home,' or 'The girl started to walk home'?"

Horatio—"Who was the girl?"

Silence may be golden, but it evidently takes a greenback to make it so, according to the fellow who tells this one:

Lawyer—"Mr. Peck, your wife has been arrested and is being held incommunicado. But the police chief is easy and a little money——"

Henry Peck—"Fine, Fine, and tell him that there's ten dollars for him for every day he can keep her that way."

Our idea of a heavy hint is something that should be dropped.

Doctor—"Deep breathing, you understand, destroys microbes."

Patient—"But, doctor, how can I force them to breathe deeply?"

Budget Blues

The baby daily pined away,
He got no vitamin called A,
His hair fell out, his tooth was loose,
He could not have the orange juice.

This baby is a little dear,
And so are oranges, we hear;
But lest the little chap should hate us,
Let's try to rear him on tomatoes.

It is unofficially that the state motto of Nevada has been revised to read: "Divorce in haste; repeat at leisure."

Mother—"What did your father say when he saw his broken pipe?"

Innocent—"Shall I leave out the swear words, mother dear?"

Mother—"Certainly, my darling."

Innocent—"Then I don't think he said anything."

In training a child for a junior partner, you also train yourself.

The Ocean Woods

We wandered to the Pine Forest
That skirts the Ocean's foam,
The lightest wind was in its nest,
The tempest in its home.
The whispering waves were half asleep,
The clouds were gone to play,
And on the bosom of the deep
The smile of Heaven lay;
It seemed as if the hour were one
Sent from beyond the skies,
Which scattered from above the sun
A light of Paradise.

We paused amid the pines that stood
The giants of the waste,
Tortured by storms to shapes as rude
As serpents interlaced,
And soothed by every azure breath,
That under heaven is brown,
To harmonies and hues beneath,
As tender as its own:
Now all the treetops lay asleep,
Like green waves on the sea,
As still as in the silent deep
The ocean woods may be.

—Percy Bysshe Shelley, in "The Recollection."

FINDS TURTLE IN SWIMMING POOL

Sucked in by the hose pipe used to fill the deck pool on the Cunarder Mauretania during week-end cruises, the baby turtle in the picture was found swimming in the sea water by Miss Edith McNutt, a voyager. She decided to make a pet of it and evidently seems satisfied with her success.

Declares Plants Have Regular Sleeping Hours

Plants sleep too—some by day and some by night. A flashlight expedition to a garden reveals a sleepy crew, as different from the bold life of day hours as human beings curled in sleep are from human beings rushing for suburban trains. Dawn is too late, and dusk is too soon—one must catch the plants after they have had time to respond to total darkness, to the fall in temperature and to the action of the dew.

The beans droop; the pea blossoms nod; that succulent but accursed weed pudslane turns its leaves edge upward instead of spreading them flat upon the ground. The clover folds its trefoils in various patterns, sometimes bowing the third leaflet over the others as if in benediction. The single roses fold all their petals inward; the poppies shut up like clamshells; the asters curl their petals inward.

Meanwhile the scraggly evening primrose of the roadside seems to don fresh clothes at dusk, a coarse-leaved weed that sometimes fools the careless weeder of a calendula bed and always looks withered in daylight opens fresh petals and becomes a garden ornament—it is the evening lychnis, cousin of the gay rock-garden plants; and many a flower seems to unload an extra burden of fragrance at night.

Perhaps that is an illusion, as the old Hindu theory that plants prayed was an illusion. They did stand or bow, as the daily temperature changed, but it was not in deference to man-made idols. Plants respond to day and night, heat and cold, aridity and moisture, but in their own ways.

The Crabs' Marathon

Twenty-nine years ago a series of experiments was started study the migration of the finny and shelly inhabitants of the Red Sea.

A number of crabs were marked and returned to the Red Sea. One has just been recaptured in the Mediterranean. The distance covered was 101 miles, so that, if the crab had made a nonstop crawl, he would have moved—sideways, of course—at the dizzy speed of twenty-two inches an hour.

All kinds of sea creatures useful for food purposes are marked nowadays and their wanderings watched. The marking, which is painless, is usually done by means of tiny silver discs. The value of the experiments is inestimable. It was in this way, for example, that it was discovered where the infant plaice had their nurseries, and by protecting these, the value of the North Sea as a food storehouse has been enormously increased. England alone requires 200,000 tons of fish a day.—London "Tit-Bits."

If it is not seemly, do it not; if it is not true, speak it not.—Marcus Aurelius.

Widow of Astronomer Obtains New Pictures of Hottest Planet

Dark spots and yellowish spots have been photographed for the first time on the surface of the planet Mercury, smallest and hottest of the planets, by Mme. G. Camille Flammarion, widow of the famous French astronomer of that name, and were reported recently to the Academy of Sciences, in Paris, by M. Ernest Esclangon.

Since M. Flammarion's death Mme. Flammarion has occupied herself with observations through the telescope which M. Flammarion used. Recently conditions were favorable for observations of Mercury, and Mme. Flammarion succeeded in obtaining several excellent photographs, something seldom possible because of the nearness of Mercury to the sun so that it never is seen except just after sunset and when the earth's sky usually is too bright for good planetary photography.

The new photographs agree, M. Esclangnon told the academy, in showing some fairly definite markings, especially a whitish or yellowish area slightly south of the planet's equator and pronounced darker areas both north and south of this brighter one.

The markings seem not to correspond exactly with those which other astronomers have believed that they saw by eye, but since these eye observations always have differed greatly among themselves their failure to match the photographs is not surprising.

The surface of Mercury receives about seven times more solar heat per square mile than the earth. Astronomers imagine that the planet's surface is unprotected by an atmosphere and must be burned virtually to a cinder. No one knows what the actual surface is, whether cindery dust, volcanic ash, or something more mysterious.

A Respite

"Oh, lingering is a lovely word!
A heart-beat falling into space
Or tremor of a golden chord;
The spell that binds the wandering breeze
Above the shaken orange-trees.
Let us not spoil the dainty sorrow
By touch or whisper. This sweet death
When Time, indulgent, holds his breath
Lasts but a moment. Hold it fast.
Forgetting that there is a morrow
In this, our respite from the past.
For lingering si a lover's sign
And, by some miracle, our eyes
May lock, your spirit sunk in mine."
—Muriel Hine, in the Sunday Times.

HER HUSBAND TEASED HER

But not for long!

"I started taking Kruschen Salts for biliousness, and for the last two years I have been perfectly free from an attack. Now I continue to take them, as I find they keep me in perfect health. My husband used to joke about me taking Kruschen Salts; now he takes them himself, so do my children. My sincere thanks."
—Mrs. G. P.

When your gastric or digestive juices refuse to flow, your food, instead of becoming absorbed into your system, simply collects and ferments inside you, producing harmful acids and gases which give rise to biliousness, heartburn and flatulence.

Kruschen is a combination of six mineral salts, which goes right to the root of the trouble. It first stimulates the flow of gastric and other juices to aid digestion, and then ensures complete, regular and unfailing elimination of waste matter every day. And that means a blessed end to biliousness, and a renewed and whole-hearted enjoyment of your food without the slightest fear of having to pay the old painful penalty.

Letter of Appreciation

Brampton, Aug. 13, 1931

Dr. S. H. SMITH
Clerk of Streetsville

Dear Sir. — May I ask you to express to the Council of the Village of Streetsville the appreciation of all ranks of the Peel and Dufferin Regiment for their kindness to us while in camp.

Our stay was necessarily very short, but we all enjoyed it immensely. It was an ideal site for a camp and while the weather was a trifle unfavorable, we had a useful three days. We certainly appreciate very highly indeed, the attitude of your Council, and also the general attitude of the people of the Town. We were sorry that Reeve Hope was away, but we feel sure that had he been present he would have been equally as sincere in his desire to make our camp a success.

Yours very truly
C. M. CORKETT (Major)
Acting Commanding Officer
Peel and Dufferin Regt.

"It's surprisin'," said Mike to Pat, as they gazed at a brick cottage that was being built, "how mortar binds the bricks together."

"Whinever will ye get sinse?" replied Pat. "The mortar doesn't bind bricks together—It keeps them apart."

The absent-minded professor seated himself at the cafeteria table and waited patiently for 20 minutes. Finally the manager came to him.

"This is a cafeteria, you know," he explained. "You have to wait on yourself."

BRAMPTON TO HAVE FAST CIRCUIT HARNESS MEET

The open date, Wednesday, Aug. 26, the week preceding the Canadian National Exhibition, has been awarded to Brampton. The splendid plant in the enterprising town just 23 miles west of Toronto was at one time one of the best race centres in Ontario and harness horse followers will no doubt welcome the return of the harness horses back after a lay off of four years. Three classes, a handicap pace, 2.14 to 2.18 a 2.22 class and a 2.28 class will make up the day's programe. An entrance fee of 5 per cent. will be charged with no reductions from the winners. Canadian National rules with eligibility set at date of races. The barrier system will be used for starting with two starters, Al. Proctor and Dr. Hutchinson officiating. The purses will be named after noted race enthusiasts in the flower town. The fast class takes on the Robert Robson Memorial. The 2.22 class the Jack Speers purse and the 2.28 the McClure purse. All purses will be $200, and horsemen have signified their intentions of making Brampton an outstanding meet and one that will attract interest far and near.

GEORGETOWN

Georgetown was en fete Wednesday to celebrate the Relief of Derry 243 years ago by an Orange force, after the ancient City of Ulster had been besieged for more than six months. Members of the Knights of the Grand Black Chapter of British America and the Royal Black Knights of Ireland to the number of almost 8,000 attended, representing Preceptories throughout the Counties of York, Peel, Simcoe, Halton, Wellington, Dufferin and Wentworth.

The York delegation, representing no fewer than 19 Preceptories, was headed by Worshipful County Master James B. Reid, D.C.M. Alexander Oliphant and Samuel J. Jackson, County Registrar. In all 35 Preceptories were represented from the seven counties.

Passing under a huge arch erected on Main Street to represent the Gates of Derry, the celebrants paraded from the Agricultural Park, dressed in their impressive regulation attire, which consists of a black frock coat, "top" hat, white gloves, sash and apron, each carrying an Irish blackthorn cane. Preceptory bands, including those of Tobermore, Wellington and Ulster Fife and Drum Corps, played favorite Orange airs and marches. At the Agricultural Park a number of speeches were given, after Mayor J. B. MacKenzie had extended a civic welcome to the guests of the day.

Mayor W. J. Stewart of Toronto, in a rousing address, declared that the need of the day was plenty of red-blooded men to combat the Red-minded menace, which was at the present time defying British laws and traditions. "When you hear of "Red" meetings, I advise you not to be anywhere near," he declared. Referring to Communist schools and camps which were catering to young people, he continued: "We see communistic teachings offered to our youth, and it is high time that we stop to seriously consider what we are going to do when faced with such conditions as these."

Other speakers included Hon. Colonel W. H. Price, Attorney-General; Loftus Reid, Sir Knights W. H. Tuck, and Fred Dane and the Chairman, A. Art Gray, H.G.M. of British America.

In the evening the celebrants were entertained at a monster garden party given at the Georgetown Park, which was followed by a dance staged at the local Armories.

VILLAGE COUNCIL

Only three members of the village council were present at the business meeting held in the Council Chambers on Monday evening. The business was was brief but several important items were attended to. Moved by J. W. Drennan and seconded by J. E. Baily that the following accounts be paid: A. Quennell, $4.20; James Robertson, $17.10; F. McClintock, $37.80; J. Baily $6.04; V. Johnston, $1.00; J. Moore, $7.00; village work, $3.00; A. Wolfe, $5.60; C. G. E. Co., $21.77 fence workers, $9.00; Allansy Armature, $3.00; Northern Electric Co., $18.80. Moved by J. E. Baily and seconded by J. W. The evening of August the 14th will long be remembered by those who wended their way to the beautiful home and lawn of Mr. and Mrs. Shipp, Agerton, where the Busy Bee Society of St. Stephen's Church Hornby, staged a pageant representing the four seasons of the year. A prominent figure was Old Man Time. The pageant was well staged. The old and young bees were all busy—there must not be any drones in the colony. There were a number of outside talent and Palermo musicians who added greatly to the amusement of the evening. We believe the pageant will be repeated at the same place next Wednesday Aug. 26th, with a full program.

For TEETHING troubles

FUSSY, fretful . . . . of course babies are uncomfortable at teething time! And mothers are worried because of the little upsets which come so suddenly then. But there's one sure way to comfort a restless, teething child. Castoria — made especially for babies and children! It's perfectly harmless, as the formula on the wrapper tells you. It's mild in taste and action. Yet it rights little upsets with a never-failing effectiveness.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given to tiny infants—as often as there is need. In cases of colic and similar disturbances, it is invaluable. But it has every-day uses all mothers should understand. A coated tongue calls for a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever older children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset, a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Doctors prescribe it.

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS

Don Ellsworth's wife, the former actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears, leaving no trace. Dr. Cavanaugh, the great criminal psychologist, learns that their married life has been very unhappy.

Peter Piper, Herald reporter, tries to get an interview with Dr. Cavanaugh. Instead he meets Barbara, the attractive daughter, and finds that she was engaged to Don Ellsworth before his marriage.

The burned remains of an unidentified body is found in the tule marsh outside the city. The only clue is a patch of scalp with some hair attached. Dr. Cavanaugh requests a strand of hair from Ellsworth and Mrs. Kane, Sheila's maid. Both refuse. Peter Piper hopes to get advance information about the body found in the marsh from Dr. Cavanaugh through Barbara.

CHAPTER XVI.

"He either dreads his fate too much, or his deserts are small, who fears to put it to the touch, to win or lose it all," Peter chanted under his breath. He did not reflect that the words had been written as a love poem—nor that "hard-boiled" reporters were not supposed to be given to the quoting of seventeenth century lyrics.

Once again he slid "Bossy" to the curb opposite the Cavanaugh entrance, and waited.

Barbara's tennis dress had not been a fancy "sports costume." It was built for real play, and her racquet showed signs of hard usage. If she was the kind of girl who got up at eight o'clock in the morning to play tennis, the chances were that she did not merely play occasionally. Peter was placing a long bet that the morning tennis was a daily "workout." Not being a psychoanalyst he was untroubled by the suspicion that his subconscious was arranging a possible opportunity for him to see Barbara again—and that he was pinning his faith on her because he desperately wanted that faith.

But by the time he had waited half an hour, a chill grayness had seeped upwards from his toes and spread until it absorbed even the pale sunny blue of the sky. He was a fool—a fool without excuse. She was not coming. Dr. Cavanaugh had doubtless sent his report by mail. Even now it had been received at the police department on the morning delivery, and Jevons of the Record was pounding out the story. He was so deep in despondency that he did not even see the shiny little sports coupe until the corner of his eye caught a flash of white and rose as Barbara slammed the door of the car behind her. With that, he was across the street.

"Thank God!" he said loudly and fervently.

"Oh, yes?" The corners of Barbara's lips turned upward. "Is that the way newspaper men say 'Good morning?'"

"You bet it is!" Peter agreed. "Look here," he hurried on, glancing uneasily at the closed front door of the Cavanaugh house. "The other day I asked you to do something for me, and you wouldn't. Now I'm going to ask you to do something else."

"Meanwhile, you've done something for me," Barbara said gravely. "I don't think you reporters are half as inhuman as you pretend to be. I haven't looked in the papers lately, but I'm so sure you didn't write anything about me—that I'm going to thank you."

Peter flushed. It was a rare opportunity that the staff of the Herald room missed, for not one of them had ever seen Peter blush.

"I don't know what I'd have done," he said with difficult honesty, "if a big story hadn't broken and let me out."

"I'm glad you said that," Barbara said simply. "I like people who tell the truth—when it isn't necessary. It's one of those impractical virtues—you remember? Now what is it you'd like me to do?"

"It's this," Peter answered with a directness equal to her own. "Your father is supposed to go to the city hall this morning with a report. I want you to stand here talking to me when he comes out, and introduce me to him. He'd naturally stop to meet one of your friends. I'll do the rest."

"It sounds simple," Barbara said. "The only trouble I can see with your very neat little plan is that I've never been actually introduced to you myself. The friends whom I ask to meet my father are not usually acquired so—suddenly!"

"Don't quibble!" Peter said sharply. "The statement, you understand, will be public property in a few hours anyway. If I can get it from your father personally, and get it first, I'll have a whale of a good story. If I don't—well, I'm sunk, that's all. And it he's more likely to mail it than to take it himself, I'm sunk anyway."

"No," said Barbara. "He won't mail it. Father never wastes time. I think for the occasion of a crisis, you almost might be—one of my friends."

At that moment the front door opened, framing Dr. Cavanaugh's bulky figure for a moment before he descended the steps with his usual air of deliberation covering the speed that comes of no waste motion.

"Can you wait just a minute, father," Barbara called out. "I want you to meet Mr. Piper. He's a friend of mine, who works on a newspaper."

Dr. Cavanaugh held out his hand with his grave, but friendly smile.

"My dealings with the newspapers have usually been at second hand," he said. "But this younger generation has a way of adding to our education."

"I hoped I might meet you if I came around," Peter said with a disarming grin. "In fact, I'm supposed to be cooling my heels outside Camberwell's doorstep at this moment, but I cooled them outside yours instead. I'm working on the Tule marsh story for the 'Herald.' We have it from Camberwell that certain evidence was turned over to you for identification, and that your report would be submitted this morning. Would you have any objection to giving me the substance of that report these few minutes in advance? I take it that it will be made public at once, of course; but if I had it from you direct and—well, a few minutes before the other boys got hold of it, it would be a help."

Dr. Cavanaugh paused, his face devoid of expression, while Peter felt his hands grow icy with anxiety.

"Some day," he said at last, "I am going to write a monograph on occupational psychology. So you're trying to work a little gentle graft through Barbara here?"

Peter swallowed.

"Yes," he said, looking rather as if he were backed against a wall in front of a fireing squad.

"A queer thing, human nature," Dr. Cavanaugh mused. "If you had denied it, I should have sent you packing. But I see no real harm in telling you that—the body found in the marsh is that of Mrs. Don Ellsworth."

"Whoop-ee!" Peter's face was illumined with an incredibly wide grin. His wide-set gray eyes were sparks of excitement. He turned to Barbara, his arm extended for an eager hand clasp.

But Barbara was leaning against the side of the car, her knuckles white where her fingers clung to the door handle for support. Her eyes were closed. Her lips were only a faint compressed line against the pallor of her pinched, wan face.

Then, with an effort that summoned the last reserves of vitality, she opened her eyes.

"I'm glad—you got your story, Mr. Piper," she said, and crumpled to the running board.

CHAPTER XVII.

Dr. Cavanaugh, despite his age and his position on the steps, several feet farther away from the curb, was the first to reach Barbara's side. Peter, in fact, was rigid with astonishment, his face a blank mask of amazement. Only the sight of Cavanaugh's dark figure bending low, obscuring Peter's vision of the little heap of rose and white on the running board, brought his feet into tardy action.

Dr. Cavanaugh turned his head as Peter reached his side.

"If your reaction time is always as slow as that," he observed, "you'll be at a disadvantage in a number of situations."

"What—do you think—" Peter stammered inanely.

"It's nothing to be upset about," Dr. Cavanaugh assured him. He did not add that the degree of Peter's concern was rather excessive. The sight of a faint could hardly be in itself alarming to an experienced newspaper reporter. "Too much tennis before breakfast. I've warned her before that she played too hard," he continued, extracting a small bottle from his pocket. He withdrew the cork and waved the phial under Barbara's nose. "She'll be all right in a few minutes."

Peter abstractedly picked up the tennis racket from the sidewalk and stood turning it in his fingers.

"But can't I—do something?" he asked miserably.

Barbara's eyes opened wearily and closed again. In another moment she had struggled unsteadily to her feet.

"Don't be in a hurry," Dr. Cavanaugh advised. "You've gone at things a little too hard and you paid the penalty in a fainting attack. Nature's way of enforcing withdrawal from the scene of activity. A day's rest in bed will set you up finely."

"Mayn't I carry her in?" Peter had never in his life felt so incompetent.

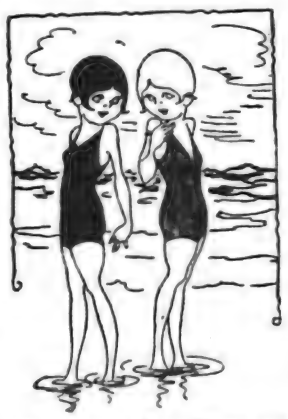
There was a hint of humor in Dr. Cavanaugh's glance.

"No such romantic measures are necessary, young man," he said. "My arm will be quite sufficient—though less spectacular. I'm not saying this to hurry you, but wasn't there something about your trying to get a story to your office ahead of time?"

"Suffering cats!" Peter exclaimed. "I forgot all about it. You're right, I've got to beat it."

He was half way across the street when Dr. Cavanaugh called him back.

"By the way," he said, "you might return my daughter's tennis racquet."



For the second time that morning Peter blushed, as he looked down and saw the racquet unconsciously clutched in his hand. He bounded back to the curb and tilted it against the side of the car.

Barbara said nothing. She leaned against her father's encircling arm, and as far as Peter could judge, was oblivious to any other presence.

Thankfulness for Light

The ADVENTURES of CAPTAIN JIMMY and his Dog SCOTTIE

What came before: Captain Jimmy is forced down in his plane on a desert island, while flying from China to Japan. Night after night he builds a fire in hope of attracting a passing ship. Then one evening he hears a steamer whistle in the darkness.

Night can't last forever. Gradually a faint light showed in the East. There we sat, all huddled around the fire, waiting. A dozen times I thought I made out a ship—only to find out that it was my imagination. Then came an excited yell from Chung.

"Lookee, lookee. Bigee Boat!" There sure enough, was a good sized freight steamer, anchored several miles from shore.

Just about sun up, a boat put off and a little while later it was beached about where we landed our plane. The Captain, whose name was Bueno, had seen the faint glare of our fire and decided to stand by and investigate in the morning. The crew were all Philipinos and spoke not a word of English.

I explained to him that we must take the plane apart and bring it with us, and after a while we dismantled it, and carried it abroad. General Lu had gone with the first boat to the ship, from which he refused to budge, but Chung stayed with Scottie and me and went in the last boat.

"Chung", I said when leaving. "What shall we call that island of ours?"

Chung gave it a scornful look. "Call him EGG" and so Egg we called it, which after all was appropriate, for it was nearly egg-shaped.

It was hazy and growing towards dark as we stood on the bridge of the Madrigal peering by turns through a telescope at the vessel which lay on the very horizon. Now and then we could see faint flashes as though a small gun was being fired.

Through the glass we could make out the ship as a small steamer, while dead a head of it, and partly hidden from us was a second boat that we couldn't see clearly.

It was late in the afternoon of the first day out from Karatsu, Japan, with a full load of coal bound for Manilla. Scottie and I were making the trip with Capt. Bueno and planning to spend some time on the islands. Securely lashed on deck was our plane, the Borden Eagle. At Karatsu, we had built her some pontoons and we had rigged a derrick and sling so that in a very short space of time we could launch the plane, overside.

The Captain was intently examining the strange ship through the telescope when Chung rudely interrupted. "Chung lookee through longee stick," he announced.

That China boy was all a quiver to get the glass into his hands. Never had he seen one before, let alone hold one, and he was all excited. With one hand he held the eye piece to his eye and grasped the other end of the telescope firmly. The very next minute there was and exclamation of surprise and dismay and there stood Chung with the telescope all collapsed. He had pushed the two ends together and instead of a telescope about two or three feet long he held in his hands one that was only about eight or nine inches long. You should have seen the surprised expression on his face.

When Depressions Were Depressing

I can remember back in 1873, when times were really hard, writes F. Van Dyck in the Saturday Evening Post. Laborers in our streets were glad to get 87 cents for twelve hours of hard work, and tried to keep their families alive in the squalor of insanitary slums.

There were all kinds of bargains being offered in those times. Men said the country had gone to the "demnition bowwows." There were a lot of spectacular failures that grew out of an equally spectacular boom. I was offered a seat on the New York Stock Exchange for $5,000 by a member who believed the economic bottom had dropped out of the world. He believed New York was bankrupt.

Our red menace in those days was the red flag of the auctioneer. He believed that before long the flags of auctioneers would be floating above the doors of most business houses. He was scared and he had to have money.

I do not remember who bought that seat that was offered to me for $5,000, but I know that it might have been sold a few years ago for $625,000. I have not the slightest doubt that in the future a New York Stock Exchange seat will be rated a bargain at 1 million dollars.

One of the bargins I did buy during that panic was a 43-acre farm with an 8-room house and barn at Scarsdale, in Westchester County, New York. I paid $11,500 to a man who felt that a country place was an extravagance; that the United States of America was ruined.

I sold off that place in small plots. To-day the tract, with the improvements, is assessed at more than $400,000. There are thirty or forty houses there now.

Traveler's Song

He who would travel far
  Must travel light
And for his company
  Take dear Delight.
Delight loves simple things,
  Her needs are few;
She is as young and fair
  As untouched dew.

But if Delight should prove
  A fickle friend
Let him to sturdy Grief
  A hearing lend;
He from her well-lined store
  A cloak may borrow,
No cobbler patches shoes
  So well as Sorrow.

The man who knows these two—
  Grief and Delight—
May view the world
And sleep at night.

Armour of 25 Foot Crocodile is Discovered in Texas

Ann Arbor, Mich.—The Museum of Paleontology of the University of Michigan recently announced discovery of the dorsal armor of a giant phytosaur of the Triassic Age.

The discovery was made near Amarillo, Texas, by an expedition composed of Dr. E. C. Case, director of the Museum of Paleontology; W. H. Buettner, preparator, and Theodore White, graduate student in the university.

Dr. Case describes the phytosaurs as large carnivorous reptiles, resembling crocodiles in form and habits. The specimen was part of the skeleton of a great animal about twenty-five feet long which lurked in the swamps during the Triassic Period, some 50,000,000 years ago.

The phytosaur's back was covered by an armor made up of thick bony plates, an dthe Michigan expedition made the first find of a set of armor plates, and the Michigan expedition Case said the finding of the plates of the dorsal armor in place is a unique discovery, as it will solve many questions concerning the form of these extinct creatures.

Near Amarillo, the expedition found, besides the specimens of phytosaur armor, a large amphibian skull, probably new to science, two phytosaur skulls and many other portions of the skeletons of reptiles and amphibians.

Future of Young Farmers Lies Right At Home

Washington.—Country boys who do not want city jobs were hailed as the hope of agriculture in a recent radio address by Dr. J. C. Wright, director of the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

Dr. Wright described the enthusiasm for country living displayed by 10,000 boys belonging to the Future Farmers of America, an organization sponsored by vocational agricultural schools.

"They are learning their best opportunity for the future lies right on the home farm or another farm," said Dr. Wright. "You will not find them walking the streets of our large cities looking for jobs where there are no jobs.

"They form and operate their own co-operative associations, they buy and sell, they conduct agricultural meetings, and they participate in the agricultural program of the community. Their laboratories are their home farms."

Coal Deposits Discovered

"The good heart does a little extra."—Chinese Proverb.

What If "I" Couldn't Hear?

This person "I" might sometimes be you or me. It might be the lady across the room or that gentleman just coming in the door. Anyone might some time be deaf and the keenest ears might some day become dull. In fact so delicate is the make up of the ear and so numerous its diseases that the wonder is there is not more deafness.

It is one of the many common ailments which comes in the act of living and humanity finds it must accept it whether it would like it or not. In each generation as people grow older more become halt or lame or blind as the years go by until everyone has some thing with which to contend in time The very strongest and best human beings become embarrassed with a weakness of some kind unless like "the one hoss shay," all its parts manipulate wonderfully for its full span of years and then give out, all at once, resulting in a complete collapse.

Isn't it a good thing we are not disabled at the same time, and not all oppressed with the same disability. The young and the strong in their temporary power are here also to help the weak and through it we all stumble along learning this life lesson. If we help each other it makes it all so much easier.

If I were deaf and should enter a roomful of people and should see no one there among the many faces who would care to make the little special effort to "bother with me," I would know that for me many things of interest would be missed and I would need to use all my ability to observe, feel, watch and catch on as best as I could to whatever was going on to get along. Should someone ask me a question so easy to answer if I only knew the subject under discussion I would have to either make a guess at what was being said and risk giving a foolish answer because it was foreign to the question discussed, or I would need to keep silent and appear stupid.

But if when I came I should see among the many familiar faces, one to whom I could go knowing she would help me by a smile or a nod or a word of explanation, which can so easily and unobtrusively be given for deaf people are very quick to catch on, just the fact of being near her would make it possible for me to enjoy all the entertainment and take part in proceedings. I could laugh and talk freely for I know my friend would give me the key to what was being said when necessary.

It is just another little way of "doing as you would be done by." There are times when every one of us can give this little assistance which means so little on our part but is so acceptable to the sensitive hard of hearing person.

Twilight Hour Story

Chicks and Other Little Friends

Don't you wonder how the little chicks are getting along? Well I can tell you they are not little chicks any more after all this time. Three or four weeks makes a big difference to growing chicks. They even grow faster than girls and boys and that is pretty fast, isn't it? I guess mother thinks you grow fast when shoes and other clothes get too small so very quickly. But it's great fun, isn't it, to have a pair of new shoes every little while all shiny and smelling new. I used to just love to hear mother say, "I guess Marie will need a new pair of shoes. She has actually outgrown those black slippers I got for her only a month ago."

Then I would say, feeling very glad, "Oh yes mother, they hurt all over, and I would see a nice store windowful of pretty shoes in my mind and say, "May I have the pair I saw in the shoe store with the silver buckles?" It was wonderful when she said, "Well we'll see but you are so hard on your shoes," mother didn't seem to be as glad as I was.

But then we are getting away from the chickens. It is a good thing they don't wear shoes like the horses do or a pair of shoes would need to be changed every few days, because their little feet grow so fast.

You see we couldn't tell you about the chickens because the cats did such funny things all at once, and it took a long time to tell the story. But now we've found the kittens and they are all stowed away in a dark closet where they will grow fast and be just fine in a place where Mamma Lady Filly can see them when they want to, and mind you they were so cute that even Daddy liked to look at them once in a while. I didn't tell you there's a reason for putting them into a closet that is dark. I'll tell you about that another day.

Of course you know even though we haven't heard a thing about the chicks for so long Mamma Lady and Billy never once forgot to feed them and water them so now it was astonishing to see how big and fine they had grown. They were beautiful with white, white feathers which made them warm and twice as big as they were before. I am sure if you had seen them you wouldn't believe they were the same chicks. But they were the very same and if you looked closer you could sure enough tell that one of them was Squatty for she was getting fatter all the time and was always looking for something more to eat Bridget was there too. You would know her because her neck was still long and thin and she was always looking cross and scolding somebody. I wonder what makes some chickens act like that. Lily, the beautiful one, certainly wasn't cross. She was tame as could be besides so pretty, so of course everybody liked her. I am quite sure Billy will be able to take her to the show.

But we haven't said anything about Jimmie Chick. I guess that is because ladies come first. Anyway that's what Jimmie thought for since he has grown to be a young rooster he began to think he must take care of his smaller lady sisters and another thing he was always ready to fight for them if he thought anything was going to hurt them. Squatty and Bridget and Lily liked to know he would take care of them too just as Billy used to think it pretty nice, especially when he was very small, to know he could run and get behind Dadd's big leg if he grew frightened about something. Then he could peer out from his safe hiding place to see what it was. Mamma Lady felt safe too when Daddy was around and do you know Daddy liked her to feel that way.

Well that's just the way Jimmy Chick was. He looked different too besides being bigger, for he was getting such a fine red comb on the top of his head and a nice fan-like tail was showing, of which he was very proud. Some of the longest feathers which were in it were starting to bend over as though they might curl. Did you ever notice a rooster's tail? It was beginning to get rather crowded in their box an hot, too, since they had so many feathers, but Mamma Lady and Billy soon fixed that up.

A Highly Sensitive Instrument

The eye, extraordinarily sensitive though it otherwise can be, experiences great difficulty in discriminating between white and nearly white substances. To this end, an instrument has been designed wherein the eye of the observer has been replaced by a photo-electric cell, which enables the instrument to measure accurately the extremely small differences between "white" surfaces. By this means differences inappreciable to the eye of even a trained observer can be detected.

Precedents

We are surrounded by instructors; we are in a great school house! It is full of letters, lessons, illustrations and appeals. If, then, we be found fools after all, how bitter, how terrible, must be our condemnation! Blame not the savage in the lonely forest for his ignorance of letters; but the man who has had every opportunity of attaining scholarship, and after all remains in ignorance, rightly deserves the concentrated bitterness of human contempt. But beware of setting up precedents and inaugurating analogies, and instituting seats of judgment; because God will gather them all together one day, and His great white throne will be the more terrible for the precedents we ourselves have perpetrated.

Christianity

Don't say, "There is very little Christianity in the world"; say, rather "There is very little in me." When you say the former the latter is true.—N. B. Remick.

August 23. Lesson VIII—A Gospel For All Men—Acts 11: 5-18. Golden Text—There is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call unto him.—Romans 10: 12.

ANALYSIS

I. A GENTILE'S PRAYER ANSWERED, Acts 10: 1-8.

II. A JEW'S OUTLOOK BROADENED, Acts 10: 9-23a.

III. A GENTILE PENTECOST, Acts 10: 23b-48.

IV. THE GOSPEL FOR ALL MEN, Acts 11: 1-18.

INTRODUCTION — For a time the church had to deal only with Samaritans, proselytes, or a "stranger" in the exceptional position of the Ethiopian eunuch. It now took the great stride which carried it over into the purely Gentile world. Not until the Jerusalem Council of A.D. 48 did the church frankly and fully recognize the equality of Gentiles, but the baptism of Cornelius and its ratification by the church was the first step toward a world brotherhood. It was a great achievement for Jewish Christians to welcome Gentiles. The gospel is for the whole world.

I. A GENTILE'S PRAYER ANSWERED, Acts 10: 1-8.

After the persecution, the church in Jerusalem enjoyed peace. It was a period of quiet and steady growth. The "scattering abroad" of the believers resulted in the growth, in various centres, of the new faith. The need of superintendence was apparent. At the time when Peter was on one of these tours, there was stationed in Cæsarea a Roman military officer named Cornelius. Dissatisfied with the pagan religions, he had been attracted to the purer worship of the Jews. He acknowledged Jehovah as the true God, and was widely known (v. 22) for his honorable character and philanthropy. Still, he was the seeking soul "feeling after God, if haply he might find him." He had gathered around him a group of similarly seeking souls, v. 2. Had Philip, probably by the time settled in Cæsarea, influenced them? In a dream he saw an angel who told him that his "prayers and charity had risen before God as a sacrifice to be remembered, v. 4. Obedience to the light he had, brought Cornelius to fuller knowledge.

II. A JEW'S OUTLOOK BROADENED, Acts 10: 9-23a.

Some delay in the tanner's kitchen, the hunger of a lodger whose soul was troubled, occasioned a dream which changed the course of early church history, v. 10. The question of the relation between Jew and Gentile had forced itself upon Peter. The Jews were a "peculiar" people—God's own. Gentiles were "common." As they did not conform to Jewish food regulations, they were "unclean." Therefore, all social intercourse was practically prohibited. What was a Christian Jew to do? Peter should have known the answer, for Jesus gave it to him long ago (Mark 7: 19), but he had forgotten. He was slow to grasp the implications of the Jesus Way. Joppa, with its shipping, its busy Gentile traders, would raise the question. It would also raise the question, did the Lord's commission extend to these foreigners? His troubled waking thoughts wove themselves into the fabric of his dream. Did it mean that for Christians the old regulations no longer held? that no man was "common" in the sight of the All-Father? When the Gentile messengers arrived, Peter welcomed them as equals, and he went with them to Cæsarea.

III. A GENTILE PENTECOST, Acts 10: 23b-48.

Peter, conscious that a crisis was at hand, took with him six brethren from Joppa, 11: 12. Cornelius, realizing the importance of this visit, arranged a gathering to meet him. When Peter arrived, the centurion "met him, and fell down at his feet, and worshiped him" (v. 25) that is, prostrated himself at his feet. This mark of respect toward royalty and superior personages is still common in the east. Imagine a Roman officer prostrating himself before a Jew!

The humility of the Roman was matched by the humility of the Jew, v. 26. Peter, very self-conscious in doing something so unusual, explained why he was doing it, v. 28. He then told the assembled people about Jesus Christ, and the equal worth of all men in the sight of God. The expectant hearers, like all earnest men, were as good soil for good seed. To the amazement of his six companions, the Spirit came upon all present, v. 45.

One part of baptism had already been given. Who, then, could withhold the other? These uncircumcised Gentiles were then baptized, and thus received into the church by an apostle. Although it was considered to be a "special case," it marked the beginning of a new chapter in the history of the church.

IV. THE GOSPEL FOR ALL MEN, Acts 11: 1-18.

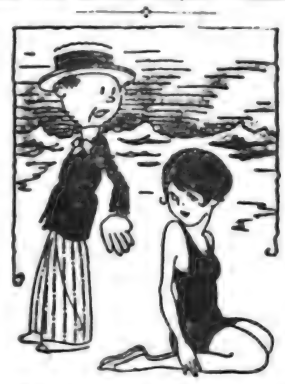
Peter's action precipitated a controversy in Jerusalem. Gentile "persons" were to be welcomed into the church, of course, but they must come in through the door of circumcision and live as Jews. So said the circumcision party. Yet, here was Peter, an apostle, actually eating with the unclean pagans—administering the rites of the church to them! They did not understand yet that a follower of Jesus cannot be a respecter of persons, that ecclesiastical narrowness and racial snobbery have no place on the Christian program.

The Best

If we were for a single day to seek to find good points in the acts of those around us, to let their little weaknesses and failings fade into nothingness in the shadow of our charity, to emphasize their best, to recognize it, to appeal to it, to call it forth and to develop it, life would seem very different indeed to ourselves and to them. A smile, a word of sympathy, a touch of human kindness, a hand clasp of fellowship, an unexpected bit of tenderness, courtesy or consideration will accomplish wonders. It is syndicating sunlight and that is what real optimism is. It has a cheering, transforming power that no amount of criticism or reproof could accomplish in changing others. The best way to take the sting from one's own sorrow is by forgetting it in ministering to another; lightening the burden of some one else makes our own rest more lightly on our shoulders.

An Up-Look

Most persons who have failed know that they have failed. Therefore our condemnation of their failure does not help them to future victory nearly as much as does our expressed belief that they are going to have such victory. What they need is not fresh reminder of the seeming hopelessness of their case, but an assurance that others see hope where they see none. A certain man who has peculiar power in helping his fellow-men to do better than they ever thought they could, works by this simple recipe. He never talks much about their failures; he talks enthusiastically, with a confidence that fairly radiates from him, about what he knows they are going to accomplish. "I really believe I can do it, after all," is the hopeful spirit in which men leave his side; and then they go and do it, just because he believed they would. Looking up is always better than looking down, both for ourselves and for others.



The Only Way

I must have someone by me who sinks his own will utterly in mine, who believes in me unflinchingly, who will cling to me in good hap and ill, who lives only to shed light and warmth over my life and must die if I fail.

Buy yourself a dog, my lord!—Henrik Ibsen.

Events

Considering the unforeseen events of this world, we should be taught that no human condition should inspire men with absolute despair.—Fielding.

He—"Pardon me, I didn't catch your last name."

She—"I haven't caught it myself yet."

Phone Messages To Be Recorded

New Device Enables Business Executive to Have Full Resume of Phone Transaction

A device for recording telephone conversations, local, long distance, and transoceanic, has been perfected in Germany. H. H. Kohlhaas, the International Telephone and Telegraphic Company's manager of publications announces.

The New York Times quotes him as follows:

"We believe there is a large field for this sort of device.

"Suppose a representative of a large banking-house has to make some rapid negotiations on an important matter with a bank in, let us say, Buenos Aires. The deal is completed after a long and detailed conversation. He then has to explain it to his associates. Instead of resorting to hasty and, perhaps, illegible notes, he turns on the recorder and the entire conversation is repeated; or, perhaps, a stenographer makes a transcript of it for further study.

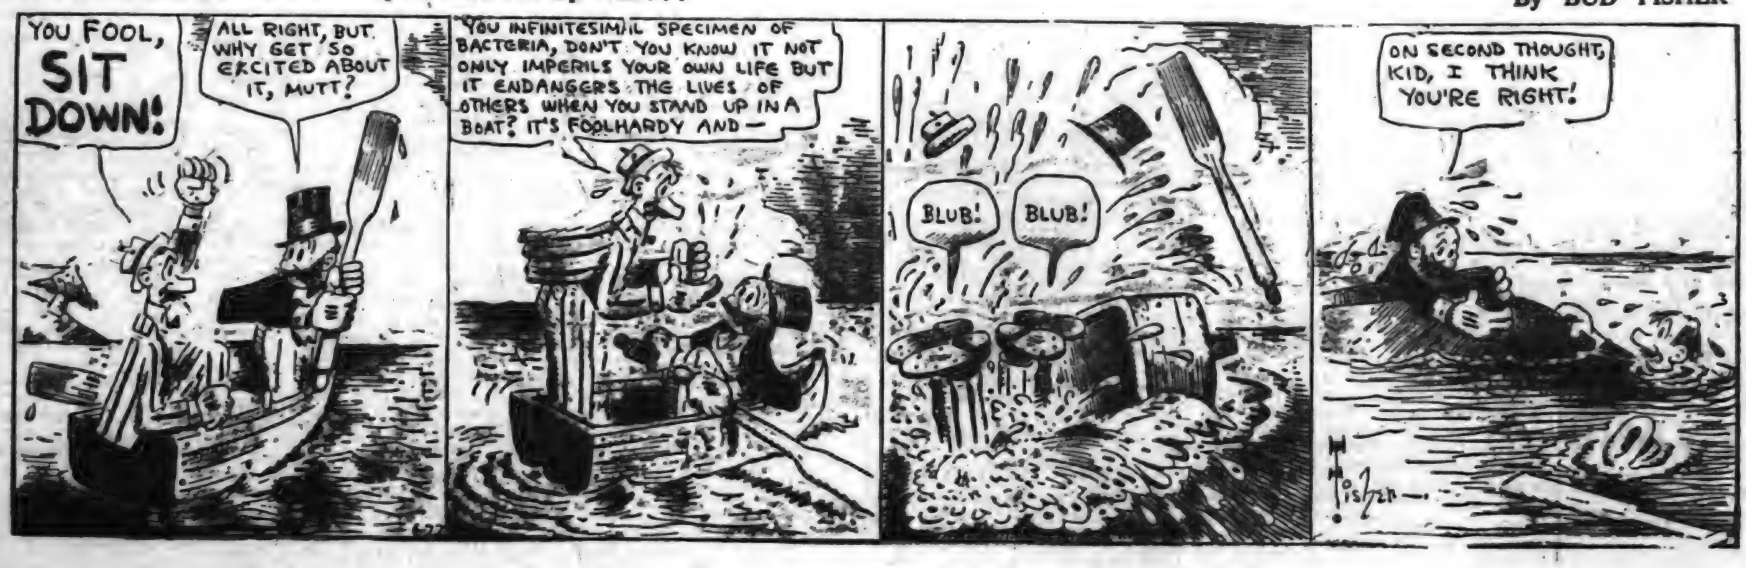
"It should constitute almost the equivalent of a signed agreement, and it is my personal opinion that such a record would be unimpeachable evidence in court if there should be any call for it. Of course, the new device will have various other applications."

The device occupies a space about equal to that of a radio-receiver. It is based upon the telegraphone, invented over thirty years ago by Valdemar Poulsen, a Danish engineer. It can record a conversation of fifteen minutes. The Times goes on to say:

"Its operation is based upon the principle that a steel wire can be made to retain degrees of magnetism varying throughout its length. The telegraphone was invented before the modern three-element vaccum-tube, and it is understood to have been through the use of the latter that the recording device was perfected by Dr. Curt Stille of Berlin.

"The fluctuating currents in the telephone circuit are amplified in the device and passed through the coils of an electro-magnet. The steel wire is drawn across the poles of the latter by an electric motor. The fluctuations, corresponding with the voice vibrations, thus are recorded in the steel in minute and inviable variations of magnetism.

"When the conversation is ended the wire again is drawn through a solenoid, the magnetism acting upon the latter's coils so as to produce a minute current in them. This, in turn, is amplified, and the result is the reproduction of the conversation.



"According to Mr. Kohlhaas, the record may be kept 'virtually indefinitely,' but it is thought that in most cases a permanent record would not be needed. To permit repeated use of the same piece of wire, the device incorporates a means for demagnetizing the wire by subjecting it to alternating current, after which it can be used over again. The instrument is attachable to any modern telephone."

Love

Untrained love can make disastrous mistakes, as can ignorance in any other sphere. Yet we are prone to believe that true love is a sort of guarantee against error; that whatever we do in love for others is sure to work out for their good. It is a dangerous notion, from which some have had rude or tragic awakening. Many a mother who has been lovingly indulgent to her boy has lived to realize that those indulgences, born of her devoted and unselfish love, have helped to pave his way to ruin. Love must know, as well as feel. If we really love we should be willing to study how to direct that love helpfully, instead of letting it take its own way harmfully. What is best for those whom we love, rather than what we would like to do for them, is the question that trained love asks, as over against thoughtless, ignorant love. "And this I pray," wrote Paul to those whom he loved, "that your love may abound yet more and more

HAS IT HAPPENED TO YOU?
by P.C.1

In our childhood, most of us learn to greatly dislike the words, "Don't do that," but of course when we grow up we learn that most "dont's" have a lot of reason behind them.

However, some of us never do learn.

For example, there's the man who habitually exceeds the speed limit. I followed one of these chaps for about three miles, yesterday on the Lake Shore Road. He didn't hit less than fifty at any time. Luckily traffic was light. He was indignant when I waved him to stop.

"Sure, I know I was driving fast," he said, "but the road was clear and I'm in a hurry."

I had to explain to him that no man can drive a car at excessive speed and get away with it . . . always.

You see, in the city a driver runs at a much slower speed and his mind and motions are keyed to that speed. In an emergency he knows what to do, and does it instinctively.

Occasionally on the highways he "steps on it" and at the first emergency he's in trouble almost before he knows it.

No two ways about it. I know. I've seen it happen often enough. The fast driver always gets his . . . eventually, sometimes even through so simple a thing as a blowout.

Better slow down, before you get yours, brother.

Well, I'll be seeing you.

FOLLOWS LINDBERGH AT MOOSE FACTORY

Hon. T. L. Kennedy Inspects Northern District

One day after Col. Charles A. Lindbergh and Mrs. Lindbergh visited Moose Factory, Col. Hon. Thomas L. Kennedy, Ontario minister of agriculture, and his wife arrived by airplane in that Northern Ontario settlement. Col. Kennedy stopped at Moose Factory in the course of a tour of the northern districts during which he inspected all the experimental farms there and studied the needs of agriculture in that part of the province. He opened the Lakehead Exhibition at Fort William, traversed the Rainy River District, saw the country along the line of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario and journeyed north as far as James Bay.

"I talked with more than 200 farmers in their homes," said the Minister, commenting upon his trip, "they seemed all to be remarkably prosperous and optimistic. They have splendid crops, new barns and good animals."

FIVE ESCAPE BLAZE IN STORE-DWELLING

A match which had been used to light a cigaret and later thrown on the floor of his store is believed to have been the cause of an exciting fire which threatened the lives of five persons at Lakeview early this morning, when the one-story structure, used as a store and dwelling by Clement Fletcher burst into flames.

Powerless to quell the rapidly spreading flames, the proprietor, who had been cleaning the floors with gasoline, rushed into the sleeping quarters and aroused the occupants, Mr. and Mrs. A. Hyde of New Toronto, and his two sons, Clement, aged 11, and Freddy, aged 6, who were asleep when the fire broke out. Fletcher lost no time in draining several gallons of gasoline from the service pumps outside back into the underground tank, and by so doing is believed to have saved a terrific explosion, which appeared inevitable as the pump caught fire.

Hyde and his wife made their escape from the burning building through a rear door, while Fletcher carried his two lads to safety. Mrs. Fletcher and another son, Donnie, aged 4, were away on holiday, and the Hydes had been keeping house in their absence.

A band of gypsies who had pitched a tent at the rear of the premises hurriedly pulled their canvas down and made a hurried departure with their belongings.

Port Credit Fire Brigade, under Chief W. Newman, and the Long Branch brigade, under Chief Parryment, arrived within a few minutes of the time the alarm was received. Telephone and electric wires were immediately cut, and first concern was to prevent the flames from reaching other gasoline pumps in the immediate vicinity of the outbreak.

The property and merchandise, said to be partly insured, were damaged to the extent of about $5,000.

Recent tests of the new mammoth Canadian Pacific locomotive "8000", destined for heavy work in the Canadian Rockies, have brought results in excess of the most sanguine expectations. It pulled a train weighing 7,961 tons, almost equal to three normal trains, from Smiths Falls to Montreal a distance of 128 miles, without a hitch, in 5¾ hours and showed over 30% fuel economy.

With a score of 266 in the aggregate and placed 67th in "the King's Hundred" as the first hundred shots in the King's Prize at Bisley are called, Sergeant Cecil William Foam, of Montreal, has just returned from the famous rifle shooting meet with added laurels. He has made his place in the "King's Hundred" every year since 1929 and for the last ten years has been employed at the Angus Shops of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Half-way around the world in 17 days, London to Yokohama via Canada and Honolulu, is the record of Miss D. Bewley, of London, who left Southampton July 8 on the new Empress of Britain, was rushed to Montreal by boat train where she boarded the Imperial Limited for Vancouver. At the latter port she left on the Empress of Canada arriving at Yokohama July 25. The combination of the two ships' fast time across the Atlantic and the Pacific makes this trip a record between London and the Orient.

Travelling incognito under the name of Prince and Princess Sukhodaya, Their Majesties the King and Queen of Siam with a large suite went across Canada by Canadian Pacific from Quebec where they stayed at the Chateau Frontenac, stopping for a couple of weeks at the Banff Springs Hotel in the heart of the Canadian Rockies, where they officially opened the Highland Gathering, then going on to Vancouver where they will sail by Canadian Pacific Empress of Canada September 12 for the Orient. They govern a country of 225,000 square miles with a population of about 11,500,000.

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA

Nita was worried . . . she could not imagine where she had lost her bracelet—in the hotel or on the journey home.

"I can't think what I could have done with it," she kept telling her mother.

"Why not telephone to the hotel," mother suggested. "It's after eight-thirty now and a call will only cost a few cents."

Imagine Nita's joy when the hotel clerk told her that the bracelet had been found in her room and would be mailed to her right away.

Thanks to her mother's suggestion, Nita's anxiety was relieved at once . . . and the cost of the call was considerably less than her taxi fare from the station.

Siam's Rulers Visit Canada

The beautiful Wat Po temple, at Bangkok, capital of Siam, gives a splendid example of the country's architecture. Inset: Their Majesties King Prajadhipok and Queen Rambai Barni, landing from the Canadian Government steamer "Lady Grey", at Montreal, where they were accorded an enthusiastic welcome.

Canada's most illustrious guests for the present week are undoubtedly Their Majesties the King and Queen of Siam, who, with a party of relatives, officials and servants from their own land, are at present making their way across this country and missing few if any of the sights that should be seen by the intelligent tourist in our midst.

His Majesty King Prajadhipok, pronounced Pra-cha-ti-pok, with the accent on the second syllable, is the descendant of Buddha, and holder of half a dozen stirring Oriental titles, and furthermore, the unquestioned master of the destinies of ten million people.

Naturally, then, one looks toward seeing him with keen interest, and all unprepared for the shock when a well-groomed gentleman steps from his train and with smiling courtesy and in English speech quite undistinguishable from that spoken by cultured Canadians greets those who await him. Later we understand it. An Oxford education and a term or two at a French military school as well as visits of study to the United States and other occidental countries have had their effect upon a naturally active mind of an outstandingly intelligent nature.

Siam is fortunate in her King. Under his enlightened guidance she is moving slowly out of Oriental mediaevalism into such modernism as is good for the country's welfare and happiness, not by revolution or the sudden casting away of long-tried things that have proved their use, but by the gradual assimilation of the things that are found good among the modern.

This ruler of men takes his kingship seriously. You see it in his every move, in his grave, thoughtful air, and in the serious respectful manner in which the members of his suite approach him. More than all it is seen in what he has done for Siam. Of his Queen, Rambai Barni, columns might be written. Her charm of manner and captivating smile have captured all who have met her ever since she first set foot on Canadian soil at Quebec. As modern as her husband, and speaking as excellent English, as indeed do all sixteen members of their suite, Her Majesty seems to enjoy every moment of her stay in Canada.

It is astonishing how interested the party are in Canadian history, and historic scenes. When at Quebec the battlefields of the Plains of Abraham were gone over most carefully and every interesting relic in and about the city was duly visited. The party occupied a complete upper floor in the tower of the Chateau Frontenac from where they had a view of the whole theatre of the struggle that ended in the fall of the French regime. His Majesty did not come to Canada as a stranger. He was here six years ago on his way to Europe and he already knew something of our history. In that fact lies the explanation of the exceedingly interesting statement he issued to the people of Canada upon his arrival at Quebec. It was as follows:

"In landing upon this continent in British Columbia last April I expressed the hope that I might have an opportunity of seeing more of this great and growing member of the British Commonwealth of Nations. That hope is about to be realized. We shall remain for a time here in 'Old Canada' where the sturdy characteristics of French and British forbears have blended in a culture as admirable as it is unique. After meeting officials of the Government, and visiting the Capital of the Dominion, we shall travel west through Canada, remaining for a time in the Canadian Rockies before embarking at Vancouver. I look forward to the opportunity of seeing at closer range the people and the institutions of this nation whose vigor and progressiveness are so happily apparent".

THE PARENT AND THE SCHOOL

The growing child spends a number of years in school in order that he may be prepared for adult life. This preparation for life includes the child's body as well as his mind. It is neither necessary nor desirable that the health of the school child should be neglected or sacrificed. The end to achieve is a sound mind in a sound body.

The modern school provides a healthy environment for the child during the many hours he spends there. Attention is given to fresh air, sunshine, cleanliness, provision for play and other facilities, provision for play healthy development of the child's body.

In order that the child may get the best out of his school years, it is necessary that the parent and school co-operate. Neither can take on the responsibility of the other. The parent is responsible for seeing that the child is properly fed, that he is clean when he leaves for school, that he goes to bed at the proper hour and sleeps with his window open. The school is responsible for protecting the child from communicable diseases and for providing him with healthy surroundings and an opportunity to develop his body.

The school cannot control communicable diseases without the assistance of the parent. The child who is ill should be kept at home. The child who has a sore throat, or who shows a rash of any kind should not be sent back to school until he has been seen by a doctor. It is the mild cases of disease which are frequently responsible for the spread of disease.

Many children arrive at school without breakfast or else they have had a piece of cake and a cup of tea. They stay up late at night and are not rested and ready to get up in the morning. The result is they have neither the time to wash properly nor to eat their breakfast, and so they go to school dirty, hungry and tired.

That is a poor way to start the day. Under such conditions the child is unable to do his school work, and then the parents not infrequently blame the school because their child does not get on when the fault is at home.

Most schools provide for the medical examination of the children. Parents should be invited to attend at the examination and if they are invited, they should go. The school doctor cannot do more than advise the parent that the child requires medical attention; the school does not provide treatment.

The parent who neglects to follow the advice of the school doctor may be seriously handicapping his child. The child who requires glasses cannot do his work without them. The child who cannot breathe through his nose because of adenoids is not likely to do well in school. The parent is responsible for seeing that his child is relieved of the conditions which the school doctor brings to his attention. That is part of the team-play between parent and school.

A Birthday Celebration

On August 26th friends of Mrs. Swackhammer of Huttonville, from Toronto, Hornby, Streetsville and Brampton met at her home to celebrate with her the 76th anniversary of her birthday. Mrs. Swackhammer was not aware that anything unusual was going to happen that day. It was all to be a complete surprise to her. In the afternoon her son took her away for a drive. Then the friends took possession, decorating the lawn and the house and setting tables with all imaginable good things. The lovely birthday cake was fittingly decorated with candles, showing the number of years Mrs. Swackhammer's life was in past history.

At 8 p.m. Mrs. Swackhammer and son arrived at their home, when she was immediately surrounded by friends. Then they sang to the tune of "Happy Day" the following, all joining in:

Your friends are gathered here today
To show our love for you this way;
We hope in years you are as bright
And happy as you are tonight.
And youth and age now want to say,
We wish you such a happy day,
Happy day, happy day,
On your 76th birthday day.

Another surprise was waiting for Mrs. Swackhammer when they entered the house. Then Mrs. Clarence Hall read a nicely worded address, as follows:

The Address

Dear Sister:
It was seventy-six years ago today,
When you came into this world to stay.
In those past years you had toil and care,
But of joy and love you had a good share.
And in our homes we often discuss
The pleasure in your home given to us.
In return for some pleasure we are here today
On the anniversary of your birthday.
We want to explain by this little verse
Our love is enclosed in every cent in this purse.
We all wish as we start on our separating way
You will have many returns of this happy day.
—Signed on behalf of brothers and friends.

Then Mr. Joe Reid presented Mrs. Swackhammer with a well-filled purse. Mr. Horner, her eldest son, in a neat little speech, thanked them for their kindness to his mother. Other speakers thanked her for the hospitality she had always shown to them at any time when visiting in her home. The Hillier Orchestra from Streetsville furnished music for a few hours for the old-time and modern dances.

Before starting for their homes this happy party joined hands, with Mrs. Swackhammer in the centre, and sang "For she's a jolly good fellow." Then, after wishing Mrs. Swackhammer many returns of the pleasant day, they were soon on their homeward journey.

The drink habit is the cause of much of the difficulty which the workers have to overcome, but Mr. Ward believes the present prohibition act is better than the old saloon license act.

Hundred Men Sign at Cooksville

Toronto Township council is not facing the unemployment situation unprepared, and they have garnered considerable experience from last winter's bout with the same trouble. This was explained to a gathering of fifty or sixty men, held in the township hall on Tuesday night, for the purpose of broadcasting just what the council intends to do this winter.

The addresses by Reeve L. H. Pallett and the other councillors, gave evidence that the matter had been carefully studied, and that council knows what it is going to, and just as clearly what it is not going to do. Certain works will be undertaken, to provide relief, and the Reeve was emphatic in his statement that no favoritism will be shown each and every man to have an equal chance with every other man. Council has decided that no person not a resident of the township for at least 12 months, shall benefit by the relief work, and that the rate of wages paid, shall be cut from 35 to 30 cents per hour, also that no relief shall be given before Nov. 1. At the same time, Mr. Pallett assured those present that men not now employed shall have the first chance when the work does start.

Any man that has a job at the present time, the Reeve said in his address, should hold on to it, and make the very best of it while it lasts. The men who will be the beneficiaries of the township relief, were asked by all speakers, for the heartiest co-operation during the winter, and also to give the council their confidence, the latter offering assurances that they will do the best that is humanly possible to assist all and sundry.

Reeve Pallett spoke of the project of making the Middle Road into a Provincial Highway, to relieve congestion on Dundas street and the Toronto-Hamilton Highway. This work he stated would be commenced this fall, and continue as long as such work is possible under weather conditions. It is the purpose of the Government, he stated, to employ hand labor as much as possible, on account of the relief necessary. If there is a hard winter, this work will of course, have to cease for the time being. The work of cutting certain hills in the township is being considered as a measure of relief work, and if this is done by hand labor, the grant that the Dominion and Provincial Governments are suggesting for relief work, will be applied to such work.

The proposed waterworks system for the township, is another avenue of assistance to open up within ten weeks. A special piece of legislation is necessary to allow the township to give Lakeview the waterworks on the local impovement basis, and this has been promised the township as soon as possible.

Some men have been employed on the Consumers' Gas contract, and the Reeve suggested alternative shifts of men on this work. The engineer however, did not see eye to eye with the Reeve on this matter, but those who have the work are advised to stick at it while it lasts.

Placing of stone on certain roads, and giving work by the piece, is another idea put forth for relief. A call to ratepayers to help council by giving whenever possible, a little work, was sounded, at the same time, those who will find themselves in the line for relief work, were urged to be patient, to look on the bright side, and to remember that this is not the only period of depression Canada has felt.

Thomas McCarthy and J. J. Jamieson both felt that relief might come through the lowering of the prices of certain commodities. Bread Mr. McCarthy said, is too dear considering the price of wheat. Milk should not be 2½ cents per quart to the producer and 11 cents to the consumers. Mr. Jamieson believes that manufacturers might start up their factories, give the unemployed work, and sell the product at a lower figure to help start circulation of money, as well as to assist those who have not the money to pay the higher price.

About eighty men, single and married, signed the official register during the evening. The speeches made in the hall were heard with deference and in silence, no questions being raised by anyone present.

LET US SMILE

Brevity is the soul of modern journalism. A budding journalist was told never to use two words where one would do. He carried out this service in his report of a fatal accident in the following manner:

"John Jones struck a match to see if there was any gasoline in his tank. There was. Age sixty-five."

Ananias: Once, while I was having a meal in the jungle, a lion came so close to me that I could feel its breath on the back of my neck. What do you suppose I did?

Bored One: Why, I guess you turned your collar up.

"SALE" OF CORN FAILS TO PAY PRICE OF BAGS

Port Credit, Aug. 22.—This present depression has nothing to do with the figurative economics of a certain Port Credit farmer. Early this week this man shipped 42 bags of corn to Toronto. He paid three cents apiece for the bags. Yesterday his cheque for the sales reached him. It amounted to $1.15. When the farmer figured everything out his sales had cost him 11 cents loss on the bags, and he received nothing for the corn or labor of picking.

Norma Todd was fined $8.50 and costs, bringing the total up to $27 for an assault on Ian McKay.

In another assault case, Mrs. Elmer Piercy was fined $1 for beating Herbert William Thompson, a farm hand about the head and shoulders with a stick. Thompson and Mr. Piercy had had a fight on the preceding morning, in which both were injured. Charges of assault brought against the two men were dismissed, and they were ordered to divide the costs of the court.

The charge of manslaughter against George Newton, Toronto man who was driving the car which killed the man thought to have been George Graham, but later found to have been a person unknown, was dismissed.

Four Meet Death, 20 Hurt

When Truck Strikes Auto

Drummondville Residents Victims—Deaths Instantaneous

Drummondville, Que.—Four persons lost their lives and 20 others were injured during a collision between a motor truck and an automobile on the main highway near Riviere Noir Sunday night. Earlier reports reaching here had placed the death list at six. The motor truck,, containing nearly 40 passengers, was headed for a political contradictory meeting at St. Eugene while the automobile, containing four persons, was en route to Montreal.

The dead are:

Joseph Allard, 20.
Maurice Geoffrey, 18.
Charles Edouard Denis, 62.
Paul Gagne, 23.

All four were residents of Drummondville or its immediate suburbs and all were instantly killed. Allard, Geoffrey and Denis sustained fractured skulls while Gagne died of severe internal injuries. The dead were all occupants of the truck.

The automobile was driven by George Bessette of Montreal, who had his wife and two children with him. His six-year-old son, George, Jr., was severely hurt about the head and body and is in a critical condition. The others in the car escaped with minor injuries.

Many of the truck occupants were severely shaken. Among the more critically injured were Amedee Lefebvre, 20, internal and head hurts; Edward Lapierre, 50, cut about the head and body; Leopold Yorgeau, 15, fractured skull and other severe injuries; Ubald Beauchemin, head and body injuries. They are all residents of Drummondville and are in hospital here. Others hurt received minor injuries and were allowed to go home.

An inquest will be held. According to information gathered by police the motor truck was taking the men to St. Eugene where Hon. Hector Laferte, Minister of Colonization and Liberal candidate for Drummond, and Napoleon Garceau, his Conservative opponent in the provincial elections, were to hold a contradictory rally.

At Riviere Blue the truck crashed into Bessette's automobile, which had slowed down in order to turn into a side road. The automobile was shoved into the ditch and turned over while the truck spun before lodging on its side. Its passengers were scattered in all directions while a few were crushed under the vehicle.

Doctors and priests from every village in the vicinity hurried to the scene to give first aid and the last rites of the church.

Runaway Train Wrecks Auto

Five Hurt When Cars Break Away During Switching

Sault Ste. Marie. — Five autoists were injured when a train of nine freight cars broke away during switching operations, careened down a grade and smashed into an auto at a level crossing here over the week end. The occupants, thrown from the auto, escaped death, though the vehicle itself was dragged 286 feet along the track. Four coke rack cars were derailed and overturned and the wreckage piled along the track blocked the line for some time.

The injured are: Thomas Harper, 43, 141 Cathcart Street, face, head and hands badly cut; Mrs. Thomas Harper, 34, cut on face, head and mouth; Mrs. J. B. Baker, 60, 13 St. Mary's Avenue, broken leg and other injuries; Gerald Harper, 10, broken arm and face badly cut; Lawrence Marshall, 10, West Korah, badly cut about the face. Harper, who was driving the car, is in the Plummer Memorial Hospital, and the others are in the General.

Roy Featherstone, 328 Wellington Street, conductor of the train, told police that the cars had got away from the yards at Bruce Street during switching operations. He said he had set the brakes on the cars which did the damage, and did not know just how they got into the locality where the damage was done.

Canadian Immigration Shows a Sharp Drop

Ottawa. — Under present stringent regulations immigration to the Dominion has all but ceased. For the month of June there was a decrease for the first quarter—April, May and of 76 per cent. from June of 1930, and June—of the present fiscal year, the total of immigrants was 10,188, as compared to 49,890 in the corresponding period of last year.

June saw only 3,169 persons admitted, a drop of 10,000 from last June. For the quarter there were admitted 3,826 British immigrants, 4,807 from the United States and 1,555 from other countries. Last year in the corresponding months there were brought in 16,587, 9,510 and 23,791 respectively. Regulations provide that only two classes of immigrants may enter from Continental Europe—wives and unmarried children under eighteen joining family heads established in Canada and in a position to look after dependents, and agriculturists with sufficient capital to undertake farming in the Dominion.

Record Salmon Pack Recorded

British Columbia Produced 2,221,819 Cases in 1930

Victoria.—In the year 1930 British Columbia produced the greatest catches of salmon in the history of the province with a pack of 2,221,819 cases, surpassing the previous record of 1926 by 156,629 cases, according to figures contained in the 1930 report of the provincial fisheries department. There was an increase in both the pack of sockeye and pink. The pink pack constituted 50 per cent. of the total.

The value of fishery products in the Dominion for 1929, the latest figures available at the time the provincial report was written, was $53,518,921, of which British Columbia produced $23,930,692, or 45 per cent.

Commenting on the Fraser River system, the report says:

"The catches of sockeye in the Fraser River system in 1930 demonstrate forcefully that the former great runs of sockeye to that system can be restored."

Lawrence of Arabia In Fresh Role

Pilots Mystery Launches Preparatory to Schneider Trophy Races

Plymouth, England—Aircraftman T. E. Shaw, known to the world as Colonel Lawrence, the uncrowned King of Arabia, is the central figure in a secret Royal Air Force development at the seaplane base here.

One of the most spectacular craft taking part in the preparations for the Schneider Trophy race next month is a blue and aluminum 100 horse-power speedboat, a mystery ship, which dashes across Plymouth Sound at fifty miles an hour.

Watchers from Plymouth Hoe, focusing telescopes on this strange boat, see at the tiller a small smiling man in Air Force blue, with fair hair and blue, resolute eyes. He is Aircraftman Shaw.

He is sometimes in charge of a larger launch, which, with the speedboat, will be held in readiness during the Schneider race. Their terrific speed has been developed that they may dash to save the lives of the world's fastest airmen should any seaplane crash in the sea.

Aircraftman Shaw has been testing these craft, and their maximum speeds are known only to him and higher authorities of the Air Ministry.

Expert Is Appointed To Help Newfoundland

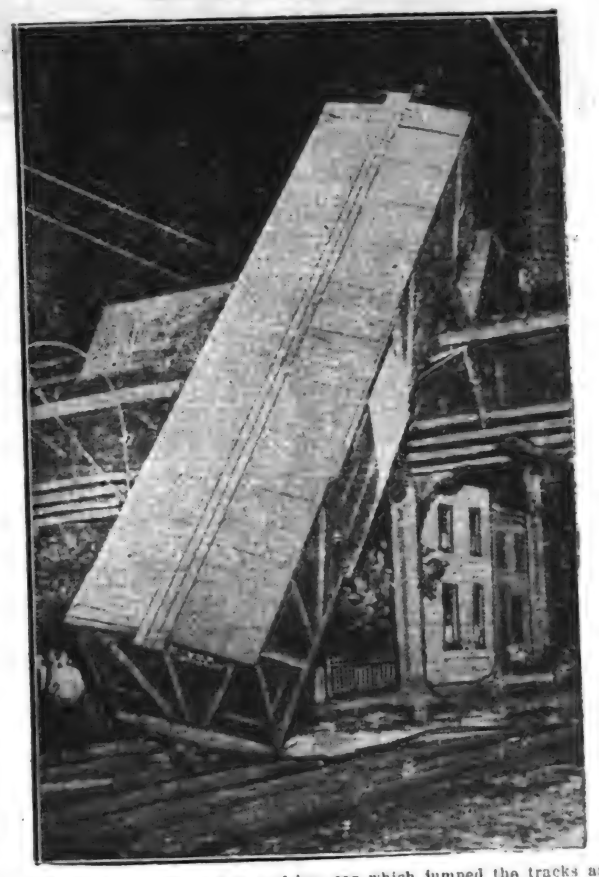
London.—Sir Richard Squires, premier of Newfoundland, officially announced here that Sir Percy Thompson, deputy chairman of the Board of Inland Revenue here since 1919, has been selected to collaborate with the Newfoundland Government in connection with its new fiscal program dealing with revenue and expenditure and public debt.

The selection of Sir Percy was made after consultation with the Secretary of State for the Dominions, Rt. Hon. J. H. Thomas, the senior officials of the dominion's office, as well as Sir Warren Fisher, permanent head of the British Treasury, and leading officials of the Treasury, Sir Richard said.

Robert J. Magor, well-known business man of Montreal, has been selected to associate himself with the Newfoundland Government for consultation regarding the reorganization of the public services of Newfoundland, especially the Newfoundland railway, steamships, drydock, telephones and telegraph systems.

Clean, Shining Apples Attracts the Trade

Burlington, Vt.—Laundering apples to increase their retail market "salability" is the newest "wrinkle" in horticulture, according to Prof. M. B. Cummings, of the University of Vermont, who said in a recent radio talk that "nobody wants to eat a dirty apple any more." Professor Cummings added that "washed and polished apples will soon be on the market."



The horticulturist explained that machines have been developed for washing, rinsing and wiping the fruit. The retail salesman, he said, may now put away his towel.

Professor Cummings went on to say that the cost of laundering apples need not cost more than 2 cents a bushel when done with a special machine.

Muskoka Fires Under Control

Twelve Minor Blazes Reported in Sault Area

Parry Sound. — Following an airplane flight over the whole area affected by forest fires, as far south as Washago, Peter McEwen, head of the local branch of the forestry department, stated Sunday that the situation was well in hand. One or two serious fires are burning, one on the east side of Ryde Township, and one at Carling Station, about 20 miles north of Parry Sound on the C.P.R., but all are completely under control.

Over 60 men are engaged in quelling the flames, but Chief Ranger Simpson, who was despatched to Hyde Township to direct defensive operations there, has returned to his post at Powassan, as the situation at the former place is now considered out of danger. "There is no cause whatever for alarm," said Mr. McEwen.

New Fires Reported

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.—Twelve new fires were reported in the Sault district since Friday, although all of them are of a minor nature. This brings the total number reported to the local forestry branch to 34 in the past two days, one of the largest in some time.

Only one of the fires burning is regarded as being of a serious nature. It is that in Township V., up the White River and north of Rawhide Lake. Sunday 100 men were on the scene and had it well in hand.

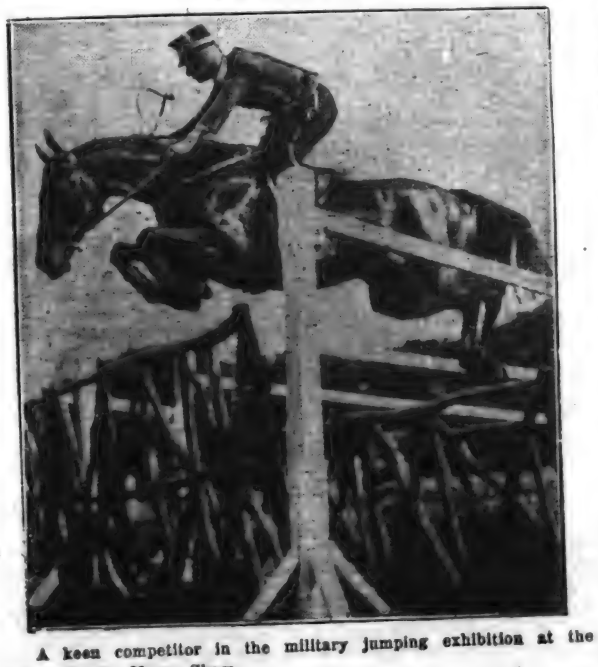
Chinese Rivers Rise Thousands Perish

Flood Waters Reach a Height Never Previously Recorded

Hankow, Hupes Province, China.—Countless hundreds and perhaps thousands drowned last week when the flood waters of the Yangtse slowly levelled dykes, undermined cities, and destroyed the farms upon which the country depended for its food.

The flood waters reached a height of 53 feet 6 inches, compared with the previous record in 1870 flood of 50 feet 6 inches. This placed the highest point of land in Hankow five feet under water, and submerged most streets 18 to 20 feet. The famous bund is 7½ feet below the surface.



There is no way of telling how many the flood has killed. A week ago the Corpse Recovery Society, which had counted the bodies taken out of the river, made an estimate of 3,000. That was before the waters climbed above the 1870 mark. Since then whole towns and villages have been wiped out, undermined houses falling in upon those lacking the foresight or the strength to flee. There was no way of communicating with other parts of the valley. Boats were being used mostly to carry refugees down the river.

French River, Ont.—Using frog for bait and an ordinary 15-pound test bass line, Ellis Allen, Jr., of Louisville, Ky., who is a guest at the French River bungalow camp here, landed on 80-pound sturgeon from the French River over the week-end. This is the largest sturgeon ever brought into the camp since it was opened 11 years ago, and it took Mr. Allen two and three-quarter hours to land the monster.

Sixteen Years Since There Has Been Nursery at Rideau Hall

Members of the Governor-General's household both in Ravenscrag, the temporary vice-regal residence in Montreal, and at Rideau Hall in Ottawa, are rejoicing at the birth of a blue-eyed baby son, weighing ten pounds, to Lady Bessborough.

It is stated that it is now 16 years since there has been a nursery in Rideau Hall, whither the Governor-General's family and entourage are expected to return as soon as Lady Bessborough is able to travel.

In 1916 when the Duke of Devonshire came to Canada as Governor-General, his youngest child was Lady Anne Cavendish, at that time seven years old. A beautiful nursery and playroom was then fitted up for the little girl.

Plans are now under way for an infant's nursery to be installed at Rideau Hall, adjoining Her Excellency's suite. Special nurses for the baby have been engaged and the furnishings and fittings of the nursery will be the simplest of design.

The return of the child regime at Rideau Hall recalls memories of the happy family associations of past Governors-General. It will be within the memory of many that the present Earl of Minto, who married a Canadian, Miss Marion Cook, of Montreal, was only seven years of age when his father became Governor-General in 1898. Lady Ruby Elliott and Lady Violet Elliott were nine and 12 years of age at the time. Lady Violet is now the wife of Col. John Jacob Astor, M.P., a son of Lord Astor.

Undulant Fever Cases Increase

87 Cases Reported in Ontario This Year Against 75 In All 1930

Toronto — Eighty-seven cases of undulant fever have been reported in Ontario up to August 15th this year, compared with 75 cases reported in the whole of 1930, Dr. W. J. Bell, Deputy Minister of Health reports. The 87 cases, he added, were diagnosed by the aid of blood tests in laboratories and other cases might exist or have existed in the province and have been unreported because the laboratory test had not been made.

The Deputy Minister gave this information in reply to an enquiry as to the prevalence of an ailment from which a farmer living near Belleville was reported to be suffering. A newspaper despatch asserted that part of a herd of cattle had been found to be infected with Malta fever and destroyed and that the owner of the cattle had contracted the same malady.

Dr. Bell said that the disease from which the man was suffering was likely what was called undulant fever, which was closely related to Malta fever and was sometimes called by that name.

"It was caused," the Deputy Minister said, "by drinking raw milk, that is unpasteurized milk from cows suffering from contagious abortion."

Undulant fever, Dr. Bell concluded, was a lingering, debilitating disease and it caused death in approximately 2 per cent of cases.

Young Britishers Cross Greenland on Skis

Copenhagen.—Three young Englishmen, members of the H. G. Watkins arctic expedition, have marched across Greenland on the inland ice from Angmagsalik in the north to Ivigtut in the south, matching the achievement of the hardiest explorers.

Mr. James Scott, Mr. Martin Lindsay and Mr. Alfred Stephenson started on July 1 and reached Ivigtut July 30, traveling on skis by night, for the sun softened the ice cap to a point where daylight traveling was dangerous.

Soviet Field Kitchens To Follow Harvest Help

Moscow—Field kitchens to supply farmers and workers hot meals as they labor on Russia's collective farms are being organized by the Soviet government.

These feeding stations will move with the laborers as they advance through the fields.

The system of public eating places is a factor in the government's drive to free women of domestic drudgery and absorb them in productive labor. It contemplates dispensing 9,150,000,000 public meals this year at cost.

Big Building on Old Hotel Site

London.—The site of the old Hotel Cecil, long familiar to visitors to London, the last vestige of which disappeared at Easter, is now undergoing rapid transformation. The erection on the site of Shell-Mex House, the future headquarters of Shell-Mex, Ltd., is proceeding rapidly, and by December of next year, when the building will be completed, the Victoria Embankment will be dominated by one of the largest and most commanding commercial buildings in London, the cost of which is estimated at $7,500,000.

Peculiarities of Ball Lightning

Ball lightning is quite unlike the ordinary, almost instantaneous electrical discharge that constitutes ordinary lightning, according to the American Association for the Advancement of Science. It is a slow, long-containing discharge, that floats through the air or runs along the ground in the shape of a ball or sometimes the shape of a pear. The color varies from red through blue to dazzling white. These glowing balls often enter houses, coming down the chimney or entering through a window or door or even a crack. They float or glide around, sometimes with a fluttering or crackling noise, but seldom do any harm.

Winter Fair Prizes Increased This Year

Cattle Prizes Now Total $1,050—Sheep $700, Swine $1,000

Carlot competitions for cattle, sheep and swine, at the Royal Winter Fair next November already promise to be so important as to mark a distinct step forward in the Royal's policy of encouraging the best method of marketing livestock. In each of the three sections the prize money has been materially increased over previous years. In the case of cattle, it now amounts to $1,050 in six prizes; in sheep to $700 in ten prizes; and in swine to $1,000 in seven prizes. These amounts are generous enough to bring in first class entries. The Dominion Live Stock Branch this year makes a contribution of $375 and the Ontario Live Stock Branch of $250 to the cattle prizes. The cattle exhibit will consist of 15 steers, grade, cross-bred, or pure, of the same or mixed breeds, polled or dehorned. The carlot must be of uniform weight not exceeding an average of 1,200 lbs. per head. The animals are not eligible for other classes.

In the market sheep carlot classes (inter-provincial) the exhibit is of 25 lambs, ewes or wethers (but not less than half of them wethers) to be judged from the standpoint of regular daily market requirements. Up to 30 lambs will be put into the pens and provision is made that the lambs may be sold at the market stock sales. The Dominion Live Stock Branch has contributed $245 and the Ontario Live Stock Branch $100 to the prize money.

The Inter-Provincial Swine Competition will consist of 40 hogs, of which not less than one-half must be barrows of bacon type weighing 190-230 lbs.—farm weights for selects. Each competitor may enter up to 60 hogs but those in excess of 45 head must be removed 24 hours prior to the judging. They will be judged for bacon type and finish. The contributors to the prize money include Canadian Swine Breeders' Association, $150; Alberta Provincial Swine Breeders' Assn. Ltd., $50; Dominion Live Stock Branch, $200; Industrial and Development Council of Canadian Meat Packers, $100; Manitoba Swine Breeders' Association, $50; Ontario Live Stock Branch, $100; Quebec Swine Breeders' Association, $50; and Saskatchewan Swine Breeders' Association, $50.

Lindberghs Land On Japanese Soil

Reach Nemuro After Being Again Forced Down by Dense Fog

Nemuro, Japan, Aug. 24. — Colonel and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh arrived here to-day after a nail-night stop on the Island of Kunashiri, where they were forced down by fogs for the third time since leaving the Kamchatka Peninsula.

They landed here at .51 a.m. (5.51 p.m. Sunday, E.S.T.).

The arrival of the Lindberghs had been awaited here for almost a week, the thick fog over the Kurile Island chain, lying north of the main islands of Japan, having delayed them

Sunday afternoon they left Shana, on Iturup Island, for Nemuro, but ran into thick fog which forced them to land on Annoro Lagoon, at the southwestern tip of Kunashiri Island, about 40 miles north of here. Mrs. Lindbergh, after some difficulty in determining their location, radioed that they were about two miles from the Village of Tofutsu and had about one hour's fuel supply in the tanks of the plane when they landed at 5.30 p.m.

A Solomon's Judgment

A case that was brought before the local magistrate involved the rightful ownership of an eight-day clock.

After hearing both sides of the argument the magistrate turned to the prosecutor.

"You get the clock," he told him gravely.

"Look here, what do I get?" complained the defendant furiously.

"You get the eight days," snapped the magistrate.

Denmark Favors Slot Machine

Wide Variety of Goods Is Sold Through 40,000 Automatic Devices in Operation

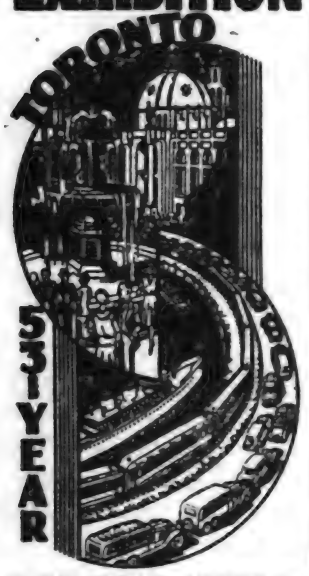
Owing to the strict legislation governing shop hours in Denmark the automatic vendor has become a popular selling medium and a special industry producing slot machines has been developed, says a recent report of the Dept. of Commerce of the United States. Sales at first were confined to cigars and cigarettes. Now, however, a wide variety of goods is handled by the 40,000 machines which are estimated to be in use.

Many of the models offered of late by the local industry are much more complicated and better fitted than the original cigarette machine, which because of the uniform price of cigarettes and their standard packing is one of the simplest types of automatic machines, says the report.

Among the new models is a machine adapted for the sale of an extraordinary number of different articles. The later models are so arranged that the customer can assure himself of the quality of his purchase, each compartment being fitted with mirrors and illuminated by an electric light; some of the machines have a separate slot for each compartment. The top and base of the machines are likewise illuminated. This serves the double purpose of drawing attention to the machine and providing an advertisement for the owner.

The arrangement of ventilation in combination with the heat generated by the electric bulbs is said to safeguard the goods against frost and dampness, while sun blinds can be fitted as a protection against direct sunlight.

The question of the protection of slot machine sales against both theft and the use of spurious coins has had close attention. Additional security against burglary is offered in some of the new models by a cast aluminum front plate and every effort has been made to make the machine sensitive enough so that false coins will fail to operate the releasing mechanism.



The Danish industry engaged in the production of this type of machine is well established and of long experience and is making rapidly increasing sales in both domestic and foreign markets. Evidence of the striking development of the industry can be had from the production figures. In 1927 a total of 1,616 units were turned out, valued at 662,000 crowns; in 1928 the number of machines manufactured rose to 2,046 units and the value to 752,000 crowns; while in 1929 the figures had increased to 4,926 units and 1,298,000 crowns, respectively.

No figures are available covering exports and imports, but it is reported that Danish automatic machines have become a very considerable article of export and are sold to such countries as the Netherlands, Switzerland, England, and Sweden. Machines are also manufactured abroad under Danish patents.

The latest field to be entered by the automatic vending machine in Copenhagen is the restaurant industry, the opening of two restaurants of this type in busy sections of the city having been announced. The equipment, according to reports, will be furnished by a vending machine manufacturer of Berlin, Germany. All the visible parts will be made of polished metal. The walls will be faced with marble and topped by an electrically-lighted glass molding on which will appear the names of the foods served below.

It is also planned to place ambulant automatic machines at railway stations and on the principal boulevards. These vendors will supply both beer and lemon soda water. Such machines are reported to cost about 2,500 crowns apiece (the Danish crown equals about 26 cents United States currency) and have a capacity of 55 liters. They are equipped with refrigeration units and also with ingenious apparatus which manufactures a paper cup for each customer.

Sensitive Puffball Mushroom Is Poor Man's Weatherglass

"The poor man's weatherglass" is a mushroom, so named because it is so sensitive to changes in the moisture of the air that it serves as a barometer, says The United States Department of Agriculture. It grows in woods, sandy places, and on partly cleared land. As it develops, the two outer coats of the puffball containing the spores split into segments, but remain united at the top of the ball. The two coatings vary in composition and do not absorb moisture in the same degree. The result is that in wet weather or when there is considerable moisture in the air the segments stand out from the plant.

In dry weather the inner layer contracts more than the outer and causes the segments to curve in sharply. Because of their habit of splitting into starlike segments this group of fungi is known as the earth stars, and Geaster hygrometricus is known both as the barometer earth star, and as the poor man's weatherglass. The puffball mushrooms are not poisonous.

North American Continent Rich Field For Prehistoric Animals

Discovery of Phytosaur Armor in Texas but One of Many Traces of Early Monsters

The discovery in Texas of the dorsal armor of a giant phytosaur, a crocodile-like creature which lived more than 50,000,000 years ago, emphasizes the fact that the North American continent is still a fertile field for paleontologists seeking the fossils of prehistoric animals. Traces of many species of these monsters have been found from time to time.

Judging from the number of tracks found, the dinosaur, or "terrible reptile," seems to have been the most common in all parts of the country. Beside the Connecticut River near Northampton are preserved dinosaur tracks said to be the most perfect ever found. Nearer New York, at Woodbridge, N.J., dinosaur tracks were discovered last year measuring twenty inches across the toes. They are thought to date back to the cretaceous period of the Mesozic Age. The haunts of the dinosaur in New Jersey were first discovered, however, in 1858, and a mounted skeleton is in the State Museum at Trenton.

In the Province of Alberta and some parts of the Western States dinosaur bones have been most frequently found and most easily excavated. Some huge tracks, thirty-eight inches long, have been discovered in Colorado; and in Dinosaur Canyon, near Flagstaff, Ariz., 300 tracks were found by one expedition. One of the largest skeletons of this beast was found in Utah in 1923—the diplodocus of the species. This specimen was seventy-one feet long and the pieces discovered weighed about 52,000 pounds. This creature is supposed to have lived 170,000,000 years ago.

Mastodone, it is believed, were abundant here about 25,000 years ago, whereas this animal was thought to have become extinct in Europe 1,000 centuries back. Mastodon teeth seven inches long have been discovered in the ocean off the New Jersey coast; and the vicinity of Niagara Falls has furnished a fertile field for such discoveries.

Near Medicine Bluffs, Wyo., was found the skeleton of one of the largest of the prehistoric reptiles, the brontosaurus, or thunder lizard, now in the Peabody Museum at New Haven. When alive, its weight is estimated to have been about forty tons, and it lived about 120,000,000 years ago. The jaw of a tithanothere, to which family belong the modern horse, tapir and rhinoceros, was found in the White River Bad Lands of South Dakota in 1846.

Water Babies

Condensed from Safety Education By Readers' Digest.

In a village of lagoon dwellers, people who raise their thatched houses on piles in a water village half a mile from shore, I watched the parents of the Manus tribe train their small children to meet light-heartedly and efficiently the continual challenge of their precarious water existence, writes Margaret Mead, author of "Growing Up in Guinea," who spent six months among the Manus. And there was much in the educational methods of these lithe brown savages, in G string or grass skirt, which could be transplanted with profit into our educational systems.

In the first place, the parents considered that the physical training of their children was a serious matter, not one to be left to chance, nor the casual ministrations of other children—the primitive equivalent of ignorant nurse maids. The baby's first step, its first experience in the water, its first attempt to handle a paddle and a punt, all were carefully supervised by a patient, attentive parent.

They never forced the children to walk or swim or climb too soon. But a child was never allowed to go backwards, to refuse to do something which he had shown he was strong enough to do. We are all familiar with children among ourselves, who start to walk and fall down, getting a painful bruise or a bad fright, and subsequently refuse to walk again for several months. The Manus are interested in the child's making the maximum physical adjustment of which he is capable; they have delighted praise and vociferous applause for the baby's first step, cold indifference for the baby who falls down and refuses to take another step. The only way in which the child can recapture the delightful admiration of his elders, is to stifle his cries, struggle earnestly to his little bruised legs, and try again.

For the very small baby who falters, and hesitates, the parents have only indifference and temporary inattention; an older child who falls down or makes some other awkward mistake, is likely to be actually punished, so that the Manus child doesn't look about to see if Mother is near enough to make it worth while to cry, but rather looks about in devout hope that no one has seen his stupid blunder. We, on the other hand, are too anxious to console the stumbler, to surround him with warm arms, kind words, and comforting assurances. This association of a mistake with a reward is a bad method of training children not to be awkward, careless, stupid in their physical adjustments.

The Manus parents are also exceeding careful not to frighten a child, either purposely or accidentally. When a baby has taken its first steps, its mother or father puts it down in the water at low tide, leaves it there for just a few minutes, repeats the experiment next day. Later, he will be permitted to play about in the shallows under the house, an alert parent on the verandah or within doors, listening for a cry which would mean that the child had strayed out into deeper water. The child is not made conscious of continuous supervision; no hail storm of "don'ts," "be carefuls" rains upon his playground; he is trained to use his own judgment as much as possible, but he is not allowed to get bad frights when his own two-year-old judgment fails. The Manus would find our pleasant little way of accustoming children to the water by force, a brutal, horrid custom, without any excuse.

Manus parents, like their children, were given this same training when they were little. All their lives they have lived upon the water, managing canoes, hoisting sails, carrying great water pots, balancing babies on the backs of their necks, while they handled the punt of a large canoe. They are so efficient that children are never made to doubt their world through their doubting parents.

The child learns from the very beginning that the physical world can be handled, is handled, every minute, every hour, by all the grown up people, with sure footed, clear eyed competency. Those same adults never permit the child to even consider that he will not do as well as they do.

The results of this system of training are truly amazing. Children of three are perfectly at home amid the perils of their water world. They can swim as well as they walk; they can climb up and down the slippery house piles; they can tread their way sure and quick footed over the treacherous muddy shallows of the lagoon at low tide. They can be trusted to carry father a glowing cinder to light his pipe, without fear that they will fall and set the light thatched house on fire. They can climb all over the big canoes, work their way out along the slender booms of the outrigger, slip into the water and swim beside the canoe, one hand on the outrigger, until weary of this they climb aboard again.

At about two or two and a half, their fathers make them small canoes of their own, tiny craft, four or five feet long, simply shallow wooden shells hollowed out of small tree trunks. In these little canoes, the children race and play about the lagoon, learning to paddle accurately, to judge distances correctly, so that they will not catch the outrigger which projects from one side of the canoe, in the house piles, when they bring their canoes up to the house landing platforms. About the same time, their parents begin training them in handling larger canoes, and it is no uncommon sight to see a child of three or four, slowly punting along a 12-foot canoe, while father sits patiently, cross legged, upon the platform. The Manus are a busy people, ever up and about their fishing, their trading, their canoe building or voyaging; but they are never too busy to spare the time to properly train their small children, because they realize that upon good early physical adjustment the child's future efficiency depends.

When the whole aim of the parental training is to make children feel at home in the world, feel self-reliant, easily resourceful, surely confident, they do not try to deter a child by the sayings which are so often on adults' lips among ourselves. "Don't do that, you are too little." "Your legs aren't long enough." All such counsel tends to breed fearfulness, lack of confidence in children, and a Manus child who lacked self confidence would be a nuisance to himself and to everyone else. A child who attempts something beyond his strength is diverted, rather than discouraged. The Manus child consequently grows up completely sure of himself, sure that he can handle a situation, afraid of nothing, for certainly much of the basis of fear is laid in the frights, the failures of early childhood.

One other good effect this type of childhood training has. The children learn to take a realistic view of the universe. Instead of sitting idle, deterred from the activity which they covet, and dreaming of seven league boots which would enhance the power of their short legs, they are up and about, happy in continuous activity in which they are always becoming more able, more sure of themselves. They learn to blame, not their tools, their canoes, their paddles, for mistakes, but themselves, because they have a clear and accurate knowledge of how these mistakes were made. They are healthy, flexible minded children, supremely safe in a dangerous world, made so by the intelligence and patience with which their parents train them so early that they have not time to learn to make inept adjustments to the physical universe.

Most people get what they deserve, but few are willing to admit it.

Daughter—"Nothing gives the thrill of those three little words, 'I love you'."

Daddy Dear—"How about those three little words, 'Enclosed Find Cheque'?"

The worst fire menace in this country—The fellow who is always firing off his mouth. Some people notice that the days are getting longer; others that the nights are getting shorter. To an honest man a debt is never outlawed, regardless of what the law may be.

Mr. Perkinson—"Do you act towards your wife the way you did before you married her?"

Mr. Livingston—"Exactly. I remember just how I used to act when I first fell in love with her. I used to lean over the fence in front of her house and gaze at her shadow on the curtain, afraid to go in. I act the same way now."

It now costs more to amuse a child than it once did to educate his father. When a man wants his handkerchief he reaches around and yanks it out of his pocket; when a girl wants hers, she arises, shakes herself, and picks it off the floor. Yesterday's neglect causes most of to-day's worries.

Sweet Young Thing (to hotel clerk)—"How much are your rooms?"

Hotel Clerk—"Two dollars up to twelve."

Sweet Young Thing—"How much for one all night?"

Out of depression comes necessity; Out of necessity emerges invention; Out of invention grow new methods of work; Out of work will come renewed prosperity.

Gladys—"Why is Dorothy so angry? The papers gave a full account of her wedding."

Eloise—"Yes, but they put it in that Miss Blackfield was married to the well-known collector of antiques."

A bride, so the story goes, sent a dollar to New York recently for a copy of a book advertised as "What Every Young Married Woman Ought to Know." She received a cook book.

HE COULDN'T READ FOR INDIGESTION

"For some years previous to 1922 I was subject to indigestion, with headaches and thousands of stars sparkling in my eyes, which prevented me from reading. I decided to try Kruschen Salts. That was August, 1922, and I have taken a little in my first morning cup of tea ever since. I now eat anything, and am entirely free from indigestion or 'stars.'"—F. C.

Now let it be said quite definitely, that what Kruschen did for him, it will do for everybody else who suffers from indigestion as he did. The fact is that "the little daily dose" first stimulates the flow of gastric juices to aid digestion, and then ensures complete, regular, and unfailing elimination of all waste matter every day.

Soon after you start on Kruschen you will begin to feel the benefit. You will find to your satisfaction that you are able to enjoy your food without any distressing after-effects. And, as you persevere, you will see that the relief which Kruschen brings is lasting relief.

Fond Farewell for Rev. Thompson

Entertained at Lawn Party at Dixie last Week by His Parishioners.

"Behold a sower went forth to sow"—Matt. 13: 3.

"Ye sons of earth, prepare the plow,
Break up the fallow ground;
The Sower he went forth to sow
And scatter blessings 'round."

Twenty-five years ago Rev. H. V. Thompson came to Dixie and Erindale to sow the good seed and scatter blessings 'round. On August 18, 1931, twenty-five years after, the Dixie congregation met at the beautiful residence of Mr. Thomas Stewart to express their love, not in words alone, but also in generous gifts. Col. T. L. Kennedy, Minister of Agriculture, was chairman. The presentation of an illuminated address was made by Mr. Charles McCauley, people's warden.

The reverend gentleman expressed his thanks by raising the address reverently with both hands to his lips.

Other presentations made were: a handsome cheque, presented by Leonard Pallett; a club-bag from the A.Y.P.S. by Howard Pallett; and a purse to Mrs. Thompson presented by Gloria Fenwick. Then an excellent program was given by Mrs. J. W. Dale, Mrs. Walle and Gloria Fenwick.

Addresses were given by Joseph Goldthorpe, Thomas Stewart, L. R. Whiting, Edward J. Pallett and others, reviewing the history of the church, through sunshine and shadow, every speaker was generous with thanks to Mr. Thompson for the part he had always taken. He never was weary in well doing. And it was a privilege for every one to have a share in this entertainment, to show Mr. Thompson he was reaping the harvest of some of the good seed he had sown.

While most of the addresses had reference to the past, some of the speakers gave us a glimpse into the future, showing how the quality of life Mr. Thompson gave to the community, even in the commonest days, would leave its blessing in shaping the lives of others and the influence for good would go on and on forever.

Refreshments were served, which consisted of coffee, sandwiches, cake and ice cream, which was appreciated by all.

All the speakers seemed to be under the impression that Mr. Thompson was altogether their property. Then memory wandered back to a scene years ago. It was the first time we saw Mr. Thompson. It was in the cemetery beside the Anglican Church, Hornby. We are putting a friend and neighbor to bed with the shovel. All the surrounding different churches were represented. When Mr. Thompson prayed at the open grave he seemed to have a message direct from heaven to everyone there. On our way home we wondered if Mr. Thompson was our long looked for "sky pilot."

It was many years before the great author, Ralph Connor, had published the best of all his books, "The Sky Pilot." We had read a book and in that book the author had a character called "The Sky Pilot," being an imaginary character. He was as perfect as the author could make him. He would mourn with those who mourn and rejoice with those who rejoice. Weekday and Sunday he was a favourite with old and young, a perfect mixer. He was an imaginary Sky Pilot. We wanted a real live one. Then for some time before Mr. Thompson knew as we watched him with a critical eye. The second time we saw him was at Adamson's Garden Party, on the Homestead. He was chairman and behaved so well there and at social and solemn gatherings afterwards, we loved to see and hear him. He was an ideal mixer with old and young, rich and poor.

Therefore we took the liberty to always call Mr. Thompson "The Sky Pilot." And never once in our estimations did he forfeit the title.

The Thompson's are lovers of flowers and the flower gardens surrounding Stewart's lawn, where the farewell party was held added a charm to the night's enjoyment.

We were delighted to be numbered among the Thompson's friends that night. Perhaps being Presbyterians helped us out.

For the greatest prize Mr. Thompson won in all his life was when he was a young man. He visited a Presbyterian home and was at once captivated by their beautiful daughter. And ever since he has been happy to call her his better half.

When goodbys are said, what a sweet refrain,
To hear you are welcome back again
With this change in your life, with friends that are new,
Don't forget your old friends, they will not forget you,
The memory of good deeds, you did in the past
Will live as long as our lives will last.

Sandy.

ISLINGTON

In the death of Mrs. Robert Garbutt last Monday morning at the age of 71 years, Islington loses a highly esteemed resident. Although she has resided here for a great many years, she was born at Springfield, now Erindale, her maiden name being Johanna Maria Patchett. She was a faithful member of the Methodist, now the United Church, and until a year ago, took an active part in the ladies' section of the local lawn bowling club. She is survived by one son, Mr. Emerson Garbutt, and one grandson, Mr. Mercer Garbutt. The funeral takes place this Wednesday afternoon at 2.30 to Park Lawn Cemetery.

As far as an aid to travelling is concerned, very few of our residents seem to miss the Guelph Radial which ceased operations on the 15th inst. On the other hand, a number of its employees who live in this vicinity, are missing their pay cheques. This is one of the unfortunate features of the case. We are informed that 100 men have been thrown out of employment, which means that about 400 men, women and children have become dependant on some one else between Toronto and Guelph.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Beamish have returned from a ten-days' motor trip to Gravenhurst, Huntsville, Burk's Falls and North Bay.

The Etobicoke Horticultural annual Flower Show last Saturday, in the Community Hall was a real success. Despite the recent dry spell the exhibits of roses, dahlias, glads., asters and numerous other varities were excellent.

President Tier and Secretary Portch, with Mr. J. S. Hall, as judge, contributed much to its success.

Last Sunday afternoon., Mr and Mrs. S. J. Wolfe, and Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Beamish, of Islington motored to Hamilton to visit Mrs. Waldie. This venerable lady has been slightly indisposed for a few days, but is just as bright and cheery as ever. It is interesting to note, that, even though she became 91 years of age last March, she voted at the recent by-election in Hamilton on August 10th.

Mr. and Mrs. Beamish also made a brief call on Mrs. Charles O'Connor and her daughter, Mrs. Fleishman, who were formerly residents of the Ninth line Trafalgar.

ENGAGEMENTS

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Bessey of Georgetown, Ontario, wish to announce the engagement of their daughter, Mildred Catherine, to Dr. Carl Smith, B.A., son of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Smith of Kitchener, Ontario. The marriage is to take place on September 19th at Walmer Road Baptist Church, Toronto.

Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Nixon, of Brampton, announce the engagement of their eldest daughter, Frances, to Mr. R. Lloyd Beamish, of Calgary, Alta., son of Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Beamish, Toronto, the marriage to take place quietly in Calgary, September 11th.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Ward, Brampton, announce the engagement of their daughter, Lillian Ruby, to Mr. Victor Tedder, of Georgetown, the marriage to take place on September 12th.

Dr. and Mrs. H. C. Rundle of Brighton, Ontario, announce the engagement of their only daughter, Mona H., to J. Stafford H. Beck, L.L.B., S.J.D., of Toronto, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Beck, Brampton, Ontario, the marriage to take place early in September.

The engagement is announced of Violet Beatrice, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James A. Carstairs, St. Andrew's Gardens, Toronto, to James Thompson Bonham, of New Toronto, second youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. John T. Bonham, of Streetsville, Ontario.

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS

Don Ellsworth's wife, formerly the actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, learns that their married life has been very unhappy.

Peter Piper a Herald reporter, tries to interview Dr. Cavanaugh. Instead he meets Barbara Cavanaugh, and finds that she was engaged to Don Ellsworth before his marriage.

A body is found, burned by fire, in the tule marsh. The only thing by which the body can be identified is a patch of scalp with some hair attached. Dr. Cavanaugh asks Don Ellsworth and Mrs. Kane, Sheila's maid to secure for him a strang of Sheila's hair. They both refuse. But Dr. Cavanaugh gets it. Peter Piper hopes for advance information and Dr. Cavanaugh tells him the body is that of Sheila O'Shay, and Barbara, who is present, faints when she hears this.

CHAPTER VII.—(Cont'd.)

"If you're sure there's nothing I can do—" Peter said hesitantly. It seemed somehow heartless to leave her like that. It did not occur to him that he had left bodies strewn by the roadside after a wreck in order to rush to the nearest telephone with his story, without a similar qualm. He wanted Barbara to look at him. He wanted to know whether her eyes would be those of Alice in Wonderland grown up, or of the wary woman who drove an expensive sport coupe.

"I assure you there's no cause for anxiety." Again Peter had to submit to the doctor's grave scrutiny, with it's undertone of amusement.

Feeling very much like a small boy who has made a blundering nuisance of himself, he once again crossed the street and jerked "Bossy" into gear. It was only with the familiar hard smoothness of the wheel under his hand that his mind lurched into clarity. It was a clarity so disturbing that he fought it off with an almost physical sense of struggle. But it was no use.

Peter's brain, temporarily numbed, was once again funtioning alertly. His emotional bias—and he admitted wryly that only an emotional earthquake could make him forget that Jimmy at the city desk was waiting for his report—was powerless against the relentless chug-chug with which the events of the morning fell into place.

Barbara did not look like the kind of girl who would faint easily. She had not seemed in the least exhausted when he talked with her. She admitted that she had not read the papers recently — therefore she probably knew nothing of the body found in the marsh. His memory raced back over the words of their conversation. He had mentioned a "big story" but had not said what the story was. Of course there were plenty of people who paid little attention to the papers. On the other hand, might she have deliberately kept away from them through fear of what she might read? It was a futile but very common defence which led people unconsciously to act as if what they did not know for certain was therefore non-existent.

She had fainted just after her father's announcement that Sheila O'Shay had been murdered. Was there a connection there? She had once been engaged to Don Ellsworth—and she did not want the fact to be known. Was she protecting Don? Or was her father—who, come to think of it, had been very anxious to get rid of Peter before Barbara should fully regain consciousness—protecting her? Was he afraid of what she might say when she once again realized the discovery from which she had recoiled into unconsciousness?

Peter faced with tightened lips and sick eyes the last question of all. Was her friendliness toward himself a deliberate device to secure him on her side—because he might find out too much? Was she using the age-old chicanery of women to beguile and confuse men? He recoiled, despising himself for the suspicion. But his dislike of the idea did not make it any the less possible. After all, the method, if it was a method, had been disconcertingly effective! But he knew the danger of believing what you want to believe, and he forced his mind to meet squarely the image of her face.

"Damn it all," he grunted. "I don't know—but I've got to find out!"

CHAPTER XVIII.

Peter's face, minus its usual bisecting grin, looked long than ever when he dragged himself wearily across the local room to Jimmy's desk. He felt physically battered. The familiar din of the local room typewriters, the shouts of "copy boy," the "bling" of telephone bells, which usually were unregarded elements of a normal atmosphere, smote his ear as separate sounds, distinctly as if he were hearing them for the first time. All this rushing to and fro seemed futile and unimportant, like the scurrying of mice across a barn floor. What did it matter, anyway, whether the "Herald" beat the "Record" by an edition?

The city editor caught sight of Peter's tall, angular figure over the head of the society editor, who had just succeeded in claiming his attention.

"Talk to me about it later," he said brusquely.

"But she's on the telephone—" the society editor expostulated.

"I don't care if the Angel Gabriel is on the telephone! Well, Piper?"

Peter leaned his elbow against the wire mail basket, tipping it at a perilous angle.

"I didn't go to the city hall—" he began nonchalantly.

"The hell you didn't!"

The familiar elixir of the local room was having its effect on Peter. He felt a faint resurgence of his customary enjoyment in baiting the excitable city editor, who leaped after news like a dog tearing after a rabbit.

"No," he drawled. "But I got an advance statement direct from Dr. Cavanaugh. He has identified the body as that of Sheila O'Shay."

Jimmy wasted no time in congratulations.

"Boy!" his voice was a raucous, joyous bark. "Go to the library and get all the pictures we have of A. G. Cavanaugh—Cavanaugh spelled with a 'C'." He peered across the room at the office clock, pushing his eye-shade back over the hedge of upstanding red hair. "Go to it, Piper. We'll hold the edition fifteen minutes over the deadline. Give us a short lead. Then get the slippings on Cavanaugh and write a good 'follow' story for the 'home'."

Peter lounged across the room to his desk, thrust a sheet of copy paper into the carriage of his typewriter, and typed his name in the upper left corner.

The face of Barbara wavered before his eyes—the face of Barbara, white, with closed eyes; the face of Barbara with the broad, childlike brow and the smooth hair drawn straight back; the face of Barbara with the determined chin telling him that she was a "guttersnipe." The face of Barbara——

"Piper!" the voice of Jimmy at his elbow was a rumbling growl. "This is a daily newspaper, not a biennial edition of 'Who's Who.' We're holding the presses for you!"

Peter thrust the face of Barbara out of his mind. When a story had to be written, it had to be written—in spite of day and night and death and hell." The line, forgotten since high school days, flashed out of the darkness. Resolutely he summoned the old habit of concentration. But it was easier to ignore the world outside—the room with its voices and bells and clattering confusion—than to blot out that other, inner confusion which made his thoughts a clamor of questionings.

He hammered out a lead—jerked out the sheet and tore it up—flung the wadded scraps on the floor in the general direction of the waste-paper basket—and began again. His fingers pounded rapidly, steadily, clackety-clack, pause—clackety-clack on the keys of the battered typewriter. As each sheet of copy paper was whipped out of the carriage, with "more to cum" typed at the bottom, a copy boy at his elbow whisked it out of his hand and ran with it to the city desk, waited for Jimmy's rapid perusal, and ran again to the copy desk, where he sent it hurtling down the tube to the composing room. The city editor bent over his desk, with a man from the art room, arranging a lay-out—Cavanaugh, Don Ellsworth, Sheila O'Shay.

Peter himself took the last sheet from the typewriter and laid it on the city desk.

Jimmy looked up.

"That's a pretty good yarn," he said.

It was the highest pinnacle of praise to which a member of the "Herald" staff could be lifted. Jimmy reserved his superlatives for the unimportant. He unloosed the full intensities of his vocabulary on a misplaced initial in a two-inch item; but when by a juggling of captions the mayor of the city was labeled "Bank Embezzler," all that he had said was "Oh dear!"

"You look all shot to pieces," he added. "Go out and get a good lunch and then walk around for half an hour. Here!" He thrust two silver dollars across the desk to Peter. "The lunch is on the house." He had remembered that it was the day before pay day—a day on which the members of the local room staff were likely to lunch on a sandwich and five-cent coffee.

"Thanks," Peter said indifferently. "I'm all right."

"Do as I tell you!" snapped the city editor. "And your follow story will be page one—and sign it."

Peter drifted past the desk where the society editor was indignantly, though in cautious tones, discussing the shortcomings of Jimmy with the waterfront man.

"Mrs. Ames is one of the most prominent society women in town—the Van Alstyne Ameses, you know."

The waterfront man did not know, but he grunted sympathetically.

"When she wants her picture in Sunday's paper, it's got to go. And what was I to tell her? That Jimmy didn't care how prominent she was, compared with somebody that got murdered, I suppose! I guess Mrs. Van Alstyne Ames is just as important as any corpse. But Jimmy's positively inhuman."

"I'll say he is!"

It is the custom of all local rooms to agree on the inhumanity of city editors. Peter jingled the two dollars in his pocket and nodded briefly to the two in passing. He ought to feel elated instead of tired, and dry in the mouth as if he had been eating chips. Peter had written good stories before. But for the first time in his life he had written a good story—and did not care.

Sleep's Prisoner

When late at night I steal to look
At my small son asleep,
The gravity, the quietude
Of his face make me weep.

I hold my breath and lean above
The carven brow, sealed eyes,
The laughing mouth, now still and close,
The lips that know not sighs.

Ah, far away from me, and lost,
And sad and small he seems,
As all alone he wanders through
The country of his dreams.

Small traveller, in that far land
To which I cannot come,
May the dark night be good to you
And morning bring you home.

LIFTUP

Cling to the flying hours, and yet
Let one pure hope, one firm desire,
Like song on dying lips be set—
That ere we fall in scattered fire,
Our hearts may lift the world's heart higher.

Here in the autumn month of time,
Before the great new year can break,
Some little way our feet should climb,
Some little marks our words should make
For liberty and manhood's sake.

—Edmund Gosse.

The ADVENTURES of CAPTAIN JIMMY and his Dog SCOTTIE

What came before: After Captain Jimmy and his Chinese friends were rescued from the desert island, by the freighter "Madrigal," they sight a strange looking craft firing at another boat. Chung takes the telescope and tries to identify the ships.

The telescope suddenly collapsed in Chung's hands, as telescopes will when you squeeze them. Chung was all dismay—where a moment before he was delighted with the wonderful Magic Eye that would bring distant objects close up.

"Lookee Stickee allee gone", he wailed.

I showed him how it stretched out and soon he had it working fine, in spite of the laughter of the sailors. Carefully he surveyed the ship which fired the cannon, then as we watched him he seemed to turn three shades paler and dropped the glass with a sudden cry.

"What is it Chung", I asked hurriedly.

But Chung was so upset that he lapsed into a curious chatter of Chinese and English and goodness knows what. I could not understand a word of it. Everyone stopped tense and excited. Evidently Chung knew something was going on out there in the China Sea.

I shook him roughly "What is it" I said.

"Pilates" said Chung and his teeth shattered.

Pirates! So that was it. Those dreaded villians that infest the Chinese waters and prey on weak vessels. There was not much time to waste, if we wanted to save the little ship, at which they were firing.

The decks of the "Madrigal" became a scene of the wildest excitement, as we worked feverishly getting ready to take off in our plane, toward the scene of battle. Soon we had it overboard, unlashed and swaying at the side of the derrick.

"Pilates" repeated Chung, savagely, and before I could stop him he climbed out on the derrick boom and slid down the pulley ropes to the plane.

"Come back, Chung" I yelled but I might as well have remained quiet for Chung sat with clenched fists in the cockpit, swearing terrible things in Chinese.

I was amazed. Chung, of all people, was the last man on earth that I would have expected to turn warrior. It was not until a long time later that I learned that the Pirates had broken up Chung's boyhood home on the river and laid the district waste and ever since then he had hoped for a chance to clean up on the Chinese bands.

Really, his was a case of splendid courage, for he was actually scared white——or rather scared lemon yellow—with fear, yet he wanted to take revenge for the murder of his family, My respect for Chung grew immensely.

Taking him along with me in the plane was impossible, however, I needed the room for an experienced gunner. The mate of the "Madrigal" had some naval training on board a warship, so I took him.

Our artillery consisted of two heavy shotguns and plenty of shells, also long range automatic pistol. We would have given a fortune for some really good bombs—big ones with plenty of pep—but we had to take such weapons as happened to be on board.

Loaded Ships Now Fumigated

Disease-Carrying Rats Easily Killed, Even When the Cargo is Abroad

An improved method of fumigating ships when they arrive in port has recently been announced by the Federal Public Health Service. The old method was to fumigate ships at the dock after they had discharged their cargo. The new method is to fumigate the ship before unloading takes place and before the ship has actually docked. The object of fumigation is to exterminate the disease-carrying rats aboard. The control of disease is obtained in cases where the ship comes from a suspected port, rats which have come aboard from a plague-infested area being killed. Also the method gives the quarantine official positive laboratory evidence of the freedom of a given shop from disease; for if the rats examined are disease free, it is presumptive evidence that all which escape fumigation are disease free. The fumigation method is said to be only 80 per cent. effective in the case of loaded ships, though 100 per cent. effectiveness is possible in empty vessels. Eighty per cent. effectiveness, however, is considered satisfactory. This is pointed out in a simple hypothetical problem. A ship is in port ten days; five days to unload and five days to load. There are 100 rats aboard. If 80 are killed before the ship reaches dock, the port is subjected to only 200 "rat-days" in the ten days. Liquid hydrocyanic acid is the most effective gas used.

Cure for Pernicious Anemia

Pernicious anemia, once a dreaded malady, can now be treated effectively. In fact, it is said, there are few cases which do not respond to treatment and still fewer which relapse when the treatment is continued regularly. The treatment, now well known, lies in administering fresh liver or a potent liver extract. More recently, it is said, the stomach of certain animals, particularly that of the pig, is as effective as liver, and dried stomach has been found to be fully as effective as fresh. Desiccated stomach forms a material fat free, odorless, tasteless and is a smooth and palatable mixture when suspended in milk.

Prize-Winner Gives Her Favorite Recipe

Quick and Easy Way for Preserving Raspberry Jam

Cooking in the modern way is practical science. That is the way Mrs. A. Mason of Toronto, winner of 32 cooking prizes in 1930, regards her art. Among these awards, Mrs. Mason received four prizes for jams at the Canadian National Exhibition and the silver cup given at the Markham Fair for the best jam made by the short boil method.

Although she has won many prizes for pastry, Mrs. Mason stands high above other prize winners in carrying off the awards for jams and jellies that are difficult to make—particularly raspberry and strawberry jams and jellies. Both these fruits used to be regarded as impossible to jell, yet year after year, Mrs. Mason has won several prizes for both.

Housewives are busy these days, stocking the jam cupboard for next winter and so Mrs. Mason gives a recipe that is seasonable now and which she declares is easy and quick.

Raspberry Jam

4 cups (2 lbs.) crushed berries
6½ cups (2¾ lbs.) sugar
½ cup bottled pectin

Use only fully ripened fruit. Measure crushed berries and sugar into large kettle, mix, and bring to a full rolling boil over hottest fire. Stir constantly before and while boiling. Boil hard 1 minute. Remove from fire and stir in pectin. Then stir and skim by turns for just 5 minutes to cool slightly, to prevent floating fruit. Pour quickly. Cover hot jam with a film of hot paraffin. Roll glass to spread paraffin on sides. For a soft, very slow set use ½ cup less sugar. This recipe requires 2 quarts berries and makes 9 to 10 eight ounce jars of jelly.

A Most Delicious Cake

1 cup white sugar, ½ cup butter, 2 eggs, ½ cup sour milk, 1 teasp. soda, level, 1 orange, 1 ripe banana, 1 cup raisins, ½ teasp. vanilla, 2 cups flour. Method: Cut up the orange in chunks and put it all through a grinder. Grind the raisins and banana as well. If it is not quite fine put it all through the grinder twice.

In another dish cream the butter and sugar, add the eggs and beat. Put in the fruit, then add the milk and flour alternately, putting the soda in the milk. The mixture should be light but not running. Put into a greased pan on buttered wax paper to fit the bottom and bake in a moderate oven. Allow the cake to cool a little, then turn out on board and remove paper. When cool ice the cake.

Icing

Boil ½ cup white sugar and ½ cup brown sugar with ½ cup water until it threads well. Add this syrup to about 14 marshmallows, cut up, and beat till it is smooth. Spread on the cake. The icing should be smooth and soft but not sticky.

Twilight Hour Story
Chicks and Other Furry Friends

No. 33

I told you last time about the chicks' house getting too small for them. It wasn't very warm outside, either, as Billy would soon tell you, but you see the chicks were covered so completely with those warm white feathers that they didn't mind the cold one bit. Did you ever notice how one feather lies on top of the other so neatly and closely? Then besides that, underneath the feathers close to their warm bodies was a layer of down as soft as the dress they had on when they were wee babies. Do you remember? You see, they had on such very warm clothes now, even when the wind blew they didn't need to care unless, of course, it blew too hard.

Well, what did they do about having a bigger home? That box was certainly getting too small. You see, Billy couldn't put those little chickens with the other hens, because, isn't it queer, those big hens might hurt them. Yes, very likely they would. In fact, I'm pretty sure they would. Big chickens some way or other don't like smaller chickens to come and live with them. They don't mind so much sometimes if they grew right up with them, but just to go and put them into their pen suddenly and leave them there would make the hens real cross. They would not let the little fellows have anything to eat or go to get a drink of water out of the pan or do anything. If the chicks would try they would get a hard peck that hurt like everything. In fact, the only thing for them to do would be to go and huddle up in a corner and not move, so the hens would forget they were there. Now why do hens act like that? Well, I don't know. I guess it is just chickens' ways. Oh, there are such a lot of things we don't know about, don't you think so? But we do know a few things, don't we? And if we keep hunting around and learning something here and something there, first thing we know we'll be knowing quite a bit. We know this much, and that is that strange little chickens, even if they are half grown, mustn't be put in with big ones.

Billy's daddy wasn't very busy just then, so he and Billy hunted around for a place to put them. There was a little room in the barn which they used in the spring when they raised little chickens in the incubator. My, but this is a big word, isn't it? You ask your mamma what an incubator is. I'm pretty sure she will know, and then some other time we might tell you more about it. Well, they hadn't used this room for a long time because it was too small. It was just filled with a lot of things like a couple of pails and feed boxes and things like that.

"There now, Billy, you can get to work and clean out this little room for your pets. I'll let you put them in here if you keep it clean," said Billy's daddy.

"Oh, daddy, this will be a fine place for them," laughed Billy, as he jumped around in great glee.

And now next time we are going to find out just how beautifully Billy fixed up this little room.

A Father's Plea

Lord, let me do the worrying,
On me let all the burdens fall.
Let those around me laugh and sing
And never guess my care at all.
So long as they can happy be
And still have heart for mirth and song,
Let all the troubles fall on me,
But keep me well and keep me strong.

Lord, if I falter at the door,
Remind me that the day is done.
My children romping on the floor
Know naught of struggles lost or won.
Grant me the courage to go in
As though I had no pain to bear
And hide behind a father's grin
All dismal signs of doubt and care.

Lord, let me carry on alone!
To them my griefs I would not tell,
Nor make my heavy burdens known.
I'd have them think that all is well.
They are so young and still so small;
Care does not yet to them belong.
On me let all the troubles fall.
My only prayers is: "Keep me strong!"

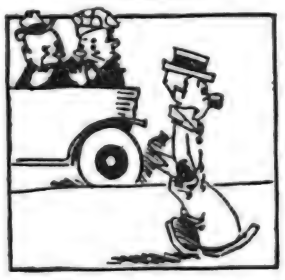
—Edgar A. Guest, in Tit-Bits (London).

England ranks fifth in the list so far as first-line strength in the air is concerned.

The present percentages of unmarried women between thirty and fifty years of age are stated to be the highest ever recorded, due in a great part to the losses of manpower due to the Great War.

NOT KEEN

A young man who had failed to make good in England was settled on a farm in Kenya by indulgent parents. In a few days one of his neighbors called.



"I say," said the visitor, "we'd like to know if you'd care to join a few of us who are going to hunt for lions."

"Well—er—thank you," said the young man, somewhat taken aback. "It's awfully decent of you, but—er—I don't think I've lost any lions."

REPENTANCE

Many who think they are repenting are thinking more of sin's punishment than of its power.

Seaside Romeo: "I've had no luck with that girl. I've passed her every day for the last fortnight, and she hasn't smiled once." Friend: "Some woman have no sense of humor."

"I understand De Poet is doing much better than formerly in the poetry line."

"Why, he told me he hadn't written a line for six months."

"Yes, he told me the same thing."

An Interesting Study

Lord Duncannon, young son of Earl of Bessborough, Canada's governor-general.

Better Late

The late-comer to a London concert hall, who imagined he was visiting a variety entertainment, arrived in time to hear a performance not at all to his taste.

He nudged the man next to him.

"I say," he asked, "what's this stuff we're getting?"

"Hush," came the shocked reply: "this is Beethoven's Ninth Symphony."

"Well," muttered the non-musical man, "if the other eight were like this, thank goodness I was late!"

Easy

The jealous wife of a theatrical manager was peeved when he came home and announced that he had that day selected from a big crowd twenty-four wonderful chorus girls.

"I suppose," she declared, sarcastically, "it was very difficult work for you?"

"Oh, no, dear," he told her. "Simply a matter of form."

"Humph! Brown absent again today? I'll bet he's got some sort of lame excuse." "Yes, sir. Broke his leg, sir."

To An Unfortunate Mouse

I've caught you, prying mouse! But now
I wish I'd never set the spring
That snapped your life,—you most unloved
Of any living thing.

Perhaps you've left a family!
I wonder if you've ever sinned . . .
Or if your tiny, shattered bones
Will rattle in the wind.

"And let them have dominion . . ." If
I've done a thing that wasn't right,
Your little ghost will cross my floor
And haunt me through the night.

—Madelyn G. Cobham.

Sunday School Lesson

August 30. Lesson IX—The Mission to Cyprus—Acts 12: 25 to 13: 12. Golden Text—I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.—Romans 1: 16.

ANALYSIS

I. A MISSIONARY CHURCH, Acts 13: 1-3.
II. THE FIRST MISSION FIELD, Acts 13:

I. A MISSIONARY CHURCH, Acts 13: 1-3.

(a) The Leaders. In the list of five leaders in the church, the name of Barnabas is placed first, and that of Saul last, v. 1. They had not yet "discovered" Saul. Or was it that their memory of the man-he-was obscured the man-he-had-become? But he will not remain long in the background. Of the other three we know little or nothing. They are forgotten. Yet the unheralded work they did in Antioch sent Christianity out into the Gentile world. Where would the church be without the devotion and sacrifice of the "unknown disciples"?

(b) God's Separated men. "As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, "Separate me Barnabas and Saul," v. 3. The conviction was growing upon them that these two men were the ones specially gifted for the work they had in mind. Does the Holy Spirit speak like that today? Assuredly. But in our modern way of putting it, we speak, not of the One who inspired the deed, but of his agents, a minister perhaps or a mother, or a church court. Who gave them the impulse? Saul and Barnabas responded when the call came. Barnabas had the encouragement of past successes, 9: 27; 11: 24f. Saul still carried the dream that flashed upon his in Jerusalem—"I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles." God and Barnabas and Saul had been getting ready for this day.

II. THE FIRST MISSION FIELD, Acts 13:

(a) Cyprus. The work to which Barnabas and Saul were called was not merely missionary work, it was a mission to Gentiles. That was the forward step. The baptism of Cornelius was ratified, it is true, but he was considered a "special case!" The baptism of the Ethiopian eunuch was quite "unofficial." Gentiles had been received into the church, but they came in through the door of the synagogue and observed Jewish law. Now, however, the church turned directly to the Gentiles and established churches based, not on Jewish privilege, but on God's universal love. Cyprus was the first port of call. It was familiar ground to Barnabas, since his home was there. Apart from some Jews in Salamis and Paphos, the population of the island was pagan. Their stay in Salamis was uneventful. Their method was to preach in the synagogues wherever possible, bringing their message "to the Jew first," and then to the Gentiles. When the Jews refused to respond they turned to the Gentiles, ignoring their own race. From Salamis they worked their way westward toward Paphos, the capital of Cyprus.

(b) Christianity at Court. Arriving in Paphos, the missionaries were summoned before the Roman pro-consul, Sergius Paulus. Attached to his household was a sorcerer, v. 6. Seeing in the clear arguments of the strangers a danger to his own standing, Elymas, as he was called, began to dispute. Blind to the truth himself, he tried to prevent his master from seeing it. It was a critical moment for Christianity on this its first appearance before Roman aristocracy. Saul's trained mind instantly grasped the situation. He stepped forward, "set his eyes on Elymas (v. 9) —one thinks of Napoleon's "Olympian anger" and the "unbearable flash" of his eye—stabbed him with that terror-inspiring rebuke, and the overwhelmed sorcerer was led, blinded, from the room. Sergius, amazed at the "doctrine of the Lord," believed, that is, believed that Saul was a true prophet. We do not know that he became a Christian.

(c) Paul Comes Forward. When the missionaries set out they were "Barnabas and Saul." When they left Paphos they were "Paul and his company." Barnabas, generous soul could say, like Collier of Manchester, "I am out for the kingdom; it is the kingdom that matters to me and the moment I find a man who is a quarter of an inch bigger than I am, and can do the work better than I can I am ready to get him his crowd, to hold his coat and back him, while he does it."

Not only did Saul come into prominence at Paphos, he adopted his Roman name, Paul. Saul of Tarsus had been such an ardent Jew that perhaps he did not value very highly his Roman citizenship. Now, however, his attitude was changing. It must have given him prestige in the presence of the Roman deputy. His new faith was breaking down his Jewish pride. The refusal of the Jews to accept Christ was turning his thoughts to his other kinsmen of the Empire. His triumph before Sergius must have fired his imagination with the thought of converting the empire. Henceforth he is Paul, the Roman citizen, and his work lies in the Roman world.

Correct

An actor entertaining a party of friends to lunch was annoyed by the slowness of the service. The waiter seemed casual in the extreme, and refused to hurry.

When the bill was presented the actor doled out the exact sum, adding one solitary halfpenny.

The waiter coughed.

"Made a little mistake, haven't you, sir? This here is a ha'penny."

"No mistake, no mistake," said the actor, with a bitter smile: "I never give less."

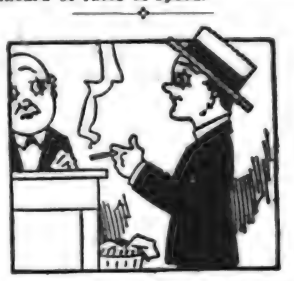
Schneider Race Trials Started

R. A. F. Pilots Determined to Win Famous Cup Outright

Calshot, Hampshire, England.—Roaring in swift seaplanes over Southampton water and the Solent, picked speed pilots of the Royal Air Force are preparing to battle hard for the Schneider trophy they have already won twice in succession. If they win again, they win the trophy outright and permanently.

British planes last time, in 1929, tore over the 200 mile course at six miles a minute to defeat France and Italy. Outside the actual Schneider races, the British high speed pilots made world records which still remain unbroken. This year they want to beat their own records. They have "hush hush" planes whose exact speed capabilities are carefully guarded secrets.

The race will take place on Sept. 12 and Italy and France are again expected to be Britain's opponents. Which three machines will actually represent Britain in the world's greatest speed test, and the classic of aviation, will not be decided until the eve of the contest. Eight pilots of the Royal Air Force have been in strict training for months and three of them will be chosen later to pilot the machines.



The contest again will be largely an affair of Governments. In this respect it is unique in the world of sports, if indeed it can be classed in the world of sports and its highly important strategic aspects put in the background.

Engines Concealed

The second of two, new, British seaplanes reached Calshot recently. The engines of both planes are concealed for the most part, with few gadgets visible, and to the lay observer they convey little, except perhaps a slight impression of great power in reserve. They seem rather like strange, lean sharks which suddenly dart from the water and cross the horizon in a roar of power and a blaze of speed.

The course, again over the waters of Spithead and the Solent, covers 217 statute miles. Conditions introduced for the first time this year require all aircraft to carry out certain preliminary trials on the day of the race before the actual contest. And these preliminaries have necessitated some changes in design. To cover both preliminary trials and the actual speed contest the machines have to carry a greater weight of petrol, which of course tends to increase weight in other directions. The new conditions are roughly estimated to amount to an extra lap of the race.

It is doubtful whether the great increase in speed marking the successive races so far will be maintained this year, in view of the new requirement. But the R. A. F. high speed flight will be fully prepared and ready to try for hitherto unheard of rates of speed.

"Sir, I should like to work only half time during the summer."

"Keep right on, my boy; you are working only half the time now."

EXPERIENCE

One thorn of experience is worth a whole wilderness of warning.—Lowell.

Whenever men arrive at the knowledge of the fact that what one man gains at another's cost or loss is never a real gain, and that the same thing is true of national advantages acquired upon similar conditions, a great advance will be made towards a Christian democracy.—E. B. Sledgwick.

Mr. P. MacDonald of Streetsville had a little misfortune on Yonge Street North, this week when some reckless driver ran into his car and damaged it considerably.

Should Give them Credit

The Council have been needlessly blamed this week because the power was off part of the time. But it is not the fault of the Council if we have a long dry spell and the pond runs dry. We shouldn't blame the Council for everything that goes wrong. These men, we believe, give their time and work for the good of the municipality. How would it be to change around and give them a little credit? Things are running pretty smoothly, and no doubt all will be ahle to pay their taxes before the year is out, in spite of the general depression. Cheer up!—There are better times just around the corner, and we will soon be making the turn.

Boy Scouts in Camp

Rev. Capt. Frank Vipond, and his Troop of 28 Boy Scouts of Toronto are having a pleasant time camping on the Streetsville Fair Grounds for ten days, but they will break camp to morrow morning. Last Saturday the O.C. and his assistant officers entertained about 70 people from St. Andrew's Church, Todmorden, relatives and friends of the boys. Last night they entertained a few prominent Streetsville people to a camp dinner, which was generously served and relished by all. Short speeches were made by Capt. Vipond and his guests. Then followed the camp-fire and singing. During the evening an interesting address on Swimming and LifeSaving was given by Mr. W. J. Barclay, Instructor. The Scouts are a happy bunch, and seem to be enjoying themselves in the invigorating atmosphere on the banks of the Credit. Capt. Vipond is to be commended for giving these boys of his parish this splendid outing.

Did you ever think of the editor and what a task is his? He tries to tell you who's in town from Tom and Dick to Liz. He gives you all the weekly news, writ up with sweat of brow, and gathers newsy items, the best that he knows how. He pays out worthy compliments when such are justly due, but if he knocks: alas, alack, what'll the poor man do? He's jumped upon by twenty score who shout with might and main, "You have no sense, you're dumb,—a bore, you've made ten thousand people sore, put on your hat and lock the door, and take the early train. But if his budget is a wow, the best there is, a peach, and how! How many tell him? Few I trow. He carries on and wonders how the people like his sheet. The moral is, dear friends and if you are pleased, just tell us now: and if you ain't, why do the same, we'll do our darnedest and be game.

Exonerate Motorist of Highway Fatality

H. A. Bernard, Toronto, whose motor car struck William Wanmer, at Dixie on Saturday night, inflicting fatal injuries, was exonerated from all blame by the corner's jury sitting here.

Coroner Dr. A. B. Sutton presided, and R. W. Lent acted for the Crown. Dr. W. H. Godfrey gave evidence as to the extent of Wanmer's injuries, those in the chest causing death. The story of Wanmer's attempt to cross the road at the corner of Dundas street and the first line east was told by the only eye-witness, beside the driver of the car, who stated that Wanmer paused and appeared to raise his hand.

Evidence of Mr. and Mrs. Bernard and Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Toner, Toronto passengers in Bernard's car, as well as that of Traffic Officer Palmer, was also taken. The confusion arising from lights at the point of the accident, with a brightly-lighted market on the southeast corner, street lights and cars passing east and west on the Dundas highway, as well as north and south on the first line, was explained by witnesses.

No Purchasers at Postponed Tax Sale

Not a single lot, or part of a lot, was transferred at the second session of the postponed tax sale of Toronto Township; $2,500 of business was done on Saturday, but Monday not a single purchaser appeared. Reports are prevailent, however, that at least one of the large estates, namely, the Shropshire estate, will be redeemed by the original owners within a month of the sale. The payment of taxes on the Shropshire estate would reduce the tax sale abstract by more than 43 per cent. There is every prospect that a great many of the other arrears will be taken care of, as those in arrears are being given opportunities to pay off their taxes in instalments.

MARRIAGES

Featherstone—Ford

A quiet wedding took place at Wesley United Church Manse, Toronto, when Ella May, eldest daughter of Mrs. Jennie Ford and the late James Ford was married to Gordon Oliver Featherstone, son of the late Mr. Jonathan Featherstone. Rev. J. D. Fitzpatrick officiated. The bride wore a becoming gown of peach colored crepe romaine, with hat and shoes to match, and she carried a bouquet of Butterfly roses and lily-of-the-valley. Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home her mother on Ossington Avenue. Later the couple left by motor for Muskoka. On their return they will reside near Hornby.

Police Chief Recovering

Port Credit, Aug.24—A change for the better was the report this morning on Chief Constable Telfer Wilson's condition. The chief, who was attacked on Friday by two men, has been confined to his home. He enters the hospital today for an X-ray to discover whether a small bone in his head has been fractured.

Current Crop Report

The grain harvest has progressed rapidly over the province and threshing has been the general practice. Fall wheat has averaged 35 bushels of good quality grain to the acre and barley has yielded satisfactorily. Threshing returns bear out earlier reports of material damage to the oat crop through rust and smut. Corn and roots continue very promising. In South-western Ontario beans are being seriously affected by a small worm new to this crop. Cutting of the tobacco crop has been general since the middle of August.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Royle of Erindale had their little daughter, Barbara, christened on Sunday morning at St. Peter's church, Erindale, by Rev. H. V. Thompson, prior to his leaving for Niagara Falls.

Here and There

Canada's total wool clip is about 21,000,000 pounds annually, while Canadian mills use at least twice as much as this every year, and Canadian consumption of manufactured woollens equals about four times the clip.

Lake Louise Icelandic poppies, one of the glories of this part of the Canadian Rockies, are in demand in thousands of gardens all over the world. Gardeners at the Chateau are now busy gathering seeds which will later be mailed to guests of the hotel this season.

Representing an increase of 31,000,000 bushels over the same period last year, 199,989,000 bushels of grain were marketed on Canadian Pacific Railway western lines during the twelve-month period since August 1, 1930. This gives the railway company a percentage of 52.3 of all the grain handled in that period.

More than 479,000,000 fish eggs, fry, fingerlings, and yearling fish and a few older fish were distributed last year from the hatchery establishments operated by the Fish Culture Division of the Canadian Department of Fisheries. Largest distribution was from the hatcheries in the Prairie Provinces.

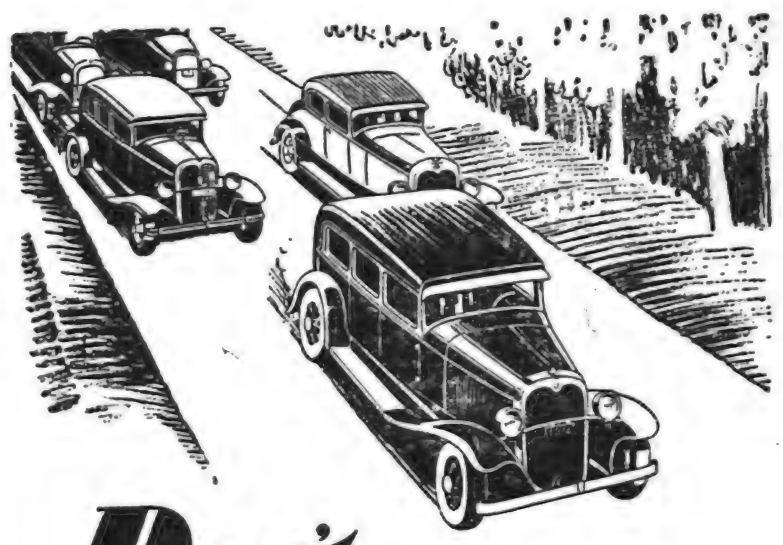
Nipigon River Bungalow Camp Trophy competition is getting some fine entries this season. Recently a trout of seven pounds and one ounce was put in, and shortly afterwards, a six pounds, fifteen-ounce trout was taken. Catches of three to five-pound fish are frequent and one of the best seasons in years is reported from the camp.

J. O. Turcotte, Canadian Exhibition Commissioner, who visited Regina recently in connection with interior decoration in the magnificent new building which will house the World's Grain Exhibition and Conference, states that a start on this work will be made immediately. Decoration will be in grain seeds, no paint of any kind being used.

The Dutch wheat mixing law, effective July 4, enforcing a maximum of 25 per cent. of soft domestic wheat in the making of bread in Holland, may lead to an increase of this percentage which should have the effect of creating a great demand for Canadian hard wheat, says J. C. Macgillivray, Canadian Trade Commissioner at Rotterdam.

"Development of Canada's ocean ports is not merely a Dominion problem but is a matter of interest and concern to the British Empire and the world as well," is the conviction expressed by Sir Alexander Gibb, G.B.E., world famous engineer and authority on port development and operation, who has been called in to superintend the rebuilding of the Saint John port facilities, recently destroyed by fire.

Stay of the King and Queen of Siam at the Banff Springs Hotel during the latter half of August marked the peak of the season at that famous Canadian Rockies resort. His Majesty, under the incognito of Prince Sukhodaya, opened the Highland Festival August 27, and the royal party made a thorough inspection of the mountains in motor excursions, had a couple of fishing trips, saw a rodeo at Kananaskis ranch, and were guests of honor at a Pow-Wow of the Stoney Indians. 767,



Evening rates (7.00 p.m. to 8.30 p.m. local time) are considerably lower than day rates on "anyone" calls. Night rates (8.30 p.m. to 4.30 a.m.) are lower still.

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA

Hospital days were lonely. Of course, her friends did all they could to keep her cheerful — her room was a bower of roses — but how she looked forward to evening when Jack could sit by her and talk of his day at the office.

Then came the news that he must leave town on business. She wondered how she could stand the wait until he came home. But Jack, wise fellow, knew how to bridge the gap. Promptly each evening at nine he called her over Long Distance and told her all the things she wished to hear.

Extravagant? . . . not a bit . . . for night rates are always inexpensive! What could be worth more for what it cost?

Don't be a road hog!

The person who drives in the middle of the road at any speed, but especially the extremely slow driver, offers a silent insult to every other driver on the highway.

But this disregard of every rule of common courtesy is merely incidental.

The real offense of the Road Hog is that he forces others to risk life and limb. He obstructs the vision of those drivers behind him and makes them either drive at his speed or risk a head-on collision in passing him.

Probably no form of law-breaking on the highways causes directly or indirectly so varied a list of accidents as does middle-of-the-road driving.

Every man who drives a car helps to pay for the highways. Every motorist is entitled to use them safely.

Why deprive any man of his right?

Don't be a Road Hog.

VARICOSE VEINS

The blood is carried through the body by the arteries, and is brought back to the heart by the veins. The blood current in the veins is much more slow than it is in the arteries, and from the lower part of the body, the flow in the veins is uphill. For these reasons, it is not difficult to check or interfere with the flow in the veins, particularly those of the lower part of the body.

Varicose veins are enlarged veins. Enlargement of the veins occurs when, for one reason or other, the flow of blood through the veins is sufficiently checked to cause the veins to become distended. If the distension is severe, or if it is repeated, the veins become permanently enlarged and lose their normal shape and condition.

The legs and the rectum are the the parts of the body where vericose veins are most commonly found. Constriction of the legs by tight garters may be responsible. A tumour in the pelvis, a bowel that is overloaded as a result of constipation, or pregnancy may cause pressure on the veins in the pelvis and bring about enlargement of the veins.

Certain forms of heart disease, in which the flow of blood is not normal, may act as a cause of varicose veins. Again, if the tissue surrounding the veins is not healthy, the veins may not have proper support, and as a result, they become distended.

Long standing, which causes the blood to stagnate in the lower part of the body, predisposes to the occurrence of varicose veins, as does also overweight, which calls for extra force to circulate the blood through the excessive amount of tissue.

In order to prevent varicose veins, normal weight should be maintained. The muscles of the body should, by regular exercise, be kept in good condition to support the veins. Those who are required to stand for long hours may be helped by lying down each evening and having their legs gently massaged from the feet to the hips.

Constipation is the most common cause of varicose veins of the rectum, which are called haemorrhoids or piles. Prevention of these lies in the avoidance of constipation through proper toilet habits, diet and exercise. Constipation cannot be corrected by cathartics; in fact, the cathartic habit is one of the most frequent causes of constipation, and so leads to haemorrhoids.

It is much easier and more satisfactory to prevent varicose veins than it is to cure them. Once the condition has developed, relief may be secured through proper treatment, but in all cases, the cause of the condition must be removed or a relapse will occur.

Keep the muscles healthy and the weight normal, and avoid constipation if you would escape varicose veins.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Presentation to Mr. and Mrs. Doerr

A very pleasing event took place in the Erindale Community Hall on Thursday evening, August 27th, 1931.

Mr. and Mrs. Doerr have for many years made their home at Erindale and their many friends assembled to bid them farewell before their departure for Windsor. Mrs Doerr is the valued president of the Women's Institute and also a past secretary. Mr. Doerr has always been ready to assist in any way the progress of the community, and was especially valuable to the Young Men's "Baseball team". So the institute and the community united to give them a pleasant evening.

The Rev. H. V. Thompson, in his usual genial way, acted as chairman and expressed how sorry the neighbourhood were to lose Mr. and Mrs. Doerr. Mr. Gerhart, of Streetsville, also spoke, as did also Mr. Bruce both gentlemen stating the high esteem which Mr. and Mrs. Doerr occupied in the opinion of their many friends. The musical part of the program was given by Miss Margaret Jones, Miss G. Croxton, Miss Annie O'Brien and Mr. Clem Boegel, who sang so acceptably and delighted the audience. Mrs. A. Adamson and Miss Dorothy Adamson acted as accompanist. Mr. and Mrs. Doerr were called to the platform and Mrs. Cooper read an address and Mrs. Conover presented them with a handsome floor-lamp. This was the gift of the Community. Mrs. Hammond, on behalf of the Institute, presented Mrs. Doerr with a handsome hand-bag and Mr. Alex O'Brien presented Mr. Doerr with a walnut smoking set. Mr. and Mrs. Doerr made a most suitable reply and invited all their friends, should they ever come to Windsor, to look them up and they would be most pleased to see them.

Every person joined heartily in singing "For They are Jolly Good Fellows", after which the ladies served refreshments and a social time was spent during the remainder of the evening. The following is the address which was read to Mr. and Mrs. Doerr.

THE ADDRESS

Dear Mr. and Mr. and Mrs. Doerr:—

For several years past you have been one of our Community and in that time have made friends of us all. It was with deep regret that we learned you were about to leave our midst; but we feel sure you will find pleasant associates in your new surroundings. Although we shall miss you greatly in the future, we are certainly richer for your association of the past. You will always have a warm spot in our hearts and affections and a welcome here at any time in the future that you may be able to visit us or again dwell in our midst.

It has always been a pleasure to have you in all our activities and although these happy occasions will be fewer in the future, we certainly hope that you may be able to join us from time to time, renew old acquaintances and spread a little sunshine our way. Those of us who were the more fortunate in having you as near neighbours, certainly appreciate your cheery dispositions, pleasing personality and willing co-operative spirit, manifest in the years just past, and will in great measure feel the loss of your absence.

You have always willingly co-operated in our Community undertakings, have been good friends and neighbours, with whom we were proud to be associated, and those of us who knew you best will miss you most.

We would ask you as a small token of our esteem and good wishes for the future to accept this floor lamp. In presenting it we hope to convey in a small but tangible way our appreciation of you, that you may remember your many friends of this Community.

May it be of use to you is our earnest wish.

On behalf of your friends of this Community many of whom are assembled here.

Very sincerely yours,

S. A. COOPER

WHAT NEXT!

Hamilton, Aug. 31.—R. D. Stott, an official of the Big Brothers Association, was informed today of a case in which Stephen Addis, young son of W. Addis, 135 Breadalbane Street, last week was seized by other boys of the neighborhood and trussed in an empty tea-chest, which was set on fire. The child was rescued by his parents before he was burned, as the wood of the chest was damp, and this prevented it from blazing rapidly. Mr. Stott said the outrage was inspired by a childish prank, but it was an exceedingly dangerous one, he stated. No prosecution is likely to follow in the Juvenile Court, as the boys who subjected the child to such an ordeal have been severely lectured.

BRAMPTON

Excelsiors, Dominion champions of 1930, and again seeking the right to retain the Mann Cup, emblematic of the Canadian championship for 1931, were tendered a great reception on their return from Toronto on Saturday, where they had successfully eliminated Montreal A.A.A. by a score of 6 to 2. Upon word of their victory members of the council quickly organized a royal welcome home and the team were met by the Peel and Dufferin Regiment band.

While motoring to Toronto for the game Saturday, Oliver Carey, fielder of the lacrosse champions, met with an accident, when his car was ditched. Mrs. Carey was cut and bruised, but Carey escaped without any injury and was able to play. The accident happened in Cooksville on the Dundas highway.

Rev. C. A. Simpson, superannuated minister of the Methodist church, celebrated his ninetieth birthday on Saturday. Rev. Mr. Simpson has been a resident of this town since he retired from the ministry in 1903, and has often occupied the pulpit of Grace United church here in the absence of the regular pastor. He was born in Thurlow township and when a youth travelled on the lakes as a ship's hand, later attaining a first officer's certificate. To his seasoning at this occupation, he gives credit for his present good health. He has always been a great advocate of temperance. Mr. Simpson as a Methodist minister has preached at Omemee, Clark, Colborne, Darlington, Willowdale, Brampton West, Cooksville, Cookstown and Inglewood. A three-story cake, illuminated by ninety candles occupied the centre of the table at the birthday party Saturday, at which his immediate relatives were present.

Fair Grants To be Cut

Hon. Thomas L. Kennedy is serving an ultimatum upon the Fall Fair Associations in Ontario that unless they discontinue their practice of looking chiefly to Queen's Park for financial assistance, the usual Government grants will not be forthcoming in 1932. He is convinced that many fairs show too little pride in themselves, that they would sooner ask the Government for help than their own municipalities. Consequently he is taking steps to alter that attitude. This year the usual grants will be made, but next year the Government will give a fair no more money than the fair's municipality gives. On the present basis of contribution, several fairs at least would have to suspend operations. The Government contributes between $80,000 and $100,000 a season in supporting these fairs. Under the new policy a considerable part of the expenditure will be saved, which is in line with the general policy of retrenchment in the department.

AND JUST LOOK AT THIS

Samuel Lampel, Euphemia street, well-known local junk dealer and police court interpreter, who has helped many an applicant from Russia and the Slavic countries of Europe to obtain naturalization papers, was laughing heartily over an experience of a fellow-countryman of his, who went to get his citizenship papers in the United States. This is what happened:

Born? Yes, sir.
Where? Russia.
Why did you leave Russia? Because I could not take it with me.
Where were your forefathers born? I only had one father.
Your business? Rotten.
Where is Washington? He is dead.
Do you promise to support the U. S. A.? How could I do that with a wife and three children?
What state are you in now? Terrible.
If the president and vice-president died, who would be in charge? The undertakers.
Who discovered America? Columbus.
Where is he now? In Ohio.
Where was the declaration of independence signed? At the bottom.
Were you ever convicted of a crime? No, I always had a good lawyer.
Do you know why the hand of the statue of liberty is 11 inches long? Yes, because if it were 12 it would be a foot.—Wiarton Echo.

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS

Don Ellsworth's wife, formerly the actress, Sheila O'Shay, disappears, leaving no trace. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, learns that their married life has been very unhappy.

An unidentified body is found in the tule marsh outside the city. It has been burned by a fire in the mash until it is entirely unrecognizable except for the fact that it is a woman. Dr. Cavanaugh is called in to help with the identification. He has only a small piece of scalp from the body to work on. Don Ellsworth refuses to give him a hair of Sheila O'Shay but he secures one unknown, and tells Peter Piper, a Herald reporter, that that body found in the marsh is that of Sheila O'Shay. Barbara Cavanaugh, who was engaged to Ellsworth before his marriage, and in whom Peter Piper is interested, faints when she hears this. Peter, who is half in love with her, is suspicious that she knows something about the murder.

CHAPTER XIX.

"Suspect Held in Tule Murder."

The "banner line" in heavy black type that streamed across eight columns at the top of the first page caught Peter's eye as the copy boy flung the city edition across his typewriter.

Something in the pit of his stomach seemed to perform a sickening flip-flop—the same feeling which always seized him when a rapidly rising elevator jerked to a stop. The reaction was instantaneous and unreasonable. It could not possibly be—

He snatched the paper from the desk and sank slowly into his chair, his eyes leaping from line to line of the brief story which announced that Mrs. Nellie Kane, former dresser and maid of Mrs. Don Ellsworthy (Sheila O'Shay) was lodged in the city jail.

"No charges have been placed against the woman, according to Captain of Inspectors L. B. Davis, but it is alleged that she is suspected of holding important information which she has declined to divulge and which, in the opinion of the police, may have a bearing on the case."

"Thank God!" breathed Peter. And added: "Idiot!"

He was ashamed of his own relief—a relief which left him light hearted to the pitch of giddiness. Had he lost all sense of proportion, of probability? He decided, ruefully, that he evidently had. But his absurd buoyancy, as if a heavy rock had come hurtling down in the direction of his head and had then miraculously missed him, persisted.

"Because she's old and poor and probably dowdy, they call her 'the woman'," he mused with a sardonic smile. "If she'd been young and belonged in the fur coat class she'd have been 'Mrs. Kane' throughout. Lord, what snobs these mortals be!"

"Mrs. Ellsworth, whose disappearance on the eighteenth of last month—" There followed a resume of the case, which Peter scanned anxiously. The name of Barbara Cavanaugh was not mentioned.

"Of course it wouldn't be—it couldn't be, without me," he reminded himself. "I'm going positively cuckoo. I ought to be psyched. And by jimmy, the old bird pretty nearly did it, just by the way he looked at me." Thus disrespectfully did Peter refer to one of the foremost psychiatrists of the United States.

"Piper!" The voice of the city editor blared, like the blast of a trumpet considerably off key.

At the sound, Peter was his alert nonchalant, lounging self again.

"Present or accounted for," he grinned, as he strolled over to the city desk.

"I want you to get an interview with this Kane woman. Get her picture if you can. You can take a camera man with you, but you'd better leave him outside. Davis may balk, but see what you can do with him. They've nothing on her, I understand, but they ran her in last night. Probably thought jail would scare her into coming through. Anyway, stick around and see what you can pick up."

Peter ran his long fingers through the hair which promptly sprang up again from its center part in an incorrigible cowlick.

"Cheerio!" he said gaily. "In other words you betcha."

The city editor had already seized the desk telephone and jerked it towards him, but he turned to survey Peter.

"Don't play hopscotch on the way," he admonished. "The cops might get you."

But Peter was already on his way to the locker room for his hat, whistling dolefully.

"Temperamental kid!" Jimmy growled. "Low as the seventh circle yesterday, and now he's ready to kick the moon. Talk about prima donnas! But a damn good newspaper man at that. Lord, the better they are, the worse they are. Andy!" he bawled after this brief period of reflection. "Get busy on that annulment cast. Nine o'clock in Judge Wood's court. And get a picture of the mother and baby."

The tumult of the local room was in full swing as Peter banged the door behind him.

"Whatever Mrs. Kane knew had nothing to do with Barbara. If the old lady really knew something—get it? You bet he'd get it! If that dame knew something that would let Barbara out—Peter's enthusiasm for Mrs. Kane would have astonished that somewhat unprepossessing person beyond measure if she had been aware of it. It mounted so rapidly that by the time he reached the steps of the city hall, he was almost running, leaving the camera man, dragging his black box and tripod to pant along behind him.

Captain Davis, however, was unresponsive to Peter's carefully veiled eagerness.

"Nothing doing," he said decisively, as Peter leaned over the edge of his roll-top desk. "Wait till she's charged—if she ever is."

"Maybe if I talked to her, she'd let something slip," Peter suggested.

"No chance," Davis reiterated. 'Our men have been talking to her all night. She's about as likely to slip as the rock of Gibraltar."

"Do you mind telling me—not for publication—what you've got?"

"I don't mind telling you that we've got nothing at all. But that's not saying that there's nothing to get. She knows more than she's telling, that's certain; and we've got to sweat it out of her. So far," the Captain of inspectors smiled grimly "our men have been doing most of the sweating. I guess you'll just have to wait, Peter. Cavanaugh's going to have a try at her this morning. I don't think much of these new fangled psychological methods myself. But there's no denying the old bird has a way with him. Camberwell got him in on the case in the first place, and persuaded him to follow it through. They're two cranks together, and thick as thieves. But I should worry, if they deliver the goods."

Captain Davis was well accustomed to the persistence of reporters; moreover, though he had learned to hold firm against that persistence, he was not averse to a little chat with Peter. Somewhat to his surprise, however, Peter hunched himself upright and showed no inclination to linger in the captain's office; nor was there any sign of disappointment visible on his mobile countenance.

"Well, see you later," he remarked with a fine casualness, as he drifted out into the hallway.

He did not, however, leave the city hall. Instead, he leaned against one of the pillars at the side of the entrance door, looking very much like a young man with nothing to do and all day for doing it. Yet Peter had a strong hunch that he had never earned his pay envelope more assuredly than by the wasting of that hour.

At last his vigil was rewarded, after a period in which an elevator man, a uniformed policeman from the traffic bureau, and two reporters from the press room had variously commented on his low, breathy, and monotonous minor whistle as something to be taken to the morgue, to be the equivalent of an injured cat and a banshee, and to be deserving of ninety days in the "cooler."

That whistle lapsed abruptly into silence as a tall figure mounted the steps before him.

"Good morning, Dr. Cavanaugh," Peter extended his hand with the engaging smile of a small boy hoping for a peppermint. "I hope you remember me?"

CHAPTER XX.

"You are the young man who gets—and forgets—his stories. I begin to regard you as a suspicious character. What do you want this time?" The doctor's smile took the sting from his words, as it had a way of doing.

"You're right—both ways." Peter was unabashed. "I've got to get a story and I do want something from you. I'd like to go with you when you interview Mrs. Kane. I want to get a light on her personality. As to what she says, I won't use anything without your permission, of course."

"Several other persons share your desire for light," Dr. Cavanaugh observed, "but I understand that so far it hasn't been gratified. Why don't you get your interview direct?" he added crisply.

"Because Captain Davis won't let me. But, of course, if I went with you, there'd be nothing said."

"That's the second time you've told me the truth when subterfuge would have seemed easy and more profitable. I almost suspect it's a habit with you." Dr. Cavanaugh's deliberate, unemphatic voice was almost a drawl. "Well, young man, you've flattered one of my weaknesses. I had sufficient curiosity to read your story. If anybody tells you that he never reads what's written about him you may put him down as a liar or a colossal egotist who thinks that God alone is qualified to have an opinion on him—besides himself. And you didn't once call me a criminologist. Perhaps a scientific training makes pedants of us all. I confess to a twinge of resentment whenever I am called a criminologist."

"Sheer luck," said the grinning Peter.

"Call it luck or inspired accuracy. Anyway, I'll admit I liked it. You see, I never disguise myself or my purpose. I lay all my cards on the table—and let the other fellow play them. I'm not even interested in catching criminals, as such, though I'm interested in understanding my fellow human beings. This little hobby of identification merely helps sometimes to locate the subject whose mental processes interest me. I suppose," he went on, without change of tone, "since I've inflicted all this explanation on you the least I can do is to let you come along."

"Whoop-ee!" crowed Peter.

LIFE

If I have helped some struggling man to master
His baser self. A nobler life attain,
If by my love, some heart has beaten faster—
I have not lived in vain.

If I have sown the seeds of peace and gladness,
If I have caused sad lips to smile again.
If I have eased some other's ache and sadness—
I have not lived in vain.

If I have made one weary life the brighter,
If I have eased another's toil and pain,
If I have made some comrade's burden lighter—
I have not lived in vain.

Elms of Berlin Doomed

Berlin.—Elms in the parks and streets of Berlin appear to be doomed to extinction, the plant pathologists of the park department apparently having abandoned as hopeless their long fight to check the disease that is destroying the trees.

The elms are being killed by a minute fungus carried by a small beetle that deposits its eggs on the bark. A method of treating the elms by inoculation, worked out at the Dahlem Institute of Plant Biology, proved as fruitless as previous remedies.

Not only Berlin but all of central Europe is in danger of losing its elms from the disease which began its ravages in Holland ten years ago and spread rapidly eastward, completely baffling all efforts to arrest it.

If the elms in affected regions are to survive it can only be through some saving process of nature or the discovery of a new remedy. At a recent session of the German Botanical Association it was said that remedies hitherto tried had proved wholly useless.

What New York Is Wearing

BY ANNEBELLE WORTHINGTON

Illustrated Dressmaking Lesson Furnished With Every Pattern

When you study this smart model, you'll see it's really very slenderizing.

It's full of charm and so thoroughly wearable.

To be certain, it has the best known slimming features—the deep V-front that reaches to the waistline. Then there's the softly falling jabot revers that detract so beautifully from breadth.

The hip yoke of the circular skirt is the smartest depth to give the matronly figure slenderness.

There are many lovely materials that adapt themselves admirably to this model. Crepe silk print in brown and white with plain white crepe as sketched is extremely chic.

Navy blue crepe silk in combination with white is smart, as is black crepe with white.

For resort, shantung, pastel flat washable crepe silk, linen, batiste prints and printed chiffon voile are ideal selections.

Style No. 2859 may be had in sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46 inches bust. Size 36 requires 3¾ yards of 39-inch material with ¾ yard of 39-inch contrasting.

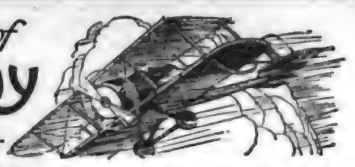
Contrarieties

Immortality

Forgotten now her fragile golden beauty,
The tilt of her proud chin;
Her quick bright words, her elfish, wistful laughter;
Her dreams of lovely things that might have been.
But not a one has ever yet forgotten
Her one small sin.

—Jewell Bothwell Tull, in Poetry.



John Barrymore delights in putting interviewers in their place by making them "Mister" him. A certain New York feature writer had been warned about "Jawn" and his pet method so when he got to him (Mr. Barrymore having finished his 10 o'clock breakfast) he asked, "Are you John Barrymore?" The profile turned and haughtily replied, "No, I am MISTER John Barrymore." "That's fine," came the crushing reply, "I was afraid you might be Miss Ethel!"

Not a Sea Monster

Man vies with the odd denizens of the oceans. Here we see an odd-looking machine of steel and glass which will soon be launched on an under water search for sunken treasure.

The ADVENTURES of CAPTAIN JIMMY and his Dog SCOTTIE

What came before: Late one afternoon, while on board the freighter Madrigal in the Chinese Sea, Captain Jimmy and his friends sight a bandit ship firing on a little vessel. They take off to the rescue in their plane.

After some difficulty we lowered the plane into the sea and heading into the wind, took off. The motor sputtered and missed at first—then it opened out into a deep, satisfying roar and drove the plane at a terrific speed towards the scene of battle. There was not a moment to lose.

As we drew nearer, through the twilight, we could plainly see the flash from the guns of the Pirate Junk. I gave our plane every bit of gas I could and she roared down toward the scene of battle at a tremendous rate.

Suddenly the firing seemed to case. A lucky shot must have crippled the ship they were pursuing. Quarter of a mile away and we nosed down to get a better view of what was taking place.

A little ship lay over with a heavy list to starboard, evidently leaking from a shot below the water line. A large Chinese junk was tied behind and a boarding party of pirates swarmed all over the captured vessel. The passengers ran here and there, looking for shelter. Then as we came near we could see a number of figures bound to the rail—evidently white men and ship officers.

As we passed overhead, the pirates greeted us with a volley but they were not used to firing at a speeding plane and their shots went wide.

We swept past the boats at about one hundred and ten miles an hour. The Chinese Junk was our target and how we longed for a few nice hand grenades or a machine gun! Still, we had the shot gun and plenty of buckshot shells. We could make it hot for those pirates.

About half a mile away, I turned to the attack again. Suddenly I swooped until it seemed as if we would scrape the decks as we passed. Every bit of engine power forced us out of the sky. Our speed was tremendous. It must have been a fearful sight to see a plane making such speed straight at one. In the bow of the Junk stood a group of pirates — petrified. Then, Bang! Bang! roared the heavy shot gun, and the pirates raced for cover, but several seemed to stumble and lay quite still.

A few stray shots screeched by, fired by the more courageous of the pirates who dared show themselves above decks. Meanwhile, my gunner loaded up his heavy artillery ready for his next attack. Again we swooped and raked the decks with buckshot but this time the pirates had seen enough of us. Someone cut the junk loose and the pirates rushed back and crowded on full sail. Now was our chance.

Circling around to gain altitude, we suddenly dived straight for the pirate's wheel deck, banging away with our old shotguns. The helmsman of the junk had all he could do, at best, to hold the ship in her course, for a brisk wind had suddenly sprung up and she leaned heavily to one side.

Then, looking up, he caught sight of us hovering above him like a great bird of prey, just as a charge of buckshot rattled around him on the decks. With a yell, he let go the wheel and fled and the next moment a strong gust of wind keeled the junk over on her side.

Color in the Wheat Fields

All the summer through fresh beauties, indeed, wait upon the owner's footsteps. In the spring the mowing-grass rises thick, strong, and richly green, or hidden by the cloth-of-gold thrown over it by the buttercups. He knows when it is ready for the scythe without reference to the almanac, because of the brown tint which spreads over it from the ripening seeds, sometimes tinged with a dull red, when the stems of the sorrel are plentiful. At first the aftermath has a trace of yellow, as if it were fading; but a shower falls, and fresh green blades shoot up. Or, passing from the hollow meads up on the rising slopes where the plough rules the earth, what so beautiful to watch as the wheat through its various phases of color?

First green and succulent; then, presently, see a modest ear comes forth with promise of the future. By-and-by, when every stalk is tipped like a sceptre, the lower stalk leaves are still green, but the stems have a faint bluish tinge, and the ears are paling into yellow. Next the white pollen—the loom—shows under the warm sunshine, and then the birds begin to grow busy among it. They perch on the stalk itself—it is at that time strong and stiff enough to uphold their weight, one on a stem—but not now for mischief. You may see the sparrow carry away with him caterpillars for his young upon the housetop hard by; later on, it is true, he will revel on the ripe grains.

Yesterday you came to the wheat and found it pale like this (it seems but twenty-four hours ago—it is really only a little longer); to-day, when you look again, lo! there is a fleeting yellow already on the ears. They have so quickly caught the hue of the bright sunshine pouring on them. Yet another day or two, and the faint fleeting yellow has become fixed and certain, as the colors are deepened by the great artist. Only when the wind blows and the ears bend in those places where the breeze takes most, it looks paler because the under part of the ear is shown and part of the stalk. Finally comes that rich hue for which no exact similitude exists.

In it there is somewhat of the red of the orange, somewhat of the tint of bronze, and somewhat of the hue of maize; but these are poor words wherewith to render fixed a color that plays over the surface of this yellow sea, for if you take one, two, or a dozen ears you shall not find it, but must look abroad, and let your gaze travel to and fro. Nor is every field alike; here are acres and acres more yellow, yonder a space whiter, beyond yet a slope richly ruddy, according to the kind of seed that was sown. Out of the depths of what to it must seem an impenetrable jungle, from visiting a flower hidden below, a bumble-bee climbs rapidly up a stalk a yard of two-away, while you look, and mounting the top of the ear, as a post of vantage clear of obstructions, sails away upon the wind.—Richard Jeffries in "An English Village."

Helping Hand

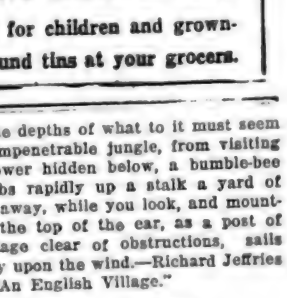
When her young man visitor became very plainly embarrassed, she thought she knew the cause.

"Er—Miss Johnson," he said, feverishly, "could I—er—see your father for a moment?"

"Certainly, Mr. Clarke!"—and, excusing herself, she left the room.

Presently her father came in, and after a short conversation with the young man he stepped to the door and summoned his daughter.

"It is getting late,' 'said Mr. Clarke, whose face was radiant, "and, as I have a long ride before me, I think I will say 'Good night.' Shall I find you at home on Wednesday evening, Miss Johnson?"



The girl assured him that he would, and the young man took his departure.

"Oh, papa!" began the girl, when they were alone, "did he——"

"You must not ask questions," said the old man. "Mr. Clarke wished to see about a matter which for the present must remain a secret."

"I know," pleaded the girl, "but you might give me a hint of what it was—just a word."

"Oh, well," replied her father, indulgently, "since you must know, he wanted to borrow a shilling to get home with."

He (an author)—"I'm troubled with insomnia. I lie awake at night, hour after hour, thinking about my literary work."

She—"Well, why don't you get up and read portions of it?"

By MARGE ANN BEST

The man that hath no tmusic in his soul is fit for treasons, stratagems and spoils.—Shakespeare.

Sound Waves

Why not learn to be responsive to music? Its chords truly touch a cord in the human soul nothing else can reach.

Sound, the source of music, we can imagine first rumbled through countless years of chaos echoing through the rushing waters, the bursting of the volcano, the eternal beating of the winds on land or sea as the primeval elements were let loose. Then it was heard in the cry of the wild beast, the song of the bird, the music of the human voice, and from it all came rythm, melody and harmony until the soul of music had its birth down here below on this old earth. Then great masters came one by one and sang insistently into humanity's faintly understanding ears and brought from the spiritual world the poetry of sound until now on every side we harken with a more and more apprehensive ear the ever swelling chorus as each new master leaves us his life work.

In these days we hear the radio everywhere. It throws out its music of all grades. Much of it is good, more is very mediocre and superficially everyone enjoys it whether they understand good music or not. We grant the instrument is a great boon to the world and very wonderful, but to know and receive the highest enjoyment from real music we must study it ourselves right from the very first primitive exercises of a, b, c, d, e, f, g, on up through years of learning. The reward is boundless, for the goodness of music dwells in a world of limitless dimensions and the more we study the more she shows us her own possibilities when we try to interpret the works of her gifted children such as Beethoven, Schubert and Bach, all down the line of her great family, and as we develop she sings us through sickness, trials, troubles, sorrows, through joy and pleasure.

If you have had the opportunity of acquiring a musical education do not deprive your child of the similar enjoyment of becoming intelligently appreciative of music if it is at all possible. The growing girl or boy fortunate in having parents who insist on his receiving that training often only fully appreciates the great pleasure which comes from such knowledge when maturity is reached, because the hand of discipline seemed heavy at times as it guided over the difficult places during the early years of study. He is repaid a thousand fold when he is able to produce harmonies for himself as he intimately unfolds the composer's thought. Fortunate indeed is the child who in his early years has learned the rudiments of music.

Twilight Hour Story
Chicks and Other Furry Friends
No. 34

"Mamma, come out and just see the fine place daddy said we could have for the chicks," exclaimed Billy enthusiastically.

"All right, dear, in a minute. I want to finish this bit of work first."

"Could I help you, mummy, so you can come out soon and see it?"

"Why, yes. Little boys can always help mothers,' 'she said, smiling. "It will help me if you bring me a pail of water."

So off Billy ran to get the water, then very soon he and mamma lady went out to see the little room.

"Daddy told me before he went out to plow that I could fix it up any way I liked."

"And what is it you are going to do, dear?" she said as she looked around. "It will certainly be a nice airy room for them and perhaps now that Daddy is not so very busy he might help you to fix the window so you can open and shut it easily yourself."

Daddy did help Billy the very next day. It was great fun to work with him and the hammer and saw could be heard as they fixed the big window. Then they made some whitewash and covered the walls so that it looked as though it had all been painted white, only it smelled much nicer than paint. Did you ever see or smell whitewash? Billy just loved to dip his big brush in the pail full of thick white cream and then slather it over the wall, all smooth and nice. I tell you it was great fun. Then they cleaned the floor with a broom and a pail of water in which Daddy put some disinfectant to kill any bugs that might be around. After that they opened a window to let in the air and the sunshine and left it like that for two days to dry out, because, you know, chicken houses must always be very dry so the chickens won't catch cold. Now isn't it queer chickens like cold weather when they have all their feathers? In fact, it doesn't matter how cold it is, but they don't like the least bit of wet in their houses. Well, I guess we wouldn't like damp rooms either.

In two days they went in to see how it looked, and Billy thought it was so nice that he said: "It's so bright and clean out here I'd like to sleep here, wouldn't you, Mamma?"

"But how about the chickens. They are getting so impatient in their box, I believe they know some other place is being fixed up for them," said Mamma Lady.

"Oh, yes, of course, it's their house," apologized Billy. "Let's put them in this morning. What must we do now, mother?"

"First of all you better fill that big box in the corner with sand. Then put a lot of fresh straw all over the floor, nice and thick. You can do that while I fix up their water dish, the feed box and the box for grit and stone. Why, this is real fun Billy boy," said Mamma Lady gaily.

"I just love doing it. Do you know, Mamma Lady, I am going to be a farmer when I'm a man."

Mamma lady laughed. "How about the time you said you were going to be a baker when you were helping to take the warm, spicy cookies out of the oven? You can't be both very well."

Billy scratched his head and thought awhile. "Oh—I don't know what I want to do. I guess I'll be a farmer, for right now, anyway."

Feather Trimmings Feature of Autumn Millinery

New York.—Feather trimmings are stressed on fall hats. Whether the model be one inspired by the ambition our Empress Eugenie or a derby, sailor that hat must have a feather.

The much talked of Rembrandt crown has a bright-colored contrasting feather stuck through it. The less dressy and modified cloche, with a soft brim, has a side ornament of feathers. A pretty gesture is the lifting of brims at the back, where clusters of tiny ostrich tips nestle.

Birds, mercury wings, tail feathers of barnyard fowl and ostrich plumes vie with each other as popular hat trimmings. Bi-color effects are favored, as in black wings tipped with red, orange or green.

"How's the climate out your way?"

"Well," replied the farmer, "it does well enough for summer boarder purposes. It looks nice and cool on a picture-card."

Currents of hot air produced by a motor are a novel substitute for towels in use in one Paris railway station. The hot air dries the hands in a few seconds.

Sunday School Lesson

September 6. Lesson X—Turning to the Gentiles—Acts 13: 42-52; Romans 1: 14-16. Golden Text—I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldest be for salvation unto the ends of the earth.—Acts 13: 47.

I. PAUL'S SERMON IN ANTIOCH, Acts 13: 14-41.

II. REJECTED BY JEWS, Acts 13: 42-47.

III. RECEIVED BY GENTILES, Acts 13: 48-52.

IV. EVERYMAN'S GOSPEL, Romans 1: 14-16.

INTRODUCTION—Paul and his companions sailed from Paphos to Perga, the capital of Pamphylia. There they evidently changed their plans. Instead of preaching in Perga, they decided to make their way to the interior. This expansion of the work was too much for John Mark's Jewish soul. He booked his passage back home, v. 13.

I. PAUL'S SERMON IN ANTIOCH, Acts 13: 14-41.

Climbing the rugged sides of Taurus "in perils of waters, in perils of robbers" (2 Cor. 11: 26) they traveled the hundred miles from Perga up to "Pisidian Antioch," v. 14. The latter was so named because it bordered on Pisidia, and also to distinguish it from other Antiochs. Here the party was delayed. Paul was taken ill. Writing to the Galatian churches afterward, he reminded them, "Ye know how through infirmity of the flesh I preached the gospel to you at the first," Gal. 4: 13. It was probably one of the frequently recurring attacks of his "thorn in the flesh" (2 Cor. 12: 7, 8), which, as Professor Ramsay suggests, may have been malarial fever.

Attending the synagogue service, the visitors were asked to speak, v. 15. Paul's address was short and diplomatic. Perhaps he remembered Stephen's long and not too tactful sermon. Beginning with an outline of Hebrew history—which Jews never tired of hearing—he concluded with the story of Jesus, whom, he said, was the Promised One. In his love and humility Paul associated himself with his hearers, Jew and Gentile. "To us is the word of this salvation sent," v. 26. "You," in the Authorized Version, should be "us." "Those in Jerusalem," Jew and Gentiles, had rejected it. Hence it had now come to those outside.

II. REJECTED BY JEWS, Acts 13: 42-47.

Paul's message was the talk of the town. Next Sabbath the regular pewholders found themselves crowded out by "those dogs of Gentiles." Exclusive congregations resent crowds. Popular preachers are sometimes the objects of jealousy. So it was in Antioch. The Jews began to contradict Paul, and blasphemed, this is, cursed Christ. No doubt they contended that "every one that hangeth on a tree is accursed"; Gal. 3: 13. The situation was critical. Paul turned on them. So did the gentle Barnabas. The apostles saw that the moment had come when they must choose between Jew and Gentile. Was there a sob in Paul's voice as he said, "Well, here we turn to the Gentiles"?

III. RECEIVED BY GENTILES, Acts 13: 48-52.

In contrast with the miserable attitude of the Jews was the glad welcome of the Gentiles. They received the gospel enthusiastically. "As many as were ordained to eternal life, believed," v. 49. Were they fore-ordained to eternal life in any case—apart from their own will or desire? No. The Greek word which is translated "ordain" means "to set in order," "to marshall," "to dispose." It was originally a military term. Troops were "marshalled," "stationed at their post." Romans 13: 1 would then read, "the powers that be are stationed at their post" by God. Verse 49, then, should read, "as many as had marshalled themselves on the side of, were disposed to, eternal life believed!" It is God's will that all should be saved. All are called. But we have the power to accept or reject. Our salvation depends ultimately upon our own attitude.

IV. EVERYMAN'S GOSPEL, Romans 1: 14-16.

Paul's joy at finding Christ, or rather, at being found by Christ, resulted in a passion for sharing him with others. Missionary zeal in a Christian is not a duty added on, it is an inner compulsion. One simply must spread good news. Racial and national distinctions disappear when one remembers that Jesus died for every one, Rom. 1: 14.

Paul must have seen the first sinister signs of that Gentile hatred which in many a city chases a little Jewish boy down the street with the yell, "Christ-killer," ringing behind him. A Jewish lawyer recently said, "It (prejudice against Jews) exists because the world remembers our people, not as the nation that produced Jesus, but the nation that killed him." The Christians must begin to look upon the Jew as "brother."

Scotch Drizzle

There is no wind, so the soft caressing rain sways to and fro over the landscape like smoke—thin, fine and veil-like. It settles on all around, turning the leafless hedges into graceful silvery forms. It hangs in clear crystal globules from every tiny branch—in uncertain drops like pearls from a dark pendant. It clothes the grass with a sparkling sheen, rests lightly on the brown upturned earth, and seeps through the trees upon the golden leafy mold beneath. It brushes the trees on the height with a feathery tone of gray, so that they melt into one another with a delicious indefiniteness. It speaks quietly to, and pats gently, the flat leaves of the rhododendron bushes and they accept its ministrations with gratitude, while cupping its freshness on their broad capacious palms. The bridge over the wide dark river is black and glossy with wetness, the road gray and polished. There is satiny softness in the air and a benign quietness resting over all, like a benediction. Even the hills lose their rugged aspect and assume a gracious roundedness; the river ceases from troubling, under the pacific influence, to burble contentedly along between dark green banks. There is the faintest of swishing sounds in the air, so faint that only those attuned can hear—a restless moving, indefinable and unreachable, as if the earth, while lifting its brown scorched face to the sky, were steadily acknowledging and appraising this gentle influx of moisture.—Writer in Christian Science Monitor.

How to Select Potatoes for Chips

Specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture have devised a simple method for selecting storage potatoes which will make good chips or French fries. A test for the soluble sugars in potatoes is the key that unlocks the secret of their culinary qualities, since an excessive amount of these sugars produces a discoloration in French fries and chips and a sweetness in baked or boiled potatoes that is distasteful to some persons.

Potatoes stored at temperatures ranging from 33 degrees to 45 degrees F. accumulate certain soluble sugars as a result of the breakdown of starch. In general, the lower the storage temperature the greater the amount of soluble sugars and the darker the color of the chips.

To make the test, a sample from the centre of the potato is placed in a yellow solution of picric acid and sodium carbonate in a small test tube and heated over the flame of an alcohol lamp until it boils for one-half minute. Samples from potatoes that have not been stored at too low temperatures change the color of the solution to an orange yellow, but the excessive amount of sugars in tubers stored at low temperatures changes the color to a deep red or brown.

This test has proved satisfactory in selecting potatoes for chip making, French frying, baking, and under certain conditions, for boiling. It was designed especially for chip manufacturers, who must have potatoes with a low content of soluble sugars. The test is so simple, since it involves a small portable outfit, that it can be used by buyers for hotels and restaurants where there is a demand for high-grade, mealy-cooked potatoes, free from a sweetish taste and discoloration.

"A fish ate the bait right off my hook this morning."

"Cheer up. He'll be all the bigger when you do catch him."

Black Forest Famed For Cuckoo Clocks

Few products of industry have found their way into so many corners of the world as the Black Forest cuckoo clocks, according to the tourist information office of the German National Railways. Plain clockmaking is, of course, much older in the Black Forest. About 1720 Anton Ketterer of Schoenwald is recorded as having for the first time added two tiny bellows to the works of the then well-known Black Forest wooden clocks. These tiny bellows produced the flutelike cry of the cuckoo.

"While the cuckoo clock is a specific Black Forest product," the information office continues, "clockmaking in that region dates back almost a hundred years more, into the time of the Thirty Years War. The first timepieces were naturally very simple in material and construction.

"They were made entirely of wood, the material so abundantly furnished by the forests, from which the clockmaker carved out by hand the cog-wheels, levers, hands and dials. A stone served as weight and the regulator was a small wooden horizontal beam equipped with small weights which could be moved to accelerate or retard the works.

"An old house on the Roedeck near Waldau bears a memorial tablet with the inscription:

"'In this house, the so-called Glashof at Waldau, the Kreutze brothers constructed about 1640 the first Black Forest clock.'

"The skill and inventive spirit of the Black Forest clockmakers soon made it possible to increase their production by simplifying and mechanizing the methods of manufacture. An important step in this development was the invention, shortly before the beginning of the eighteenth century, by Matthias Loffler of Gutenbach of a device for producing cogwheels in a semi-mechanical manner. At about the same time wood was abandoned as a material in favor of brass, which made possible both an increased production and more precise clocks.

"The joy in handwork and in making toys which is inborn in the inhabitants of the Black Forest has, since the invention of the cuckoo clock, resulted in a great variety of ingenious mechanical clocks which also helped to spread the products of this industry all over the world."

Boys Transform Dump Into Beauty Spot

Chester, Mass.—Fifty boys turned a blot into a beauty spot in this town when they volunteered their services to aid a roadside stand proprietor improve the appearance of his property, writes a correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor. The boys cleaned up a section near the stand, long used for a public dump, then they built a dam and established a swimming hole in the Westeld River near by. Woodland across the road was cleaned and converted into a picnic grove and the establishment is now a pleasant roadside attraction.

School Fairs Now in Order

Cooksville School Fair Set for Sept. 17th

There are ninety classes in the prize list this year, some interesting changes having been made.

At Cooksville School Fair a "Fruit and Vegetable Naming Contest", and at the five other School Fairs a "Breeds of Livestock Naming Contest" will be held, open to boys and girls.

The Inter-School Judging of Poultry open to teams of two boys is something new. Col. The Hon. T. L. Kennedy, Minister of Agriculture, has donated a trophy for each School Fair for this class. This trophy has to be won twice by the same school to become a permanent possession.

At the Cooksville School Fair the School winning the highest number of points in the fruit classes will receive a Silver Challenge Trophy donated by Mr. J. J. Jamieson.

A Silver Cup donated by Dr. J. T. Thomas, Caledon, to the school winning most prize money in Nature Study classes, at the Caledon School Fair, must be won three times to become permanent property.

The Peel County Women's Institute is offering a silver medal to the high pupil in Senior Public Speaking at each School Fair.

Mr. M. R. Fydell, B.A., I.P.S., is offering a prize of $5.00 in books for Champion Agriculture Notebook for the County, exhibited at Peel School Fairs, 1931.

The T. Eaton Co. Ltd., Toronto, are offering special prizes of a Silver Trophy to the pupil winning the highest number of points at each School Fair and to the second and third highest pupils, books.

The Robt. Simpson Co., Toronto, are donating six Softballs to the Peel Fairs to be used for the Strathcona drill.

The Royal, Dominion and Imperial Banks through local offices have offered prizes in live stock.

Derry West, Castlemore, Malton, Clarkson, and Lorne Park, Erindale, Sandhill, Cheltenham, Mono Road, Belfountain, and Alton Women's Institutes have donated prizes to the Fairs in which they are particularly interested.

Championship School Shields and Cups will be competed for again this year.

Meadowvale Women's Institute donates two silver cups for the high girl in Sewing and Cooking, and the high Boy in Farm and Home Mechanics.

Cooksville School Fair will be held on Daylight Saving Time—the others on Standard Time.

All exhibits must be in place at 10 o'clock, so the judging may begin at 10.15.

Be sure to keep the date of your fair in mind.

FUTURE SUCCESS DEPENDS ON EDUCATION

Many times each year we hear people say that they regret having left school at an early age. Twenty-five or thirty years ago it was not easy to obtain a High School or University education. Money was scarce—less plentiful than it is now High Schools were few. However, times have changed. In the last few years Continuation Schools have been established in almost every village and community in Ont. In some cases the community does not appreciate the opportunities which these schools afford.

If you have a boy or girl who is ready to enter the High School give him or her a chance. An opportunity is sure to come sometime when a High School educatioh will be a great benefit. Children of school age very seldom know what they are fitted for In some future time they may wish to enter the teaching, nursing or some other profession for which High School education is necessary. They may wish to take up a business coure, enter a bank, or learn some of the trades. In any of these cases, they will find the better their education, the quicker their advancement.

LET US SMILE

One of the two flappers in the bus was reading a newspaper.

"I see," she remarked to her companion, "that Mr. So-andSo, the octogenarian, is dead. Now, what on earth is an octogenarian?"

"I'm sure I haven't the faintest idea," replied the other. "But they're a sickly lot. You never hear of one but he's dying."

The steward tapped on the stateroom door of the army transport.

"I thought I'd bring you something to eat up here and save you the trouble," he announced.

"Thanks," gasped the officer. "Now save me some more trouble, will you, by throwing it over the side?"

TRINITY CHURCH

The services, of Trinity Anglican Church, on sunday last were conducted by Mr. A. A. Stainton, a lay reader, of Mimico, who preached two very fine sermons.

In the morning his text was: "He had made all things beautiful," and in the evening, "What think ye of Christ?" The music rendered by the choir throughout the services was grently appreciated.

MARRIED FIFTY YEARS

Port Credit, Sept. 1.—With both their mothers at their side, and surrounded by many relatives, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Fullerton, of Hamilton, Montana, a couple who formerly resided in Toronto, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary yesterday at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. J. Thompson, Centre Road, Port Credit.

In honor of the occasion the happy couple were presented with a bag of gold. Other tokens were received from various friends and relatives and at dinner telegrams, which arrived in a steady stream during the day from all parts of the country, were read.

A huge floral horseshoe was the present to Mr. and Mrs. Fullerton from immediate relatives. At the dinner, a frosted wedding cake sat resplendent on the table.

Mr. and Mrs. Fullerton resided in Toronto until 26 years ago when they moved to their present home in Montana. They have 13 children, all of whom were at the celebration. There were also 24 grandchildren present.

OFFICER HURT WHEN AUTOS CRASH

Brampton, Sept. 1.—R. M. Young, of Reynolds Building, of Jackson, Mich., and Robert Keegan, 71 Forks Ave., Guelph, narrowly escaped with their lives when their light coupe crashed into the rear of a truck on the Centre Road at Derry West last night and rolled into the ditch, badly smashed. Mr. Keegan was knocked unconcious and had to be attended by Dr. Colin Heggie, Brampton, later being taken to the Peel Memorial Hospital, where it was ascertained that he was not seriously hurt.

Traffic Officer Charles Heffernon, who was at the scene of the accident when it occurred, suffered a lacerated right hand when the truck was thrown to the right side of the road, grazing a car driven by Beverly Aisthorpe, of Prince Rupert Ave., Toronto.

Mr. Aisthorpe had pulled to the side of the road to light a cigarette, and Constable Heffernon had stopped to order him to move on.

The truck driven by Roy Vance, of Orangeville, pulled in behind the parked car to allow a south-bound car to pass, and then started ahead. Mr. Young, driving north at considerable speed, mistook the intentions of the truck driver and crashed into the rear of the rack. Only the fact that Heffernon saw that a smash was impending and stepped on the side of the parked car, saved his life.

ERINDALE

Connaghan—Death

St. Peter's Anglican Church, Erindale, was the scene of a lovely harvest wedding on Saturday, August 22, at 9 p.m., when Sarah Jane Death, youngest daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. J. Rutledge, of Cooksville, and wife of the late Fred Death, of Cooksville, became the bride of Francis J. Connaghan, third oldest son of Mr. Connaghan and the late Mrs. Connaghan, of Cooksville. Rev. H. V. Thompson officiated.

The church was beautifully decorated for harvest season.

The bride was charmingly dressed in blue georgette and trimmed with lace with hat to match and white shoes and stockings. She was attended by Mrs. Mary McKay as bridesmaid, sister of the groom. Mr. Percy McKay was groomsman. The bridesmaid was dressed in blue flat crepe, with blue mohair hat and white shoes and sun-tan stockings.

After the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride, when they sat down to a wedding breakfast.

George Young, of Toronto, the Catalina hero, won the big Marathon Swim at the C.N.E. yesterday, and will receive first prize, $10,000. He made a come-back after five years which makes him a world champion the second time. He finished 77 minutes ahead of the winner of the second prize, William Gol', of New York. Warren Anderson of Nova Scotia, won the third prize. Ernst Vierkotter, a former champion, had to be taken out of the water before he finished.

New Bus Service

The Arrow Motor Bus stops at Streetsville every morning at 7.05 a.m. standard time, on its way to Toronto. There are two buses on now and they are packed full by the time they get to Dixie. They pick up a lot of pupils going to Islington High School, and no doubt they will be well patronized, especially during the exhibition. They will endeavor to take the place of the now defunct Guelph Radial and will have enough buses on each trip to take care of all passengers.

The president of the Company Mr. H.J. Rymes, was in Streetsville Tuesday looking over the situation. Asked if his company was out to compete with any railroad, he said "No, we are running to give service to the people who want it."

Castoria... for CHILDREN'S ailments

ARE you prepared to render first aid and quick comfort the moment your youngster has an upset of any sort? Could you do the right thing—immediately—though the emergency came without warning—perhaps tonight? Castoria is a mother's standby at such times. There is nothing like it in emergencies, and nothing better for everyday use. For a sudden attack of colic, or for the gentle relief of constipation; to allay a feverish spell, or to soothe a fretful baby that can't sleep. This pure vegetable preparation is always ready to ease an ailing youngster. It is just as harmless as the recipe on the wrapper reads. If you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature, it is genuine Castoria. It is harmless to the smallest infant; doctors will tell you so.

You can tell from the formula on the wrapper how mild it is, and how good for little systems. But continue with Castoria until a child is grown.

Two Hurt, 30 Homeless When Fire Sweeps Village

Children's Matches Starts Blaze—Osnabruck Centre Ravaged—One may Die After Struggle For Home

Cornwall. — More than 30 persons were rendered homeless by fire which wiped out more than two-thirds of the village of Osnabruck Centre, 20 miles east of here, Sunday night. In all, 33 buildings were destroyed, including two churches, the Osnabruck township hall, a lodge hall, two stores, a warehouse and many dwellings and barns. The property loss is estimated at $100,000. Two persons suffered injury in the conflagration.

Jonah D. Lapointe, 70, is in Cornwall Hospital with little hope held out for his recovery. He was badly burned attempting to rescue his household effects. Irvin Neville, 22, fell from a roof and broke both ankles. He is also seriously burned.

Two children, George Ware, aged five, and David McBain, aged four, are believed to have been responsible for the most disastrous fire which ever occurred in this district. Shortly before four o'clock in the afternoon the kiddies were playing in a barn at the rear of the home of James McBain, at the western boundary of Osnabruck Centre. The McBain child had two matches and playfully clicked the heads together. The head of one ignited and snapped off, falling in a pile of straw. Flames shot to the rafters of the frame barn and almost before the children could run to safety the entire building was a mass of flames.

Father Sees Smoke

James McBain, father of David McBain, happened to be at the home of a neighbor when the fire broke out. Noticing a cloud of smoke breaking through the wall of his barn, he rushed to the scene and met the children in the doorway. Learning from the frightened children of what they had done, he attempted to enter the building but was driven back by intense heat. In the meantime Mrs. Maria Neville, a neighbor, had spread the alarm through the village

McBain, who has been an invalid for the past year, suffering from heart disease, saw that it would be impossible to extinguish the barn fire and that it was inevitable that the house would catch fire.

Hustled Family to Safety

"I knew that nothing could save the house, and that it would be only a matter of seconds before my home would be in flames," McBain related. "Six of my children, ranging from 16 to 5 years of age, were in the house at the time. My wife was away visiting. I had a difficult time to get the children out, as they hated to leave any of their possessions behind. I had no sooner got the last one to safety when the flames began to break through the wall. We saved little or nothing in the way of furniture. When I got outside, my heart was causing me severe pain, due to the excitement, and I lay down in a nearby field. When I came back to consciousness some time later, it seemed that the whole village was in flames. Buildings everywhere were in flames and the heat was so intense that one could not pass along the street. Even trees some distance from the burning houses were in flames. As the roof of each house crashed in, myriads of sparks filled the air. These burning embers were carried along by a strong west wind and ignited everything in their path. Hundreds of men were on the scene, but they could do little. They lacked water and ladders, and were helpless to prevent the blaze from spreading."

Sparks from the McBain barn first ignited a large saw mill, about 300 yards distant, and owned by Herman P. Alguire. This building, being of light frame construction and surrounded by lumber, slabs and piles of sawdust burned very rapidly and efforts to keep the fire under control were of little avail. Within 25 minutes of the outbreak, seven dwellings, two stores and the saw mill were blazing. At this juncture, a shifting of the wind carried the sparks straight east, instead of northeast.

This change of wind undoubtedly saved the business section of the village, which is in the north half, but resulted in a wide destruction of property. The two churches, the township hall, fraternity hall and almost every building within a half mile of the McBain barn, to the eastward, were in the path of the stream of glowing coals.

Cornwall firemen, responding to calls, from Osnabruck township officials, made the trip to Osnabruck Centre in a little over 20 minutes, arriving on the scene at about six o'clock. At this time, the only buildings in immediate danger were the village school and the dwelling of Mrs. David Rutley. Chemicals were used to good effect in saving these structures.

Osnabruck Centre is one of the oldest villages in the province, having been established by United Empire Loyalists in 1784. The majority of the residents of the village would not exceed 200.

Girl Guide News

A Story of 2nd Class Knots

A Guide who was employed in an office was in a hurry to send off a parcel. Her string was just a little bit too short, so seeing a small piece at her feet, she quickly tied it on to the other. How did she do it? (Sheet bend). She wanted to be sure the parcel would not come undone in the post. What kind of knot did she make? (Reef).

It was a Friday evening, and she had been invited to stay with friends for the week-end at Folkestone. As she passed a little village on her journey down, she saw a man put a rope round a horse's neck. How did he do it? (Middleman's Halter).

On the Saturday when she and her friend were going along the cliffs they saw a man fall over; he fell on to a ledge and some men near got ropes for the man to tie round himself so that they might haul him up. What knot did they tie? (Bowline). As he was not much hurt, he was soon pulled up to safety.

While the Guide and her friends were sitting on the beach they saw some boats come in, some wet ropes had to be joined. What knot did the men tie? (Fisherman's).

The boats were tied to a post with what knot? (Clove-hitch). But some were found to be too long, so how could they shorten them? (Sheepshank). Now you will find that if you did each one correctly, you have tied your 2nd Class Knots.

Vitamin D Bread Now To Be Made in Toronto

Toronto.—Bread containing vitamin D, a property containing the health-giving benefits of sun rays, will shortly be available in Toronto. The process of incorporation of the valuable vitamin into bread was developed after years of research by Dr. Frederick Tisdall, of the University of Toronto.

The vitamin bread has been manufactured and distributed in the United States since last February. Three Toronto bakeries are now to undertake the marketing of the same product. "Vitamin D bread has been a success commercially in the United States but we want to see how the Canadian public takes to the new product before allowing other bakeries to make use of the formula," said Dr. Tisdall.

One of the conditions of manufacture of the vitamin loaf in both Canada and the United States is that there must be no increase in the price, as compared with ordinary bread. The process of incorporating the vitamin was discovered by the development of egosterol, a substance which when subjected to ultra-violet rays, was found to retain the rays' properties.

The Disappearing Wild Duck

Calgary Herald (Ind. Cons.): Governmental authorities and fish and game associations' officials throughout Canada and the United State are so seriously concerned by the threatened extinction of the wild duck and wild goose that vigorous and deffective conservation measures may be anticipated. The most important remedy lies in action that can be taken in the United States for the reason that 90 per cent. of the wild ducks that are shot in the two countries are killed across the line as against 10 per cent. in Canada. Yet these ducks are reared in Canada. It is, therefore, evident that if adequate conservation is to be secured the main action must come from the United States. The duck loss in Western Canada, including the more northerly regions, approximates the appalling total of 90 per cent. of the supply of a few years ago. Dr. Bell, of the Bureau of Biological Survey, Washington, has gone so far as to declare that the fate of the carrier pigeon will be the fate of the wild duck unless conservation measures are taken.

Increased Acreage

Ottawa.—An increase of over 40 per cent. in the Ontario acreage devoted to the growing of tobacco is shown in the report of the tobacco division of the Federal Department of Agriculture, the growth being from 10,800 acres in 1929 to 14,000 acres in 1930. It is also noted that the production of tobacco has increased in ten years from 13,000,000 pounds to over 36,000,000 pounds, or almost 300 per cent.

The output of leather footwear in Canada for the month of June amounted to 1,576,449 pairs, compared with 1,740,792 pairs for May and 1,398,444 pairs in June, 1930. Every month of 1 31, so far, excepting January, has shown an increase over the corresponding month of 1930.

Canadian Cattle Now Shipped to France

Saskatoon.—Further development of the export Canadian cattle trade was announced last week by Hon. Robert Weir when the Minister of Agriculture told representatives of the Saskatoon Board of Trade he had just completed arrangements to ship 10,000 head of cattle to France within the next ten months. As far as is known this is the first time for 70 years that cattle from this country have been shipped to France.

The minister further announced that 80 stocker cattle are now being sent weekly to Britain in addition to regular fat cattle shipments already arranged for.

British Finance

New York Evening Post: It is only gradually that the world is learning what self-help really means—work, economy and the recovery of national confidence. England's effort to find a way for carrying out this program will now for a time absorb attention, as the German crisis did recently, but no one who knows England's history can doubt that, however heroic the means which must be adopted, the British budget will be balanced and British credit wholly restored.

Wisconsin Uses Convicts In Reforestation Work

Rhinelander, Wis.—A partial solution to the problem of overcrowded prisons is offered at the new state reforestation camp on the shore of McNaughton Lake near here.

Fifty convicts from the state prison at Waupun will plant new trees on the 10,000 acres of cutover land the state owns in the McNaughton district. The land was taken over by the state because of delinquent taxes.

A camp was built on the site of a deserted sawmill village, with the main building constructed in sections, to make possible its removal to some other reforestation area in about five years, when the work will be completed here. More than 1,000,000 small trees will be delivered to the camp this fall for reforestation planting.

Steer Weighs 3,080 Pounds

Omaha.—Specer, a village in this State, appears to be the natural habitat of oversize animals. A few years ago Mitchell and Kloke raised what they asserted to be the world's largest horse. Now Carl Danielson believes he has the world's largest steer. He has had the animal examined and a sworn statement made of his weight and measurements in case any one desires to dispute his claim.

Pedro, the steer, is a 4-year-old shorthorn and Hereford cross. He has a girth of ten feet four inches, measures the same in length from tip of nose to base of tail, stands five feet ten inches high, weighs 3,040 pounds and is still filling out. He was so large as a yearling that Mr. Danielson decided not to market him but to keep him and let him grow. The result is a ton and a half family pet as well as a bovine curiosity.

Australians Turning Darker, Say Doctors

Sydney, Australia.—Opinions expressed at a medical gathering here were that Australians would grow taller and darker.

"The blondes will vanish," said one Sydney specialist. "Australians, with surfing, the national pastime of all who have access to the beaches, are definitely getting darker.

"When you have a race of people living most of the year in the sunshine, as in Australia, the skin pigment increases and the hair darkens. In a few hundred years perhaps we may be a black race."

2 Liners Now Building May Hit 30-Knot Speed

London—Tank experiments with a scale-model of the new 70,000-ton Cunard liner that is being built on the Clyde indicate that the new vessel, which is designed to recapture trans-Atlantic speed honors from the Europa, will be capable of crossing the Atlantic at between twenty-nine and a half and thirty knots.

From France, however, comes word that the gigantic liner which is under construction at St. Nazaire for the Cie. Gen. Transatlantique, will be capable of a steady sea speed of twenty-nine knots.

Ontario Centres Show Increase

Latest Census Figures Reveal Large Gains by Timmins, Sandwich

Ottawa.—A preliminary census announcement covering the population in a large number of cities and towns which were not covered in a previous statement, was issued recently by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The bureau stated, in making the announcement that returns are subject to correction as additions on account of closed houses and absentees have yet to be made. The figures given are as of June 1 of the present year.

Twenty-nine out of 36 Ontario cities and towns show increased populations, the most notable being Timmins with a gain of 10,299 and Sandwich with 6,281 more than in 1921. The city of London gained 10,063 and Ottawa 17,145. The seven centres registering decreases are: Wingham, Paris, Mitchell, Milton, Chesley, Amherstburg and Trout Creek, the latter in Parry Sound district.

German Mystery Flier in Canada

Wolf Von Gronau Hops from Greenland to Hudson Bay

Ottawa. — Making rapid progress across the northern tip of the continent, the mystery plane which unexpectedly arrived on this side of the Atlantic after taking off from Greenland, was believed to be headed for the small Eskimo village of Povungnuk, on the eastern side of Hudson Bay. It was piloted by the German flier, Captain Wolf von Gronau.

According to meagre radio messages picked up here, von Gronau originally intended to make Payne Bay, on Hudson Straits, his first port of call on the continent. Apparently from the wireless messages picked up by Canadian government stations and relayed here, he altered his course, pointing further inland toward Povungituk. It was believed here he would follow the shore of Hudson Bay southward, taking the course blazed in the opposite direction a few weeks ago by the ill-fated United States pilot, Parker Cramer.

Von Gronau's ultimate destination is Chicago.

Canadian Birth Rate Shows Drop of 2 P.C.

Ottawa.—A reduction of two per cent. in the Canadian birth rate in the first seven months of the year is shown by a preliminary report of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics covering cities of 10,000 and over. The total to the end of July was 50,851 births, as compared with 52,057 in the same months of last year. In July alone births in these cities numbered 7,38. as against 7,748 in July, 1930.

Armistice Day Public Holiday

October 12th to be Thanksgiving Day This Year

Ottawa.—The public of Canada will be treated to an extra holiday this year. Thanksgiving Day, for some years synchronizing with Armistice Day, from now on will be separate. Both occasions will be public holidays. The date of Thanksgiving will be fixed by proclamation of the Government. While the exact time has not yet been decided officially, the idea is that it will be on Monday, October 12th, just one month in advance of the Armistice anniversary.

Reversion to the old idea of an October Thanksgiving Day is enforced by the legislation at the last session of Parliament providing that the Armistice anniversary shall be always on the 11th of November, that it shall be known as Remembrance Day and be a holiday in itself, quite apart from Thanksgiving. Since the Great War, Thanksgiving has been in the Monday of the week in which November 11th occurred. When the Monday in question did not fall on the 11th, the Armistice coming later, was not a holiday. Now, each occasion will be and they will be a month apart.

Sea-Wave Energy Runs Motor Invented in Italy

Rome.—Giovanni Cotugna, musical instrument maker of Ancona, has invented what he calls a hydrodynamic motor for using the energy in the waves of the sea. He has given the following particulars:

"My apparatus consists of a wooden shat about fourteen feet long and weighing eight kilograms. The auto-propeller weighs only 200 grams, and consists of two steel clades about one-fifth of a millimeter in thickness. When thrown into the sea, after a moment it begins to move. The tiny waves break against the head of the machine, and instead of driving it right and left, impress it with continued energy in a certain direction.

"A Banana A Day" Would Chase Depression Away

The apple sellers have been selling the wrong fruit, writes Eddie Cantor in the Saturday Evening Post. We could have prosperity back in six months if people would sell bananas instead of apples.

The reason is simple. Apples are healthy, and that's that. You eat an apple and never hear from it again. But the minute you peel a banana things start to happen. Somebody slips on the peel and soils his trousers. That makes business for the cleaner. The cleaner buys more benzine; the output of benzine increases. More people are engaged to extract benzine, to pack it, ship and deliver it. Larger deliveries create a demand for more motor trucks and motor car companies start turning them out by the thousands.

Meantime the man eats another banana, slips again, and, before he knows it, his pants are torn. That brings in the clothiers, the clothiers start getting married and the furniture bring in their relatives, their relatives business picks up.

The next time the man slips he breaks a leg. That makes business for the doctor. The doctor becomes really interested, and the undertaker gets a break. The man leaves insurance, and the wife gets a break.

Now figure out the millions of bananas that could have been sold by this time instead of apples, and picture the whole country busy cleaning pants, delivering benzine, slipping on peels, doctors leaving, florists arriving, widows remarrying, everybody busy, happy and prosperous.

What the apple did for Newton the banana could have done for President Hoover! It's not too late now. If you want to bring back palmy days in a hurry, my banana plan will guarantee a quick turnover.

Many Small Change Collections As Good as Big Profit to Shaw

Malvern, Eng.—George Bernard Shaw would rather pick up a piece of small change many times than take a big profit once in a while, he said at a rally here in the interests of the National Theatre movement.

It would be surprising to know, he said, how much money he gets from little groups of players putting on his dramas in halls where the admittance price is ten cents to a quarter. Although some dramatists would demand $25, said he, "I take my fifteen cents, touch my hat and trust for a renewal of favors."

Greenland Guards Geology Secrets

Though Depths of the Ice Cap Have Been Sounded, a Vast Land Area is Unknown

Fixing the depth of the Greenland ice cap at 8,850 feet, as the German scientific group recently did by sonic depth soundings, has solved a puzzle which has perplexed investigators since the earliest days of Arctic exploration, writes Russell Owen, in the N.Y. Times. Greenland has turned out to be a rim of mountains encircling a bowl of ice. It is an anachronism, a survival of the Ice Age relatively close to civilization.

The known geology of Greenland has always been meager, as is natural in a country of which only one-sixth is not covered by ice. It is a much larger land than is usually realized, for it covers an area of 827,000 square miles, as big as France, Germany, Spain, Poland, England and Hungary put together.

In its southern part the mountains rise from the sea and fold after fold of them extends back many miles until they are overwhelmed far inland by the ice cap. But further north the inland ice pushes out more and more until it becomes difficult to tell where glacier ice ends and sea ice begins, and where for many miles the entire coast line is ice, the mountains are completely hidden beneath the white crust. During the great Ice Age all of Northern Europe and also Canada and the Northern United States were covered with a vast shield of ice, which has left its traces all over the land. In Greenland this shield remains, held in by the mountain rim.

It was not always a cold country; in fact, it was probably semi-tropical at one time, for fossils indicating that have been found, and it has coal beds which supply the local inhabitants. The mountains, at least in the north, were much higher than they are now.

A Chain of Islands

These mountains extend westward to Grinnell Land, and eastward they run as a submarine ridge across to Spitsbergen and then down through Bear Island to the north of Norway and form the Scandinavian chain which continues through Scotland. So the upper part of Greenland is linked geologically to Europe. But all around the edge of the island the mountains rise majestically from the sea, not always of great height, but coming as they do directly from sea level they are most beautiful and imposing. Fold after fold they pass back into the interior until the ice swallows them, and tiny peaks, the tops of large mountains, peep through the crust as small snow hills or nunataks. Finally they also disappear and only the level ice is left before the traveler.

When the Ice Age came on the land a little snow collected in these inland valleys and did not melt. It was added to year by year until the valleys filled and the snow overflowed the lower peaks. Under pressure it became ice and then flowed outward through the fjords, making the glaciers, of which there are 200 in Greenland.

"Only the man who has traveled for weeks day after day along the inland ice without seeing land can rightly appreciate the nature of the Ice Period," says Koch. "The first thing which impresses one is the enormous dimensions with which one must reckon. The landscapes, which with their big fjords and huge mountains seem so large from the sea, now lie far beneath the spectator as narrow rims of land, quickly disappearing, to give room for a perfectly even snow plain. A journey across this from north to south would be as long as from Copenhagen to the Sahara, and during this journey the landscape would not alter for a single instant. Nowhere would one see land; infinite as the sea lies the snow field, and life is represented neither by animal nor plant. Even the Sahara has its oases, between which men and animals move about; but here is nothing but snow—this is the region on earth most inimical to life."

What the Snow Shield Shows

An examination of this snow shield shows curious stratification, for even at such an elevation and latitude the sun is hot enough in the middle of the Summer to melt partially the surface, which immediately freezes again, forming a crust. Nansen found that under soft newly fallen snow there would be a hard crust, more soft snow and then again a crust, and then two or three feet down snow so hard that the sticks would not penetrate it. And at times, near rocky peaks close to the rim of the inland ice, small lakes form on top of the icy cap, and streams run fro mthem down crevices or into ice wells, deep cavities into which the water falls hundreds of feet with a thunderous echoing roar.

But although the interior of Greenland is merely a huge ice cap, a prehistoric remnant preserved by fortunate chance, there are some things in the bare and scoriated mountains of the coast which are of value.

The most important mineral in Greenland, however, is cryolite; the mine at Ivigtut is not only one of the most northerly mines in the world but also the only place at which cryolite occurs in commercial quantity. The royalties on it go far to pay the expenses of government. The Eskimos called it "ice which would not melt in Summer." It is mined in an open pit right on the edge of a fjord, and apparently the supply is sufficient to last indefinitely. It is used largely in the metallurgy of aluminum.

Greenland will probably never be exploited commercially, not only because of the meagerness of its ore deposits, but also because of its climate and the desire of the Danish Government to keep out all influences which will harm the natives. It will remain, however, one of the greatest scenic spots in the world, and of continual interests to scientists.

New Head For "Mounties"

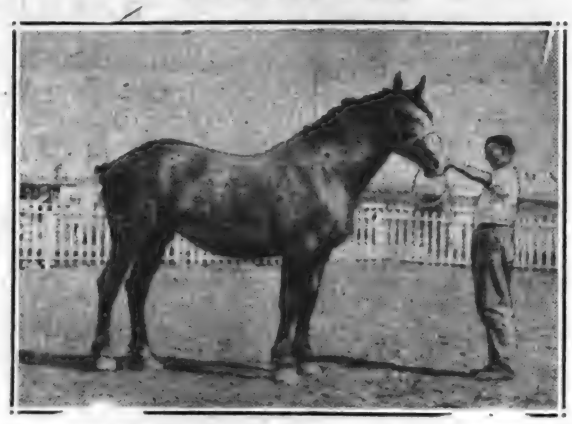
Ottawa.—After forty-five years in the service Colonel Cortlandt Starnes has retired from the command of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, formerly known as the Royal Northwest Mounted. He is granted a pension with the rank of Major General, and goes into private life with a distinguished record of service in a unit which has a unique tradition.

Colonel Starnes is succeeded as Chief Commissioner by Major Gen. J. H. MacBrien, a veteran of the South African war and the World War, former chief of the General Staff, Canadian Department of National Defense, and still later president of the Aviation League of Canada.

The retired Commissioner joined the force in 1886 as an inspector, and advanced on merit through all the ranks to the chief command. He had personal acquaintance with all phases of the multiplex duties of the mounted police. They patrol the international frontier, keep peace and order in the vast sub-Arctic region, and maintain posts on the shores of Hudson Bay, in the Yukon, on Herschell Island off the mouth of the Mackenzie River, and on some of the Arctic islands. They represent Canadian authority among the native Eskimos and their record in the prevention and the detection of criminals has made them famous throughout the world.

The Two Roads

When he was young and days were full and bright,
He came through every kind of youthful fight
By winning well.
No praising word his many friends would speak,
But someone came and whispered he was weak,
And so he fell.



When he was frail and bled by sorrow's pain
And shunned the fight and would not face again
A hill so long,
There came a voice, as if from hopeless grave,
That called him strong and said that he was brave,
And he was strong.

—Cahal Bradley, in Songs of a Commercial Traveller.

Hood—"Oh, just medium."

Visitor—"Well, Joe, how do you like your new little sister?"
Joe—"Oh, she's all right, I guess; but there are lots of things we needed worse."

To coin a phrase: Richard Rich paid the bill so often the young folks all began to take him as an after-dinner mint.

The following item is taken from a recent issue of The Corpus Christi, Texas, Caller-Times:

"Harrell's Business School, in the Furman Building, announce the birth of a daughter, Carolyn, Friday, February 13th."

A young girl from Brushville says she hates to move away from her home town and lose the reward of all her hard work she has done on her boy friends. "They're not hard to get, but they're awfully flighty and hard to keep," she confided.

"What are you writing?"
"A joke," said Miss Dove.
"Oh," said Lizzie,
"Give him my love."

Freddy—"Im sorry—and here I've been thinking she never considered my happiness."

Daybreak in a Garden

I heard the farm cocks crowing, loud, and faint, and thin,
When hooded night was going and one clear planet winked:
I heard shrill notes begin down the spired wood distinct,
When cloudy shoals were chinked and gilt with fires of day,
White-misted was the weald; the lawns were silver-grey;
The lark his lonely field for heaven had forsaken;
And the wind upon its way whispered the boughs of May,
And touched the nodding peony-flowers to bid them waken.
—Siegfried Sassoon, in "Selected Poems."

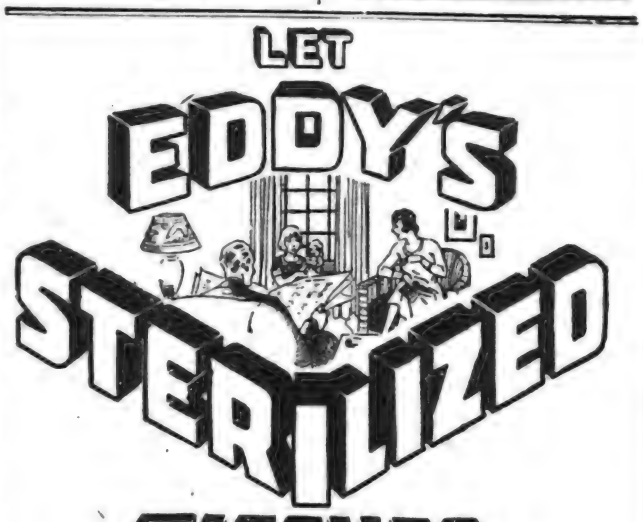
Counsel to a Young Sister



Carry your head up, proud and high,
Thinking no goal unworthy of a try.
Pattern your life more from the things I preach
Than from the mold my poor examples teach.
Decide which path your toes should rightly take,
And though it seems your tender heart must break—
Falter not once, but keep eyes straight ahead—
A woman is hurt if rose-thorns make her bed.
Should moments come with powerlessness rife,
Think: "These are but the lesser loves in life";
And if thy vestal reason chance to swoon,
Remember! There's a man up in the moon!
Surrender not on earth, but know full well—
He is the only man who will not tell.

SHE WORRIED ABOUT HER WEIGHT

"I started taking Kruschen Salts a month ago. I have lost 5 pounds in weight, and I feel as if I have lost 50 lbs. I am full of vigor, whereas before I was worried about my condition, as I was listless and worried over little things. But I am thankful to say that, were my troubles doubled, they would not worry me to-day—thanks to Kruschen."—Miss V. P.

Here's the recipe that banishes fat—take one-half teaspoon of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water before breakfast.

Be sure and do this every morning, for "It's the daily dose that takes off the fat."—Don't miss a morning. Kruschen daily means that every particle of poisonous waste matter and harmful acids and gases are expelled from the system.

Modify your diet, and take gentle exercise. The stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels are tuned up, and the pure, fresh blood containing these six salts is carried to every part of the body, and this is followed by "that Kruschen feeling" of energetic health and activity that is reflected in bright eyes, clear skin, cheerful vivacity and charming figure.

Omagh

Christ Church, Omagh, Trafalgar Township, will celebrate its diamond Jubilee on Saturday and Sunday Sept. 5 and 6. There will be a lawn social and program on Saturday. On Sunday there will be confirmation at morning service, when the Lord Bishop of Niagara will preach. The Rector, Rev. J M. Cameron, also will assist.

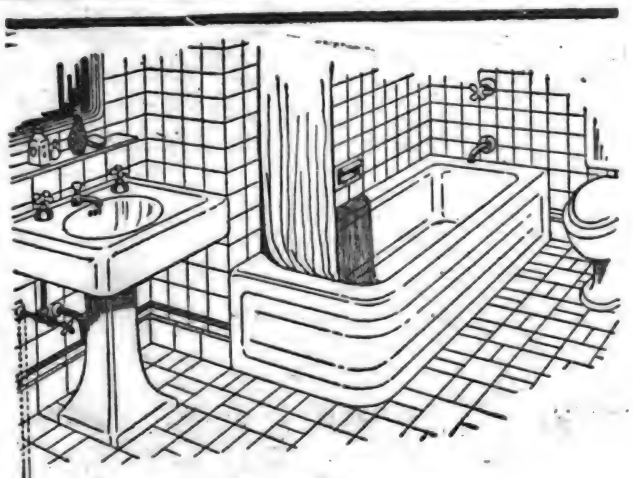
WE HAVE THEM

Every community has the type of individual referred to in the following. Yes, every town and village, and each city, great and smaller, too, can point to the man or woman, or both, who are continually generous in the matter of destructive criticism. Seldom, if ever, are they among those who exert their effort to build up, but they can always tell one, if they agree at all with the project in hand, of a better way of doing it. Here is how a contemporary sums up such folk.

"Every community is cursed with the idle critic. An idle critic is one that never takes an active part in the community affairs, never joins any organization for the betterment or the advancement of the community, never contributes a cent to help any movement or organization that is working to benefit the community. His chief activity is to stand aside, mouth his opinions and objections, and find fault with and criticise the work of those who are trying to do something in a public way. If any local scheme fails he is one to shout the loudest, "I told you so!" And the trouble is that the idle critics have some influence. There are always those who are willing to listen to objections. There is an old saying that nothing succeeds like success, and once a public movement is on the way to success, there are plenty to fall in line and work with the majority. These idle critics are a great nuisance. They are found not only in our municipal work but our church work and in all social movements. It is very discouraging to the alert and progressive citizens who have to fight such objections, because the idle critics do not fight in the open, but stand aside and whisper their doubts, shrug their shoulders and impute selfish and personal motives. It is a pity that there is not some way of dealing with these idle critics. Many worthy and worth-while movements have been killed by such adverse and insidious critics, and it requires a determined and courageous citizen to stand up against them."

The editors of local newspapers are often blamed for partiality in their notices for churches, societies and even families, when the fact is the parties most interested are the ones to blame. The local newspaper does not possess a sufficient number of reporters to send to every church service in the range of its circulation, and it must needs depends upon some person to send in the news. Many pastors or leaders of the congregation do this and their items are gladly printed. Many societies appoint one of their members to attend to this important work.

SAGO TEHONIATARAKAKOWA!



"Greetings, Chief Swiftest Rider Of Mighty Waters"

Honours have been heaped upon Captain R. G. "Jock" Latta, commander of the trans-Atlantic record liner Empress of Britain since his new 42,500 vessel regained the Blue Ribbon of the Atlantic for the British Empire by all classes of people but none have been more sincerely offered than the recent tribute of the Six Nations Indians.

Encamped at Loretteville, Quebec, where they are establishing a village in which the ancient arts of the redman are practiced, members of the Six Nations under the leadership of 81 year old Chief Wolverine recently honoured the Canadian Pacific Commodore by adopting him into the tribes and conferring chieftainship upon him as a tribute to his feats of seamanship with the big white "war-canoe." Meeting the Empress of Britain in their gaily decorated birch-bark canoes a score of braves and Squaws, led by Wolverine, Running Bull, American Horse and Princess White Eagle, danced their ceremonial dance on the Games Deck of the mighty liner, stood in reverent silence while the old Chief invoked the great spirits and rent the air with their whoops as Princess White Eagle and Chief Wolverine crowned the new chief with a war bonnet of eagle's feathers.

Photos show (left) Chiefs and braves in their canoes cluster round the big ship as she arrives, (right) The final ceremony, and the deer skin certificate of adoption.

Walk on the LEFT of country roads
. . . Face the Traffic

This rule is important at all times, but especially so at dusk and at night.

At such times, no matter how careful the driver of a car is, he may not see you until he is very near to you and it may be impossible for him to stop in time to avoid inflicting serious injury.

Should he swerve to avoid hitting you, though you may escape injury others may be hurt.

Of the 524 fatalities on the highways of Ontario last year a large number were caused by persons walking with rather than against traffic.

Why take a chance?

TETANUS OR LOCKJAW

A break in the skin is always dangerous because with the breaking of the skin, is removed the barrier of which, when it is intact, keeps out the germs which cause infection. There is a popular idea that the scratch made by a rusty nail is particularly dangerous. It is true that the rusty nail may be more dangerous than a clean nail, but if so, it is not because of the rust which is harmless in itself, but because the nail has been lying around and so has had a good chance to become soiled with germs.

The fear of the rusty nail and of rusty garden tools is likely due to its having been noticed that wounds made by such articles often become seriously infected, and that lockjaw or tetanus sometimes resulted.

The germ which causes tetanus is found normally in the intestines of many animals. So it comes about that the germ is present in the earth which is open to contamination with the discharges from these animals. The germ of tetanus is unusual in that, unlike other disease germs, it is capable of living for a long time outside of the human or animal body. It is able to do this because it can form spores, that is, it can pass into a resting stage during which it is able to resist the conditions which ordinary destroy germs.

The tetanus germ is usually introduced into the body through an injury made by an object which punctures or tears the tissues in such a way that the wound is not freely open to the air. The punctured wound is dangerous because of the difficulty experienced in cleaning out such a wound. Wounds of this type favour the development of tetanus, because the germ which causes this disease does not require air in order to grow.

A wound in any part of the body should be treated promptly and properly. The most important point to be thought of in caring for such a wound is to cleanse it thoroughly with soap and water, and then cover the wound with a sterile dressing in order to prevent the entrance of dirt.

Any punctured wound, no matter how made, or any wound in which dirt is driven under the skin should be brought under medical treatment without delay.

By using tetanus antitoxin where there is any possibility of infection of the wound with the germs of tetanus, the disease can be prevented. This is, in itself, a sufficient reason for securing prompt medical treatment for wounds which have had any chance at all of being contaminated with soil, dust or street sweepings. The tetanus antitoxin can prevent the disease, but in order that it may do so, it must be used before the disease develops.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Stone on Streets

The Village Council had a chance to buy what crushed stone that was left after the Streetsville-Erindale highway was completed, at a bargain price, so they took advantage of it. They bought the lot, 259 tons at $1.80 ton, which, with the charge for delivering, cost the Village $520.00. This stone was spread on the roads on Main, Church, and Thomas Streets, and will make quite an improvement.

HARVEST THEN AND NOW

Hark a lover binding sheaves,
To his maiden sing
Flutter, flutter goes the leaves
Larks drop their wings.

These words were written by Jean Lugelow in the last century, when the binding was done by hand and the lover and the maid were happy binding sheaves.

Tennyson in his poem, "The Lady of Shalott," speaks of the harvest thus:

Only reapers reaping early
In among the bearded barley,
Hears a song that echoes cheery,
And by moon the reaper weary,
Piling sheaves in upland airy,
Listening, whispers, 'Tis the fairy,'
Lady of Shalott.

Farming in those days, in spite of sundry draw-backs in the agriculture world, continued to be a lucrative and highly respectable calling, but with the improvement of machinery that throw so many men out of employment, there seems no joy in the work now. This present year the harvest has been a long drawn-out work, with no joy. With the present low prices and high taxes, farmers, are wondering at the why of it all.

But there is a future, O thank God, when the present depression will be lifted and again, the farmers, the labourers, and all those, who only ask of their fellowmen for leave to toil, will get justice in this world of toil.

Official Opening of New Highway

Here Next Wednesday

Also Banquet and Dance

On Wednesday afternoon. Sept. 16, there will be plenty doing in Streetsville and vicinity, when the New Streetsville — Erindale Highway will be officially opened by Hon. Leopold, McCauley at five o'clock, at the Erindale end of the Highway, where it commences at the Dundas Highway.

Among those who have been invited to be present are Premier Geo. S. Henry, Hon. T. L. Kennedy, Minister of Agriculture, R. M. Smith, Engineer Dept. of Highways, Sam Charters, M. P., the Warden and members of Peel County Council; County Officials; Members of Municipal Councils; ex-Wardens and others.

The celebration is sponsored by the Councils of Toronto Township and Streetsville, they being the most directly interested. The affair is given as an appreciation of the assistance rendered by the Department of Highways and the County Council in the construction of the Highway, which is an excellent stretch of road, well built, and ought to last a great many years with proper attention.

The building of the road will help Streetsville considerably, by making it easier for the people to come into the village, and by inducing more people to come her to locate. It will give Streetsville citizens a better road when they want to drive to Toronto or any other place.

After the opening ceremonies have been performed, a banquete will be served in the Oddfellows Hall, for which special invitations have been sent out.

After the banquet, a public dance will be held for which music will be provided.

The banquet will be served by the Women's Association of Streetsville United Church.

The Highway was constructed by the Standard Paving Co. of Toronto, and is a credit to the builders. It is what is called a "hard surface" road, the surface being six inches thick, and of the same construction as roads being built by the Deparment of Highways to-day. Next year, it is hoped to continue with the same kind of Highway, to the North of Streetsville and on up to the Brampton—Guelph Highway.

In order to correct an impression that some people have, we wish to state that no part of the cost of this celebration will be charged up in the taxes. The whole cost will be met by contributions.

FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY

The Women's Missionary Society of Wesley United Church, Snider's Corners, celebrated the fortieth anniversary of the organization on Tuesday, when the church was filled with interested people. A lengthy program was given. Miss Effie Jamieson, sec. of the Dominion Board of the W.M.S., gave an account of her trip to Africa. Solos were rendered by Miss Pichard, of Bronte, and Mrs. Clarence Ford, of Drumquin. Mrs. J. N. Fish, who was the first president of the Society, gave a report of their work during the past forty years. She now resides in Oakville.

The Society started with only four members, Mrs. J. N. Fish, Mrs. Albert McMurray, Dundas Street; Mrs. David Turner, Eighth line, and Mrs. W. C. Andrew, Streetsville. All the charter members, except Mrs. McMurray, were present. Mrs. D. Lindsay, Streetsville, read the Scripture lesson.

Mrs. D. Turner read the list of those members who have passed away.

After the programme came the banquet. The birthday cake, on which there were forty candles, was made by Mrs. F. A. Forster, who is 78 years of age. Mrs. W. R. Turner, Stonewall, Man., and Mrs. W. C. Andrew poured tea.

The president of the Society, Mrs. Cecil Fish, occupied the chair for the afternoon meeting.

Mrs. Joe Snider, who was also a charter member, passed away some time ago.

Mrs. T. C. Pickering read the letters of regret from those unable to be present.

WHAT IS THIS GOLF?

Golf is a form of work made expensive enough for a man to enjoy it. It is physical and mental exertion made attractive by the fact that you have to dress for it in a $200,000 clubhouse. A golf course has 18 holes, 17 of which are unnecessary and put in to make the game harder. A 'hole' is a tin cup in the centre of a green. A 'green' is a small parcel of grass costing $1.98 a blade and usually located between a brook and a couple of apple trees or a lot of 'unfinished excavation.' The idea is to get the golf ball from a given point into each of the 18 cups in the fewest strokes and the greatest number of words. The ball must not be thrown, pushed or carried. It must be propelled by about $200 worth of curious looking implements, especially designed to provoke the owner. Each implement has a specific purpose and ultimately some golfers get to know what that purpose is. After each hole has been completed the golfer counts his strokes. Then he substracts six and says, "Made it in five. That's one above par. Shall we play for 50 cents on the next hole, Ed? After the final or 18th hole, the golfer adds up his score and stops when he has reached 87. He then has a swim, sings 'Sweet Adeline' with six or seven other liars and calls it the end of a perfect day. —Nation's Business.

TWO HURT IN CRASH

Brampton, Sept. 7.—Steve Yamankowitch, 159 Augusta Avenue, Toronto, and Nick Doroch 58 Bellevue Avenue, Toronto, were both admitted to the Peel Memorial Hospital, Brampton, tonight in a serious condition, after they had sustained bad head injuries in an automobile accident near the town limits. According to the police the two men were in a westbound car, which, it is alleged, sideswiped an eastbound car driven by P. J. Bolger, of Georgetown, who had his two sons as passengers. Both cars took the ditch, one on each side of the highway. Occupants of the Georgetown car escaped unhurt.

Train Kills Boy Three Are Hurt At Brantford

Stringent Action Taken—Seven Youths Fined for Track Walking

Brantford.—Less than two hours after seven youths had paid the law's penalties for trespassing on the railway tracks here trains mowed down two other boy trespassers within a few minutes of each other in two different sections of the city. One, Reginald Raynor, aged 12, was instantly killed; the other, Stanley Powell, pupil of the Ontario School for the Deaf at Belleville, lies in the hospital seriously injured. At the same time in the Paris hospital, two more youthful law breakers are recovering from injuries suffered in the same manner.

Shortly after 12 o'clock Thursday, Powell was hit by a freight train while walking along the C.N.R. tracks near St. Paul's avenue, and was badly gashed and suffered internal injuries.

A few minutes later Raynor, with companion, was walking on the T. H. and B. tracks in West Brantford. His chums elected to cut to the side of the tracks to let a gasoline-electric car go by. Raynor felt he could make the level-crossing but failed, being almost instantly killed by the car, which carried him 75 yards down the track towards Winnett Street before Engineer William Preeth of Hamilton could stop the heavy vehicle.

Both accidents followed the appearance of seven youths in police court, arrested by detective Mullen, who stated that he was taking stringent action in protection for the youths, since there were now two youths in Paris General Hospital severely hurt while trespassing. The seven were caught at Paris where they were trying to hop freight trains. The seven pleaded guilty to trespass and were fined $10 and costs or 15 days in jail.

Britain Races Alone For Schneider Cup

France and Italy Withdraw—Request for 6 Months Postponement Refused

London—Great Britain will race against herself for the Schneider Cup Sept. 12.

The Royal Aero Club learned from France and Italy that reasons summed up as bad weather, bad luck and loss of machines, they would be unable to compete in the famous air race unless it could be postponed for six months. The club replied that the rules did not permit such postponement. The race, therefore, as an international event, is off.

It was learned at the same time, however, that British pilots will conduct a "flyover" by racing against one another in the hope of bettering the speed record for the race, which now stands at 328.63 miles per hour.

It was assumed that Great Britain will keep the trophy, since she already had won it two years in succession. It was also regarded as probable that this year's race might be the last of the series.

In a recent statement issued by the Royal Aero Club said that an attempt would be made to lower the existing world speed record of 357.7 miles an hour.

Bumper Tobacco Crop In Essex and Kent

Chatham, Ont.—Tobacco cutting throughout the entire growing area from the Essex border to Delhi is general, according to fieldmen, who report there is an indication of a bumper crop of Burley type in Kent and Essex. They also report an enormous yield of the flue-cured in the eastern counties. They estimated that 7,900 acres of land in Kent are under cultivation in Burley tobacco, and that 21,000 acres of tobacco or flue cure is being harvested in the Delhi district.

Four Lose Lives In British Mine

Eight Others Seriously Injured by Explosion in Warwickshire

Astley, Warwickshire, Eng.—Pitiful scenes were witnessed at Newdigate pithead recently when the bodies of four married men, killed in an underground explosion, were brought to the surface.

A violent thunderstorm, raging at the time, illuminated the scene as the bodies were brought to the pit entrance after dark. The victims were: William Hollis, the Square, Attleborough; J. Miles, Wynfield Road, Nuneaton; J. Casey, Cross Keys, Exhall; J. Morris, Queen Street, Astley.

Eight others were seriously injured.

Thirty men were at work about a mile and a half from the mouth of the main shaft, when, in the words of a survivor, "There was a vivid flash and a deafening explosion. Great lumps of coal and debris hurled upon us from the coal face and the sides of the pit."

Despite frantic efforts, it was two hours before rescue workers could reach the first body.

Zep Completes Flight to Brazil

Took 72 Hours to Cover Some 4,400 Miles—Reaches Pernambuco

Pernambuco, Brazil.—The German dirigible Graf Zeppelin completed its second flight to Brazil on Sept. 1, arriving at this northeast coastal city at 5.18 p.m., after a non-stop trip of some 4,400 miles from Friedrichshafen.

The dirigible, commanded by Dr. Hugo Eckener and carrying 12 passengers at $1,500 each, soared over the Brazilian coast at the end of a 1,600-miles flight across the South Atlantic Ocean, where winds retarded its progress.

The ship required 72 hours for the flight, which began on the shores of Lake Constance. The average speed was slightly more than 60 miles an hour, due chiefly to adverse conditions as the dirigible approached South America. It was the first non-stop flight the Graf Zeppelin had made from Friedrichshafen to Brazil, having halted in Spain on the previous journey.

"We had a magnificent trip," Dr. Eckener reported. "The only inclement weather encountered was near the Islands of Fernando Noronha, about 125 miles off the Brazilian coast, where we were held back by strong headwinds."

Analyze Wheat For China Market

Millions of Bushels Could be Used in National Dishes, Claim

Montreal.—Canada's surplus wheat in elevators throughout the Dominion would save the lives of thousands of Chinese now starving in the areas flooded by the Yangtze River and possibly be the means of furnishing a future outlet for Canadian wheat that would prove of great benefit to this country, Wong Han, prominent member of the local Chinese colony, stated recently.

He thought that there was an excellent market for the hard wheat of Canada in his homeland. "The Chinese," he explained, "will never eat bread to any great extent, as it is a food absolutely foreign to them and would require cooking equipment not found in the average Chinese home. Canadian wheat, however, he went on, "could be used freely in the preparation of Chinese dishes, such as the making of dumplings and noodles, and its use for this purpose would take millions of bushels of Canadian wheat yearly."

Big Loser

H. P. Alguire, one of the biggest losers in destructive fire which razed his sawmill to the ground in the Osnabruck Centre (near Cornwall, Ont.) blaze.

40-Mile Rate Compulsory On Chicago Highway

Indianapolis.—Forty miles an hour, once considered highly dangerous, now is called the safest minimum automobile speed on the Dunes Highway, across northern Indiana to Chicago.

State police have been instructed to see that a speed of at least forty miles an hour is maintained on that much-traveled road each week end, to avoid traffic jams and collisions.

Under the new plan, police believe the maximum safety will result, for no driver will be permitted to cut in and out of trafic lanes.

The order to keep cars moving rapidly was made by Groverf C. Garrott, Indiana police chief. It is the first attempt to fix rural minimum speed limits in the Mid-West. The closest comparison to the experiment, Chief Garrott said, is the regulation of traffic through the Holland Tunnel, in New York.

Hall Caine Passes At Boyhood Home

Isle of Man Mourns the Death of Famous Novelist

Douglas, Isle of Man.—Sir Hall Caine, noted novelist, passed on Sept. 1st, at his home, Greeba Castle.

Sir Hall Caine came from Runcorn, Cheshire, at an early age to live on the Isle of Man. Later he was sent to Liverpool to be trained as an architect. He never practiced that profession, however, but turned to journalistic work. He became an editorial writer on the staff of the Liverpool Mercury. After six years he went to London on the invitation of Mr. D. G. Rossetti, the poet-painter, and remained as his secretary and companion until Mr. Rossetti passed on.

The first writings of Sir Hall to attract attention were "Sonnets of Three Centuries" and "Recollections of Rossetti," both published in 1882. For nearly 50 years thereafter he produced novels and plays, many of the latter being dramatized versions of his books. One of his early successes was "The Deemster,' a story of early life on the Isle of Man. "The Manxman," a development of the same theme, was even more popular. These and a few others firmly established his reputation and laid the foundation for his fortune. He acquired Greeba Castle, one of the finest residences on the Isle of Man, and for some years sat in the House of Keys, the Manx parliament.

Others of Sir Hall's better known works include "The Christian," "The Eternal City," "The Prodigal Son," "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," "The Bondsman," "The Scapegoat," "The White Prophet" and "The Master of Men." He wrote "Darby and Joan" as an original film story, and a number of the books mentioned were shown on the screen in Great Britain and the United States.

Ford to Give 50,000 Work This Month

Detroit.—The Ford Motor Company, which on August 1 sharply curtailed its manufacturing force, announced that between 15,000 and 25,000 men had been ordered to return starting September 8.

Officials of the company said they expected 50,000 men to be recalled by the middle of September. The company made no announcement of any change in the three-day-a-week working schedule which has been in effect for many months.

Chinese River Continues to Rise

Yangtse Menaces Nanking, 4,000 Dead Only Fifty Miles Away

Shanghai.—Great floods broke through the Yangtse River dykes this week, threatening inundation of Nanking, China's capital, after having caused the deaths of approximately 350,000 Chinese recently and leaving many millions facing starvation.

Moving down from the sister cities, Hankow, Wuchang and Hanyang, where more than a quarter million perished, the flood entered Wuhu, 50 miles up river from Nanking. Four thousand were reported dead at Wuhu and 200,000 destitute and homeless.

Three dykes gave way near Nanking. Its western suburbs were flooded and thousands took refuge within the walled city of 400,000 inhabitants. More than 1,000 refugees encamped on the walls as the Yangtse rose and efforts were made to strengthen the dykes.

The main floods were in two areas—along the Yangtse River and the Grand Canal, 40 miles northeast of Nanking. At least 100,000 persons were believed to have died in the past 10 days as the canal overflowed, forming a great lake which swallowed several villages and flooded large cities.

Taichow and Tungtai were under several feet of water. Portions of Hinghwa were covered 20 feet deep as it formed the centre of a lake radiating 35 miles. Countless people were believed to have perished in the surrounding country as the waters closed over trees and house tops to which they had clung.

Hudson Bay Fort May Have Replica

Edmonton, Alta.—Construction of a replica of the famous old Hudson's Bay Company fort in Edmonton and important changes in downtown streets which have suffered through faulty surveys in the past will be among matters considered at a meeting of the Edmonton Town Planning Association in the near future.

One plan is to build a highway through the proposed civic centre which will require removal of some buildings.

Ice-House Collapses Smothering Youth

Chums With Fractured Arms Travel Far to Seek Aid

St. Johns, Que.—The inner roof of an empty ice-house collapsed here, carrying with it seven boys who were romping in sawdust.

One of the boys, Jean P. Sabourin, aged 13, lost his life when he was buried in sawdust and smothered. Five others were injured, while one escaped unharmed. The obys were so terrified when they found they could not "awaken" Sabourin that, forgetting their injuries, they ran over a quarter of a mile to his house to summon assistance. One of the boys had both arms fractured and another a severe cut in the foot. "We didn't notice it, we were so frightened," one of them explained later.

The injured were: Georgs Normandin, 11, fractured arm and bruises; Marcel Marchand, 8, cut foot; Lucien Goyette, 11, bruised side and possible internal injuries; Jules Aube, 12, both arms fractured; Andre Goyette, 8, cut foot; Paul Normandin, 9, was unhurt.

There was a double roof, the inner one covering the ice and bearing a thick layer of sawdust to prevent the cold air from escaping. Above the whole was the outer roof of the building. The boys were playing in the section between the two roofs, when part of the lower roof, measuring 20 by 25 feet, collapsed, shooting the boys and the sawdust down to the floor. The boys picked themselves up, and noticed that young Sabourin was lying still. "We tried to awaken him and we shook him. When we saw that he did not come to we got scared and ran to his house, a quarter of a mile away," Georges Normandin said.

Police and citizens rushed to the scene and quickly located the body, but artificial respiration failed to revive the boy.

None of the injured lads were in danger, it was stated. It was estimated that 500 cubic feet of sawdust fell with the victims when the collapse occurred.

Nautilus Silent For Four Days

Fears for Safety of Wilkins' Craft Are Now Entertained

Oslo, Norway.—Serious concern was felt here Thursday for the safety of the Nautilus, Sir Hubert Wilkins' Arctic submarine, when no news of the ship had been received for four days.

Authorities instructed all amateur radio operators to try to establish communication with the submarine. All official wireless stations have been calling the Nautilus without result for several days.

The captain of the Norwegian coaling steamer Ingerte, reported that he heard faint signals from the submarine, but that these were too weak to be read. The suggestion was made here that there signals might have come from the submarine's portable transmitter which may have been carried out on the ice by the crew.

The Board of Fisheries has instructed a sealing ship which is now at Longyear City, Spitzbergen, to remain there in readiness for a relief dash if necessary. The admiralty also considered the possibility of sending the sloop Fridtjof Nansen, now at Harstad, County Nordland, to try to locate the Nautilus, but no definite decision was made.

SOVIET TAKES A HAND.

Moscow.—The Government ordered all Sovjet ships at ports in northern waters to take all possible steps to communicate with Sir Hubert Wilkins' Arctic submarine Nautilus. Amateur radio operators also were urged to listen for signals from the submarine.

Sockholm.—In spite of the trade depression the Swedish post office showed a greater surplus in 1930 than in 1929, or $44,073,600, which means an increase of $160,800, as compared to the year before.

No Single Remedy For World Crisis

Feeling of Confidence should be Spread, Says Committee at Geneva

Geneva.—The economic co-ordinating committee of the European commission declared recently that the psychological factor dominates the economic crisis throughout the world and that no single remedy is likely to bring relief from the prevailing difficulty.

The committee's declaration was made in a statement adopting recommendations which will be submitted to the commission in plenary session.

In proposing a number of measures for improving the present condition of international commerce, industry and finance, the committee called on the politicians to spread through the world by all possible means, "a general feeling of confidence."

The European committee's chief recommendations to the commission may be summarized thus:

The ultimate goal of efforts for economic alleviation should be to make Europe a single market for the products of all countries of the world. This contemplates the development of an economic and customs union embracing all Europe.

The League of Nations should take a more active part in facilitating the issue of state loans of an international character.

The League's finance committee should co-operate with the bank for international settlements and national treasury officials in extending financial assistance to needy states.

The European commission should study the proposal for creating an international bank for granting long term credits.

The European commission should study the possibility of encouraging commercial treaties embodying preferential tariff rates, provided these treaties are publicly negotiated and do not injure third parties.

To reduce unemployment an international placement bureau should be created. A technical conference on placing labor should be convoked.

The Soviet economic non-aggression pact should be profoundly studied.

Brazil Dumps 1,250,000 Bags of Coffee Into Sea

The Brazilian government has burned between $5,000,000 and $10,000,000 worth of coffee to eliminate a part of the enormous surplus of the product, according to statistics compiled by the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange. It is estimated that approximately 1,250,000 bags of coffee, with 132 pounds in each bag, were destroyed between September, 1930, and August of the current year. Although some of the coffee was dumped into the sea, most of it was burned.

From September, 1930, to June, 1931, the Sao Paulo Coffee Institute destroyed 479,000 bags. This was all low grade coffee that was confiscated by the institute or given up by producers, who, in return, were granted permission to ship out an equivalent amount of high grade coffee above the regulated export quotas.

Early in June the Brazilian government put into effect the "ten-shilling" coffee export tax, which provided that a special tax of ten shillings be placed on each bag of coffee for export. The money levied from the tax was to be used for the purchase of higher grade Santos coffee for destruction under the supervision of the National Coffee Council. During the last three months the council has destroyed 770,000 bags of coffee purchased with the money from the ten-shilling tax.

Maple Sugar Products Cut 50 Per Cent. 1931

Quebec.—A decrease of 50 per cent. is shown in the production of maple sugar products in the province of Quebec this year as compared with 1930, it was announced recently by Cyrille Vaillancourt, chief of the Maple Products Service of the Department of Agriculture. The crop this year had a value of $1,817,000 as against $3,611,783 last year. The decrease in production this year is attributed to lack of rain during last Fall and Winter, and absence of night frosts this Spring.

Chinese Newsboys Ordered to be Silent

Tientsin, China.—Chinese newsboys who shout "paper" and cry out the contents of the newspapers as a means of attracting the people to buy them, have been ordered by the local officials to sell their newspapers "silently."

It is charged that these newsboys advertise aloud the sensational stories and often contradict what is actually published in the newspapers. It is said that in times of political upheavals, such shouting on the streets causes fear and unrest among the populace.

Rock Study Vastly Extends Earth's Age

Geologist Turns Back Clock Seven Hundred Million Years

Washington.—A vast aeon—known to geologists as Lipalian time—150,000,000 years—appears to have dropped completely out of history, according to Professor Charles Schuchert of Yale University in a report issued by the National Research Council.

Search the world over has failed to reveal the slightest clue to the errant millenniums during which some of the most momentous events in the history of life on earth occurred. The pages of rock on which the long story of life was written before man began to record events seems to have been torn out and thrown away for this period.

The record of time, Prof. Schuchert explains, runs back in fairly good order through the period known as Cambrian time, about 500,000,000 years ago. Then there was abundant life in the great oceans. Many of the creatures had hard shells. They died, sank to the bottom and were buried in the mud. Through the millenniums the seas disappeared, the bottom mud became rock and was raised up into mountains.

MOLLUSC DAYS.

The fossils of the sea creatures were embedded in the rock, so that geologists today know what they looked like and what families they belongd to. Some of them were relatively enormous creatures, measuring from six to eight inches. They represent practically all the divisions of the animal kingdom now found in the seas except those with backbones such as fish, mammals and reptiles.

Seen in a museum exhibit today these lords of creation a half billion years ago look like very primitive creatures. But they are probably closer to the highest developed forms of life today than to the most complex forms which preceded them and of which there is record. Just behind them lie the lost millenniums during which animal life was beginning to take on the evolutionary processes which resulted in the mammals of many millions of years later.

In the next oldest known rocks, Prof. Schuchert says, there have been found traces of some primitive sponges, some tiny protozoa-like creatures known as foraminifera, trails of worm-like creatures and of some unknown invertabrate animal. There are also limestone deposits of peculiar formation laid down by tiny plants, the blue-green algae, who are still busy in American rivers after almost a billion years. There also are traces of bacteria. Even some of these were already high in the scale of life, especially the worm-like creatures known as annelids.

SKELETON GROWTH MYSTERY.

But, Prof. Schuchert says, "not one of the known animals had yet learned to use lime for skeleton structures, either external or internal, and this when there must have been present a highly diversified mass of invertebrates. We know that the pre-Cambrian seas must have been replete with lime salts in solution. If any of the animals had used lime they certainly would have been recovered by this time. This absence of skeletons is all the more astonishing since it would seem that there must have been an abundance of animals feeding on other animals and on plants."

Now, he points out, it must have taken a very long time for animals to have learned to make skeletons—either shell or bones. Consequently the Cambrian creatures and the crawling worms of the next oldest rocks cannot have touched each other in time.

So he says, "Lipalian time stands for the unrecovered interval during which the marine animals evolved mostly from very small floating and swimming forms without exterior skeletons into the much larger and highly diversified life of the Cambrian. How long Lipalian time lasted can only be guessed, since we have no guidance at all from radio-active minerals or from rates of organic evolution.

"There was no more fundamental evolution during the whole of the paleozoic period (the time of the beginning of life) than is indicated by this interval, and we have guessed its duration to be of the order of 300,000,000 years. To be on the safe side in our table we have allowed only half as much time and the future alone can tell how near our guess is to the truth."

The evolution of living creatures, Prof. Schuchert points out in his report on the possibility of determining the age of the earth from fossils and from the thickness of rocks laid down by sedimentation, appears to have gone on at such a variable rate throughout history that it is a very unreliable guide to elapsed time.

Thus certain sea shells now living can be traced back practically without change for 400,000,000 years and the race shows no signs of degenerating through old age. On the other hand snail shells in an artificial lime created in Wisconsin evolved into a recognizably different species in sixty years.

On the basis of deposits of sedimentary rock, Prof. Schuchert made up a calendar of the earth's age back to the beginning of the Archeozoic area—about 700,000,000 years.

A Happy Normandy Village

"For a good apple year the year has not been too good, but for a bad apple year the year has not been too bad." That is the classical phrase attributed to Norman apple-growers. It is heard in a thousand variants. You can never get nearer the facts. Things might have been better, but then they might have been worse. On the positive side the Norman philosophy is lacking. There are no enthusiasms. Superlatives are eschewed. Everything is comparative.

In my Norman village I constantly heard the non-committal reply. The workmen were putting up an elaborate kitchen with incredible complication of pipes to carry hot water from room to room; and were painting and carpentering and generally making my old mill inhabitable in order to make it habitable.

Would they have finished in a week? Surely they were approaching the end? They had already been a month and a half longer than they had led me to believe. Could I rely on them to complete their task by Wednesday?

"Why, as to that," said the enrepreneur, blowing up his forge, "as to that, it will certainly be well advanced."

"What do you mean by well advanced? Do you mean it will be finished or not?"

"I cannot say it will be finished, and I cannot say it won't be finished. It will be well advanced."

"But you have told me that for more than a month. What am I to think?"

"It will be well advanced."

Wordsworth could not induce the child to alter her simple reckoning: "We are seven." I could not induce the entrepreneur to abandon his phrase: "It will be well advanced."

"Well,' said the Mayor of the tiny commune, "my advice would be—stay on the spot if you would have the house made ready. They have so much work to do that they rush from one place to another. They do the most urgent jobs. They will never believe that your job is urgent if you do not take up your abode. Then when they see you camping in confusion they will take pity on you."

I thanked him for his counsel. "Yours must be a happy village if there is more than enough work for everybody!"

He shook his head. "For a village where there is plenty of work there is not too much cause for complaint," he said.

The sun shone on the red roofs, irregular, old, rain-soaked and sunburnt. The hills on the other side of the river were green enamelled. Their meadows were rich and shining. Here and there a cloud, white in the sky, cast deep shadows on the grass. The trees that crowned the slopes showed every hue from pale gold to black. The orchards on the right were heavy with fruit. For a village where nature was both generous and charming, where there was employment for all, there was little room for grumbling.—From "Between the River and the Hills," by Sisley Huddleston.

The West Through Eastern Eyes

Here we have an interesting and informative article written by Kimpei Sheba, city editor of the Japan "Times and Mail," wherein we view customs and habits of the Occident as seen by the Orient.

Just as our Japanese days appear unaccountable to you, so your Occidental ways are equally unaccountable to us. Suppose I set down a few of the customs, observed during a brief stay in the United States, which seem strange to a Japanese.

It is early morning in a typical American home. You are resting on soft pillows and spring beds. We are different even while we sleep, since in Japan people lie on hard beds and rest their heads on firm pillows, those used by the women encased in wooden sheaths. Presently you awake. You sit up and stretch yourselves, facing the foot of the bed. As we in Japan rise, we make a turn so that when we stretch ourselves, we have our faces turned in the opposite direction, toward the pillow. In brushing your teeth you devote as little time as possible to the undertaking. Our countrymen take as long as possible. In fact it is not uncommon for a Japanese of the lower classes to be seen out on a morning's work in the neighborhood of his home, brushing his teeth. After washing your faces, you use a dry towel. We wipe our faces with a moist towel.

As the typical American family is about to sit down to breakfast, the mistress of the house may call to her husband, "Harry, won't you run upstairs and bring me something to put over my shoulders?" And Harry runs up. In a Japanese family, Mr. Sato would be sitting at the breakfast table while his wife was still busy in the kitchen. As she came into the dining room Mr. Sato might call out: "Run up, will you, and fetch my glasses." Mrs. Sato would obediently hasten upstairs.

Yes, it seems we do things in exactly the opposite way—even to saying grace. In American homes, if grace is said, it is before food that is eaten by the living. In Japan prayers are recited only before food that is proffered to the dead. And, when we say grace, we have our faces turned up, while you pray with your faces turned down. American and European women in mourning wear black dresses, whereas in Japan women wear only white during this sad period. On the other hand, black is the conventional costume worn at weddings in Japan.

Your people develop love before marriage, and it very frequently happens that this love grows less intense as the months pass after the ceremony. Our people frequently develop love only after the marriage ceremony is over; for in the majority of cases the man and woman are not sufficiently well acquainted even to hold hands during the period of their engagement.

A Japanese carpenter pulls his saw, while an American pushes his. In using a pair of scissors your women-folk operate the handle end, while we push together the tips. You stand your umbrellas with the handle end up; we stand ours with the handle down. In carrying a closed umbrella you hold the handle, but we dangle ours from a string attached to the opposite end. In entering a house you first of all take off your headgear. The first thing we do is to remove our footgear. If you have brought a guest home with you and he has a gift, he presents it immediately. Our custom is to leave the gift on parting. In presenting the gift, you inform your host that it is something very nice and you hope he will like it. In Japan we assure our friend that anything we may choose to present as a gift is really of no value and we know he will have little use for it. You open a gift in the presence of the person who gives it to you. In Japan this is never done. Our "after dinner" speeches are made before dinner. In Japan people will wait hours, drinking tea before commencing to eat but will leave as soon as the meal is over. In western countries people object to waiting for their meals but will stay for hours after their meals, drinking coffee. In the Occident people are supposed to eat all that is on their plates. This is bad taste in Nippon. You stand as a sign of respect, but in Japan it is disrespectful to stand—one must always sit on the floor in greeting a guest. Again, in America it is regarded as undignified to have no furniture in a room. In Japan it is undignified to have furniture in a room.

We differ not only in our actions but in the way in which we look at things. For instance, a European visitor to Nippon finds a litter of unwanted puppies left in the bushes. He cannot help protesting against such cruelty. On the other hand, when a Japanese hears that in western countries unwanted pups are killed, he will ask, "How does any one know that the helpless puppies prefer to die?" Told that it is better for the puppies to be painlessly put to death than to be left in the bushes where their chance of keeing alive is very small indeed, he is certain to ask: "Why then are not famine-stricken people in China killed painlessly?"

Take the case of aged people. Elderly folk in America generally do not live with their grown-up children. In Japan the children out of consideration for their parents, prefer suffering a little discomfort—often it is a great deal of discomfort—to having their parents live apart from them.

Another matter in which the Japanese differ is in smiling when they are reprimanded. This has caused a great deal of misunderstanding between foreign employers and Japanese employes—almost as much misunderstanding as the Japanese custom of actually saying no when yes is meant, and vice versa.

Visitors to Japan frequently find it difficult to keep from laughing outright on observing some of the ridiculous things we do in an effort to affect western ways. This is especially true in the case of English signboards. "Ladies have fits inside," you may read over a dressmaker's shop; or "Have your head cut here," over a barber shop.

When the first train was run between Tokyo and Yokohama, the late Meiji Emperor attended the memorable ceremony. To be in keeping with the wave of westernization that then swept the country, the Emperor planned to ride to the station in a horse-drawn carriage rather than in the court palanquin. The only difficulty in using a carriage was to find a suitable livery for the driver. After a search in the official wardrobe, a foreign garment was discovered which seemed to answer very well. It was dignified, had buttons and decorative stripes and was said to have been bought at a foreign auction in Yokohama. So His Majesty rode in his new carriage, and all seemed well to Japanese eyes. But it was difficult for foreigners among the spectators to keep from laughing, and naturally so. The driver was in pajamas!

But there are things in America which seem just as ridiculous to Japanese eyes. For instance, in New York recently, when I happened to be walking on Fifth Avenue, I beheld a sight which almost caused me to hold my sides lest I burst from laughter. For what should I behold in midday and in the very heart of the greatest city in the world but an American woman pridefully walking along, wearing a dark blue Japanese coat, or "happi," on the back of which, in flaring red Japanese characters six inches in height, were the words "Fire Extinguisher." It was a coat patterned after those issued by the Tokyo fire department.

So, hereafter, to the American visitor in Japan who exclaims, "Gosh, you're a strange people!" permit me to reply—in a spirit of friendship, of course—"The same to you."

Girls should set a good example if they want young men to follow them.

SHE FAINTED AFTER FOOD

Over-acidity and Flatulence

Nurse's Acute Suffering Corrected by Kruschen

"A nurse's life does not leave much time to spare, but having derived much benefit from taking Kruschen, it's only fair to you and others to pass the facts on.

"I was suffering from over-acidity and flatulence to such an extent that I was completely ill. I couldn't take food. The very thought of it nauseated me. When I actually forced myself to take something, I would be wretchedly ill, and faint afterwards. I really began to feel life was not worth while.

"I have now taken Kruschen for 12 months, and I have no doubt that it has righted my digestive system. I am now quite fit and able to work with vigor again. I recommend the same treatment to those of my patients who are likely to benefit by it."—Nurse E. S.

Indigestion is caused by a failure in the flow of the gastric or digestive juices. As a result, your food, instead of being assimilated by your system, simply collects and ferments inside you, producing harmful acid poisons. Start the digestive juices flowing normally, and you'll not have to suffer any more. And that is just how Kruschen Salts brings swift and lasting relief from indigestion. The immediate effect of the six mineral salts in Kruschen is to promote the healthy flow of the vital juices of the body. And that means a blessed end to Indigestion and a renewed and whole-hearted enjoyment of your food without the slightest fear of having to pay the old painful penalty. And more! You will soon experience the tonic influence of Kruschen upon your bloodstream. You will begin to feel a new being—happier, heartier, and hungrier than you ever felt in your life.

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at all Drug Stores at 45c. and 75c. per bottle.

... give child Castoria

FUSSY, fretful, can't sleep, won't eat.... It isn't always easy to find just where the trouble is with a young child. It may be a stomach upset; it may be sluggish bowels.

But when little tongues are coated and there is even a slight suspicion of bad breath—it's time for Castoria!

Castoria, you know, is a pure vegetable preparation especially made for babies and children. When Baby cries with colic or is fretful because of constipation, Castoria brings quick comfort, and, with relief from pain, soothes him to restful sleep. For older children—up through all the school years, Castoria is equally effective in helping to right irregularities. Just give it in larger doses. What a comfort Castoria is to mothers!

OBITUARY

Dr. James Eakins

The death of Dr. James Eakins, aged 83 years, occurred Wednesday evening at 9.30 o'clock at his home, 102 Hitchcock street, following an extended illness. In July, 1927, Dr. Eakins was taken seriously ill, suffering from angina pectoris. Following his severe illness he rallied, recovering to the extent that he was able to enjoy his home and short motor drives about the city, although he was never able to walk the short distance to the downtown section.

Only last Thursday, August 20th, Dr. Eakins was out for a drive, and on Sunday enjoyed dinner at his home with his daughter. Shortly after midnight Sunday he became dizzy and felt ill, and became totally incapacitated, rapidly losing strength, death claiming him Wednesday.

Dr. Eakins' death will cause sadness to the many friends made in a personal and professional manner during his 45 years of residence in Alpena. He was known and loved by sick and well and when he was called on a professional call, he never hesitated regardless of weather, distance and other existing conditions. His friendly charm put all at ease in his presence.

On November 13, 1848 Dr. Eakins was born in Streetsville, Ontario, where he spent his early boyhood days but received most of his education in Toronto. He graduated from the Toronto Military Academy with the rank of Captain and later received his medical degree from the Toronto University.

At the age of 21 in May, 1869 he married Miss Elizabeth Margaret Ramsay, of Toronto, shortly after which they went to Huron County, Michigan, where they made their home for a number of years, Dr. Eakins practicing his profession. While residing in Huron County he also served two terms in the Michigan State Legislature, and was active in other public affairs and organizations. In April, 1886, Dr. and Mrs. Eakins came to Alpena, since which time they have continuously made their home here.

At the time of his death Dr. Eakins was a member of the Alpena Lodge No. 199, A.F. and A.M.; Thunder Bay Chapter, No. 74; Alpena Commandery, Knights Templar, No. 34, and a Noble of the Mystic Shrine; and of the Alpena County Medical Society. Dr. Eakins had been active in these organizations for many years until illness prevented, and the past two years had been an honorary member in them all. In the past he had also been affiliated with many other organizations from which he withdrew due to ill health several years ago.

Surviving Dr. Eakins are his daughter, Miss Ethel O. Eakins, at home, and one son, Charles R. Eakins, Moline, Illinois, who is expected to arrive in the city Friday. Mrs. Eakins' death occurred March 9th, 1924.—The Alpena News, Alpena, Mich.

Deceased was the eldest brother of Mrs. Wm. Crawford, Islington; Mr. J. R. Eakins, and the late William Eakins, Streetsville.

Francis A. Jones

The death took place today of Francis Arthur Jones, well-known gardener of Islington for the past 40 years, who was in his fifty-sixth year. He was a native of Kidderminster, England, coming to Canada as a youth, and at the time of his death he was one of the oldest patrons of the St. Lawrence Market, in Toronto. He is survived by an invalid widow, who before her marriage was Agnes Zarfass; one son, Harry, and one daughter, Eleanor, both at home. The funeral will take place on Wednesday afternoon to Park Lawn Cemetery, following a service at the residence on Islington Avenue.

COOKSVILLE

Stanley Clair, Waterloo, sustained a cut knee when he threw his motorcycle to the pavement to avoid a rear end collision with a car driven by Mrs. Bernice Shannon, Vaughan Rd., Toronto.

Mrs. Shannon was forced to the shoulder of the road by a light roadster which cut in in front of her as she was descending Cooksville Hill, Clair was attended by Dr. Godfrey, Cooksville. Traffic Officer J. I. Mitchell investigated.

W. H. Williams, Brantford, was forced into the ditch with two new cars, one of which was towing on a tow bar, when a car cut out from behind a string of slower moving autos and attempted to pass. The cars which Williams was in charge of were badly smashed, but he escaped uninjured, although his cars knocked a telephone pole off its base.

L. R. Eddy, Toronto, driving a heavy truck, fell foul of the law through acting the Good Samaritan. He stopped and pulled an unfortunate motorist out of the ditch, only to be warned that a license is required to perform such acts.

Saturday night, Thos. Bell, Mary St., Toronto, after pulling out to pass Robert Lowrey, Campbellville, crashed into the rear of Lowrey's car. Traffic Officer Ted Kyle, Cooksville, laid a reckless driving charge against Bell.

TORONTO TP. COUNCIL

A borrowing by-law for the sum of $100,000 was passed at the regular meeting of Toronto Township Council in session at Cooksville on Saturday.

Little work outside the routine passing of accounts was done, amongst the motions being a resolution to appoint the following the Board of Management of Erindale Community Hall; Reeve L. H. Pallett, William Dennison, V. G. Hector, Morris, Mrs. H. Magill, Mrs. O'Brien and Miles Vokes.

The tenders for cutting the hill at Streetsville on the village's westerly approach, was awarded to Leoni Construction Co., Toronto. Some 7,000 cubic yards of earth have to be moved, the contract price being 18 cents per cubic yard.

An Interesting Exhibit

The O.A.C. exhibit at the C.N. E. presents in a graphic way the idea that, although the present worldwide depression renders it impossible for farmers to make much money, still there is real wealth in the farms of Ontario.

The exhibit consists of three sections, which are unified under the title Farm Wealth. The first section entitled 'Food is Wealth,' illustrates the fact that much of the food used by the farmers' family is obtained directly from the farm, and even hard times cannot effect this supply. It also calls attention to the fact that the College has produced and has given to the farmers of the Province many high producing varieties of crops which added greatly to farm wealth.

The second section with the title 'Time is Wealth' sets forth the idea that though money may be scarce, the farmer still has as much time as ever, and shows how time may be utilized to the best advantage by the use of labour-saving devices.

The third section under the title 'Beauty is Wealth' presents the fact that, while farm folks may envy some of the good things of city life, they may, by a little effort and with almost no expenditure of cash, have beautiful home surroundings that would be the envy of city people.

CLARKSON

When the auto of Paul McCarthy, of 16 Otter avenue, attempted to pass a United States machine on the Lower Middle road, near Clarkson, it swerved to the north side of the roadway and was wrecked against a concrete culvert. As a result McCarthy received a fractured skull; Miss Dorothy Smythe, 293 Sumach street, had her right arm fractured in addition to severe face and body lacerations, and Frank Perry, 16 Otter Avenue, and Elizabeth Hearne, 81 Pembroke st., were cut by flying glass.

McCarthy was hurried to Oakville by Rev. W. B. Carswell, who was on his way to preach at Port Credit, and he was later rushed to St. Joseph's Hospital. The others in the party were given attention by Dr. L. G. Brayley, of Port Credit, and were also later taken to hospital.

Some folks think we don't iron

In the beginning—some years ago — this laundry did wet wash almost exclusively. To-day there are eight different services from which you may choose, each one taking the wash one step nearer completion. This permits a housewife to select as much or little help with her family wash problem as suits her and pay accordingly. All washings are done in rain-soft water changed ten times during the process, and at no stage is there any rubbing—simply a tumbling in pure soap suds and many rinsings. A phone message will bring you a folder explaining the eight services in detail—or stop any one of our courteous driver - salesmen in the tidy black and red trucks

Nita was worried . . . she could not imagine where she had lost her bracelet—in the hotel or on the journey home.

"I can't think what I could have done with it," she kept telling her mother.

"Why not telephone to the hotel," mother suggested. "It's after eight-thirty now and a call will only cost a few cents."

Imagine Nita's joy when the hotel clerk told her that the bracelet had been found in her room and would be mailed to her right away.

Thanks to her mother's suggestion, Nita's anxiety was relieved at once . . . and the cost of the call was considerably less than her taxi fare from the station.

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS

Don Ellsworth's wife, formerly the actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears, leaving no trace. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, learns that their married life has been very unhappy.

Peter Piper, Herald reporter, while trying to get an interview with Dr. Cavanaugh, meets Barbara, the attractive daughter, and finds she was engaged to Ellsworth before his marriage.

An unidentified body has been burned in the mash until it is entirely unrecognisable except for the fact that it is a woman. Dr. Cavanaugh tells Peter that the body found in the marsh is that of Sheila O'Shay; Barbara faints when she hears this. Peter, who is half in love with Barbara, suspects that she knows something about the murder. Mrs. Kane, Sheila O'Shay's waiting woman, is arrested, and Peter is sent to interview her.

CHAPTER XX.—(Cont'd.)

With a smile half indulgent, half wistful, the doctor led the way down the corridor to the jail elevator. Youth! When a man looks thus tenderly on the ebullience of youth, Dr. Cavanaugh reflected, he is growing old. The time had long past when any of life's indicents could make him shout "Whoopee!" The greatest psychiatrist in America glanced briefly at the newspaper reporter whose pay envelope held $50 every week, and sighed a sigh of reminiscent envy.

The long bare room in the women's quarters of the city jail smelled vaguely of whitewash. The matron, with clanking keys at her belt, and an air professionally maternal, ushered in Mrs. Kane and faded into a corner. Peter grinned. It must be rather a strain to assume a motherly air with the redoubtable person who marched to the table when the two men had seated themselves, and faced them with a belligerent stare.

"Mrs. Kane," Dr. Cavanaugh began with an air of kindly severity, "you have made a mistake in judgment."

"You ain't got a thing on me, not a thing," Mrs. Kane snapped, her teeth flashing up and down with more than usual rapidity. "They can talk till doomsday, and I'll say the same. You got that hair by hook or by crook, but how can you prove that it belonged to Miss O'Shay? Answer me that!"

"A good point," Dr. Cavanaugh conceded blandly. "But if the hair which I took from your dress does not connect you with Miss O'Shay, it does connect you with the woman found, supposedly murdered, in the tule marsh. Things might be rather uncomfortable for you if you refuse to admit that the hair is hers."

Mrs. Kane's mouth opened, closed again with a click, and finally reopened.

"Anybody that thinks I'd harm Miss O'Shay is a fool," she muttered. "All you policemen are fools, anyway."

"Not necessarily," Dr. Cavanaugh argued cheerfully. "But I'm not a policeman. Let us suppose that you have Miss O'Shay's best interests at heart—that you believed you were best protecting her by refusing to tell any of her affairs to outsiders. In the circumstances, I still think you made a mistake in judgment. The police are bound to find out—or at least to try to find out. And in trying they may uncover—all sorts of things."

Mrs. Kane, who had stood rigidly erect, sat down very suddenly in the chair by the table, as if a scaffolding under her voluminous garments had collapsed. She had had a sleepless night, and despite her determination, she looked badgered and perturbed. The doctor made no move to go to her assistance, but continued to look across at her with steady, placid gaze. He didn't fuss; he didn't shout at her and point his finger: he didn't put words into her mouth and demand "Isn't that so?" He seemed to have some sense. Why not tell him—a little, anyhow? Enough to get those questioning men away from her—those men to whom she would not talk, though they kept at her for a year!

"They'd better have left things alone," she protested sulkily. "What good does it do to rake everything up? If that was Miss O'Shay who was found in the marsh, you can bet there was some scandal back of it. There always was," she added bitterly, and followed her words with a vehement click, like the snapping spring of a trap.

"Still," the doctor suggested tranquilly, "some scandals are worse than others."

"I suppose they are," Mrs. Kane admitted grudgingly.

The doctor continued to gaze serenely into space. Peter was scribbling indecipherable notes on a sheet of copy paper held under the table. The heavy breathing of the matron, who was indulging in what she euphemistically called a "cat nap" in the corner, was the only audible sound in the room.

Mrs. Kane also closed her eyes for a moment; but when she opened them they were alert, with the sharp glint of jet.

"I'll tell you this, if you want to know," she said acridly, "though I never thought as I'd live to tell it to a single soul. That whipper-snapper, Mr. Ellsworth, didn't want to marry Miss O'Shay. He was wild about her at first—and he wasn't the only man who was that, I'm telling you—and then he cooled off and wanted to back out. They had a terrible fight. But anybody that gets into a fight with Miss O'Shay knows he's been in a real scrap. He flung out and said he never wanted to see her again. And then she went to a lawyer, she did, and drew up the nicest little breach of promise suit you ever saw. You bet she'd got it all down in writing, too, and had kept the letters. It took just one look at that legal document and the evidence to bring him round. She kept the papers, just to remind him if he ever got funny, and they're in the wall safe in her bedroom to this day. If you're looking for one person that wouldn't be too displeased to have Miss O'Shay out of the way, it strikes me you'd better page Mr. Don Ellsworth!"

Swishing her long skirts, Mrs. Kane rose to her feet, with what could only be described as a flounce.

"Thanks," said Dr. Cavanaugh, quite unruffled by this outburst. "I'll do that. I am sure that your information will prove extremely valuable."

Peter had also risen to his feet. There wasn't a chance in a hundred, he told himself, but you never could tell till you tried.

"By the way, Mrs. Kane," he said, speaking for the first time, "I've a camera man waiting just outside the door. I'm a newspaper man, and you know we always have to have attractive pictures to go with our stories. So long as this case is in the papers, anyhow, won't you let us have your picture to dress it up a bit?"

With an amazement that almost robbed Peter of the power of action, he saw Mrs. Kane pat her sausage roll of varnished hair.

"Well, now," she said, "I ain't rightly fixed for a picture.

But Peter was already shaking the matron by the shoulder.

"Hurry up and open the door for the man in the hall, ma," he whispered. "Your prize prisoner is going to pose for a flash!"

"I suppose you'd like me to smile? Dear me, that flashlight thing is sure to make me jump a foot!"

"Sure!" said Peter irrepressibly. "Look pleasant, right towards the camera, please. That's it—shoot!"

As the jail elevator rumbled downwards, Peter turned to Dr. Cavanaugh.

"Whoever would have thought she'd fall for a line like that?" he exclaimed. "Gee, human nature's funny, isn't it?"

"So I've oserved," Dr. Cavanaugh agreed imperturbably. "But if you'd loookd at her hair,. you wouldn't have been so surprised. No woman dyes her hair without a reason—or shall we say without faith? You're the first person, I suppose, who has flattered Mrs. Kane for a long time. You justified her faith. And now, I suppose, she'll be pursuing you, to make sure of her conquest."

"God forefend!" gasped Peter. "I hope they keep her parked in jail!"

CHAPTER XXI.

Peter Piper stood with his finger hovering over the doorbell, in a state of acute and unaccustomed embarrassment. Peter's finger usually attacked doorbells without hesitancy. He cocked his head slightly to one side and observed that tentative member with detachment, as if it did not belong to him.

"Shucks!" he admonished it with a shake of the head which tilted his disreputable soft felt hat even farther over one eyebrow. "Punch, you idiot, punch! You can only get kicked out, and heaven knows, that's no novelty."

The doorway where Peter stood was rather impressive, as doorways go; but Peter was unimpressed by grandeur. Too many mahogany doors had swung open to him—swung open upon suicide, murder, embezzlement, the downfall of ambition, the price of folly. The glamor and the awe of wealth had long ago lost all power to affect him—he had followed the same story too often across Khorassan carpets and splintery bare boards. Yet, for some reason Peter was undeniably nervous.

But then, Peter had never before attempted a formal social call on a young lady.

In Peter's set you did not make calls. If you liked a girl you said casually, "What do you say we stay downtown to dinner tonight and do a show?" Then you "bummed" two tickets from the drama editor, and that was that.

But Barbara bothered him. You couldn't say a thing like that to Barbara. Barbara probably went to her shows in box parties—without the intervention of a drama editor. He felt as uncertain of Barbara as if she belonged to a strange and probably hostile savage tribe.

He had no particular respect for her tribal customs, whatever they were—in fact, he had an extremely upstanding respect for his own; but he had to see her again. And for the first time in his varied life, Peter was greatly at a loss as to how to proceed.

Well, the only way to do a thing was to do it. He ought to have asked her first, of course. But you couldn't very well say, "By the way, may I call?" to a girl who has just slumped to the running board of a car in a dead faint.

Elysian

I shall sing songs of lovely things to you
Who lie so still;
For you may wake afraid when shadows creep
Over the hill.
The music of a waterfall,
And children singing,
The loveliness of sea and sky,
And white gulls winging—
These I shal sing to you
When shadows creep.
So that, all unafraid,
You wake from sleep,
And think, perhaps, my song,
The night wind crying,
Or bird wings sweeping by
Where you are lying,
And you shall turn, and stir, and sigh,
And shall not even know 'twas I.

Christie's O-SO-GUD BUTTER PRETZELS

The ADVENTURES of CAPTAIN JIMMY and his Dog SCOTTIE

What came before: Captain Jimmy sees a Chinese pirate junk trying to sink another ship and goes to the rescue in his plane. He swoops down in a surprise attack and leaves the junk in a disabled condition.

The last we saw of her, she seemed to be half full of water. Whether she ever made the shore of China, in the stiffening breeze, is doubtful.

Meanwhile, we circled back toward the little ship. Something white and dense rose from her decks. Smoke! Then a flash of red flame. Sure enough—those villians had set her afire.

As we circled over the doomed vessel, large clouds of heavy white smoke drifted up from the decks. Then, to our dismay, we noticed that the pirates had cut every life boat loose before they fled from the ship, thus taking away the crew's only means of escape.

Back we headed for the freighter and as we passed I dropped a note on her decks. "Ship on fire. No lifeboats. Hurry."

But the captain of the freighter needed no warning. Steam up, he drove his ship with all possible speed. Meanwhile, we circled around and waited, for the water was now too rough to alight.

Fire at sea is a beautiful sight and a dreadful one too. In some way it is like a fire in the country. Unless someone catches it at first, it it almost impossible to put it out, and all you can do is to stand by and watch it burn.

The stern of the little ship now began to blaze brightly and the passengers turned like a mob of fighting madmen, pushing and shoving to get away. Here, the value of discipline and training showed up—for in contrast to the frenzied rush of the passengers, the ships officers remained cool and collected.

Meanwhile, the freighter drew near, the cpatain manoeuvreing his ship so it would approach from the windward of the burning boat. The wind would then be driving the smoke away from the freighter.

For a few minutes we could not understand his plan, then it became clear. He swung his bow around and made it fast to the bow of the burning ship. In a minute more he was taking the passengers off and none too soon for the little ship was fast becoming a raging furnace.

Meanwhile, we spotted a patch of nice smooth water to the lee of the freighter and quickly alighted. In a few minutes the derrick swung us up to the deck and we rushed forward to help in the rescue.

The first sight that greeted our eyes Chung—hanging on for dear life to the nozzle of a fire hose, with a big Filipino sailor, helping him. Just then, one of the ship's officers called the sailor who went away and left only Chung to handle the hose.

Those high pressure hose will wiggle and squirm like snakes and it takes two strong men to control them. You can guess what happened. Once the sailor let go, the hose became alive. Chung didn't dare let go for fear it would fly up and hit him—and he simply couldn't steer it.

Scottie and I rushed forward to help Chung and despite the seriousness of the situation, we had to laugh at the funny picture of all those Chinese scrambling away to escape getting drowned by Chung and his hose.

Spun Glass Now Being Manufactured in Scotland

The first factory in the United Kingdom for the manufacture of "glass silk" (also known as glass wool and spun glass) has begun production in Glasgow, Scotland, according to a recent report issued by the Department of Commerce. Although glass wool has been made for a number of years on the European Continent, this is the first attempt at commercial production in England. The new factory is producing glass wool primarily for heat-insulation used in ships, locomotives and engine rooms.

The glass is prepared by being melted in a furnace and passed through holes from which it is spun in fine silky threads of about one-thousandth of an inch in diameter. The strands cling together, giving the appearance of a delicate veil. In preparation for use, it is made into sheets, strips and mattresses, each form having its own application and uses. The strips are built up in spirals over pipes as they are laid in position, without having to wait until they are heated, as in previous processes.

It is reported that the firm producing this glass product is either in association with or has some agreement with Continental producers, who apparently own the process.

"Little Alley Washings"

Oh, little alley washings
Hung on my neighbour's line,
Criss-crossed above the hot cement,
Unblesed by brief sunshine.

Oh, ragged alley washings
(The poor, oh, Lord, how long?)
You know my neighbour's calloused hands,
Her cheerfulness and song.

So, little shirts and stockings
(Grimly, torn, and few),
You'll never feel the wind from hills
Nor sweet baptism of dew!

Quick Dressmaking

Three-quarters of an hour for sewing a complete dress is certainly worth being registered as a new record. This speed was attained by the winner of a dressmakers' competition in Berlin recently. Half a hundred participants had entered and for about an hour the large hall, where the event took place, was filled with the hum of the fifty sewing machines. The dresses were afterward worn by manikins and sold in an auction, so that even those competitors who were not among the prize winners did not go home empty handed.

Sunday School Lesson

September 13. Lesson XI—Some Missionary Experiences—Acts 14: 8-23. Golden Text—Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.—Matthew 5: 10.

ANALYSIS

I. A CRIPPLE HEALED, Acts 14: 7-10.

II. DEIFIED AND STONED, Acts 14: 11-20a.

III. COMPLETING THE TOUR, Acts 14: 20b-28.

INTRODUCTION.—In Asia Minor the apostles' experiences were, in general outline, the same; preaching first in the synagogues, rejected there, appealing to the Gentiles, received by them, attacked by the unbelieving Jews, finally forced to leave and thereby carry the gospel farther afield.

I. A CRIPPLE HEALED, Acts 14: 7-10.

Tucked away in a remote highland glen, twenty-five miles from Iconium, lay the little Lycaonian town of Lystra. Its people were chiefly native Asians, enough Greeks and Romans to have built a temple of Jupiter, and a few Jews, but not enough to form a synagogue. This country-side was sacred to Jupiter. Was it not in the near vicinity—Phrygia—that he, with his attendant Mercury, once visited an old couple, Philemon and Baucis? The humble peasants alone recognized and entertained their magnificent guests and were by them magnificently rewarded. The populace, however, were solemnly warned that another failure to recognize visiting deity would be properly punished. Into this primitive paganism came the messengers of the gospel.

In the course of his preaching, Paul healed a cripple, v. 8. It was the impact of a superior and dominating mind upon a feebler one. The same kind of thing happens whenever a powerful will acts upon a weaker one. What is the transforming power of God, but the action of Mind and Spirit in human lives?

II. DEIFIED AND STONED, Acts 14: 11-20a.

The cure electrified the whole town. The old legend flashed into these uncultured minds. Slipping into their native tongue, the crowds cried out, "The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men!" Paul and Barnabas, ignorant of the local speech, were conscious only of the enthusiasm. Swiftly the news spread. On it came to the ears of the priest of Jupiter. He was equal to the occasion. Not this time would the populace be caught napping when the gods arrived. Sacrifice must be made.

When the apostles heard of it they immediately stopped the proceedings. "We also are men of like passions with you," they said, and Paul began to preach to them. His address is a fine example of what all preaching should be. He used the knowledge which they possessed to bring them to the knowledge of God.

The work of evangelization was soon interrupted. The persistent hatred of the unbelieving Jews followed the apostles, even to Lystra. The new arrivals had little difficulty in persuading the people that these men were impostors. The Lystrians stoned Paul. He, however, must have managed somehow, in the hail of stones, to protect his temples and his heart. Toward evening, as they watched, his astonished friends saw the body move. "He rose and came into the city." v. 20. One would think it was quite the ordinary thing for men to walk back to their would-be murderers! Most men would have gone in the other direction. Years after, writing to Timothy, whom, as a boy, he had won for Christ in Lystra, Paul said, "I know whom I have believed," 2 Tim. 1: 12. It was that knowledge that kept him steady in Lystra.

III. COMPLETING THE TOUR, Acts 14: 20b-28.

"And the next day he departed with Barnabas to Derbe." Derbe was not far from the "Cilician Gates," the pass which crossed the Taurus Mountains down to Tarsus. Just around the bend of the Mediterranean from Tarsus was Syrian Antioch. It was now Autumn. The travelling season was drawing to a close. After their uninterrupted success in Derbe (v. 21), what more natural than that the two men would head for home?

Not they! Work was still to be done. Back to the cities from which hatred had driven them they went, strengthening the faith of the unsteady Galatians. Paul organized the various groups under elders, and, commending them unto the Lord (v. 23), they made their way across the mountains again, and down to Perga where they stopped to preach. Back in Antioch they told how God had "opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles," v. 27. It was the door which led into the kingdom, but not through the works of Judaism. Many Jews also were converted, 13: 43; 14: 1; 16: 1. Luke evidently not liking Jews, did not say much about them.

Youthful jauntiness perfectly expresses this simple little outfit.

A fascinating scheme made the original. And unbelievably inexpensive. And to the making of it, you'll be amazed. The dress is just a straight one-piece type. It is lengthened by a circular flounce. The white handkerchief linen frill at the neckline and sleeves may be bought already by the yard if you choose. However, pattern provides for same. You'll find the collarless jacket just as easy as A, B, C, to make it.

Silks, light wool and jersey make up attractively.

Style No. 3156 may be had in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20 years, 36 and 38 inches bust.

Size 16 requires 3⅛ yards 35-inch for dress with 1⅛ yards 35-inch for jacket.

Joy

To-day, whatever may annoy,
The word for me is joy, just simple joy;
The joy of life, the joy of flowers,
The joy of bright blue skies;
The joy of rain; the glad surprise,
Of twinkling stars that shine at night,
The joy of winged things on their flight,
The joy of noonday ,and the tried,
True joyousness of eventide;
The joy of labor and of mirth,
The joy of air, and sea, and earth—
The countless joys that ever flow from Him
Whose vast beneficence doth dim
The lustrous light of day,
And lavish gifts divine upon our way,
Whate'er there be of sorrow
I'll put off till to-morrow,
And when to-morrow comes, why then,
'Twill be To-day, and joy again.
—John Kendrick Bangs.

Amusing Anecdotes

It is curious how sometimes question and answer between "grown up" and child entirely miss their mark (reflects Mrs. Keeton Christopher in "Life's Little Laughs"). For instance:

A lady saying to a little girl

"I hear you were born in India—what part?" received the somewhat unexpected reply:

"Oh! all of me."

There are, points out John Hix (in "Strange As It Seems"), 52 cards in a deck and 52 weeks in a year. There are 12 picture cards in a deck and there are 12 months in a year. There are 4 suits in a deck and 4 seasons in a year. There are 13 tricks in a deck and 13 weeks in a quarter. The numbers of the cards in a deck total 365 and there are 365 days in a year.

And, he might have added, the odd trick is the seventh and there are seven days in a week.

"People who talk about 'poor old Pepy's," remarked Edmund Gosse at a celebration of the diarist's birthday, should remember that he was only twenty-six when he commenced his diary." But what interests me more is the pronunciation of his name by the people who talk about Pepys. There are, to my knowledge, three variations: Peeps, Peps and Pep-is. Which is correct I do not know.

• • •

However, in south London, in the Borough of Deptford, which for over 300 years has had close affiliations with the Pepys family, there is a Pepys Road. Should a visitor to Deptford ask to be directed to Peeps or Peps Road, he would be told "There ain't no such road." But should he spell out the name, a smile would come over the face of the native, who would say:

"Oh, you mean Pep-is Road. Why that is down by New Cross Gate!"

Which it is.

Li Hung Chang, famous Chinese statesman, when visiting New York some years ago, was taken for a trip on the subway. Told by his guide that they had to change from a local to an express train, the wondering Chinaman asked why the change was necessary. The guide replied that it would save five minutes.

"But," returned Li, "what are we going to do with the five minutes?"

The guide didn't know. Changing was just a habit, he admitted.

"A disease, you mean," corrected Li Hung.

What would modern diners think of a feast like this—provided at the installation of Archbishop Neville at York in 1467:

A partial list of the food includes 300 quarters of wheat, 300 tuns of ale, 100 tuns of wine, 104 oxen, 6 wild bulls, 1,000 sheep, 304 calves, 304 "pokers," 400 swans, 2,000 geese, 1,000 capons, 2,000 pigs, 103 peacocks, besides over 13,500 birds, large and small, of various kinds.

• • •

In addition there were stags, bucks and roes, 500 and more; 1,500 hot pasties of venison, 608 pikes and breams, 12 porpoises and seals, besides 13,000 dishes of jelly, cold baked tarts, hot and cold custards, and "spices, sugared delicacies, and wafers plentie."

It is true that there were said to have been some 6,000 guests at this famous feast, but a slight calculation shows that the allowance for each was enormous, says William E. Mead (in "The English Medieval Feast"(.

The custard included in the above menu bears no resemblance to the custard of to-day. It was then a serious undertaking, as will be seen from the recipe:

"Take veal and smite in little pieces into a pot and wash it clean; then take fair (i.e. clean) water and let it boil together with parsley, sage, savory, and hyssop cut small enough; and when it is boiling take powdered pepper, cinnamon, cloves, mace, saffron, and let them boil together and a good deal of wine therewith.

• • •

Same custard:

"When the flesh is boiled, take it from the broth all clean, and let the broth cool ;and when it is cold, take eggs, the white and the yolks, and cast through a strainer, and put them into the broth, so many that the broth will be stiff enough. Then make fair coffins and couch three pieces or four of the flesh in a coffin. Then take dates and cut them, and cast thereto. Then take powdered ginger and a little verjuice, and put into the broth and salt. And then put the broth in the coffins, bake a little with the flesh before thou put thy liquor thereon, and let all bake together till it be enough (done). Then (take) it out, and serve forth."

Like most airmen, Captain Frank Hawks, the "Speed King," won't admit to being superstitious, but on his first "wild journey across the United States," as he calls his record flight from Los Angeles to New York, there was a rabbit's foot tightly wired to his airplane. It was the gift of a friend.

"Because I fared so well on that trip, I have kept it ever since though I am not at all inclined to be superstitious,' says Hawks (in the reminiscences "Speed").

Whether rabbits' feet are effective amulets or not, Hawks doesn't pretend to know, but he does think they are not such hot luck-bringers to the bunnies that originally owned them.

Captain Hawks spent five delightful days with Will Rogers not so long ago at the humorist's ranch near Santa Monica, California.

"There are two good-sized boys and a girl in addition to Will and his wife —'Ma' he calls her," says Hawks. "My host's favorite pastime, I discovered, is to go out to the corral back of the house and put in a half hour or an hour roping calves. He is a sure-enough cowpuncher both on and off the stage!"

Invited—As a newspaper correspondent during the World War—to join a destroyer of the famous Dover Patrol for a 24 hours' stretch of duty at sea, Cecil Roberts, the novelist, tells of being on the bridge when a wireless message was delivered to the skipper, who, after reading it crammed it in his pocket. Roberts, scenting a "scoop," was curious as to its contents and tactfully began to question the skipper, but to no avail.

• • •

"I became bold, to the point of inviting a snub," relates Roberts (in his reminiscences "Half Way."). "At last the skipper yielded. He pulled the 'flimsy' out of his pocket and passed it to me. Elated, I peered at it. It read:

"'His Majesty's Ship Blank to His Majesty's Ship Blue; Is the journalist sick yet?'"

Roberts was sick — in more ways than one.

"Beautiful view here. Reminds me so much of Scotland, you know."

"Oh, then you went to that lecture, too?"

Scientists Discover Ancient City Under Black Sea

Moscow, U.S.S.R.—On the southwestern extremity of the Crimean Peninsula, near Sebastopol, the floor of the Black Sea has revealed to Soviet archaeologists an ancient buried city which is believed to have thrived between the fourth and second centuries B.C.

An expedition which was sent there three months ago by the State Academy of Arts reported recently that its operations had uncovered the remains of old Khersoness, the existence of which has long been suspected, but never verified.

About 40 feet under the sea, the expedition's divers and motion picture photographers found the ruins of a city in the shape o a gigantic horseshoe, with walls, towers, houses and under-ground tunnels honeycombing the whole.

Archaeologistsf here believed that the city was destroyed by the gradual sinking of the shores of the sea and by an earthquake.

Stevia Plant Yields Compound 300 Times Sweeter Than Sugar

Paris. — A natural substance 300 times sweeter than cane sugar, rivalling some of the coal-tar products of chemical laboratories, has been shown by two French chemists to consist of a chemical union of common glucose and another compound whih has little or no taste. United, they are intensely sweet; divided, they are not even as sweet as ordinary sugar.

The compound bears the chemical name "stevioside," because it occurs in a South American plant known to botanists as stevia. The plant itself was first introduced to the scientific world about the beginning of the present century; it is a close relative of such familiar North American weeds as boneset, joe-pye-weed, and the plant that causes occasional outbreaks of milkness in the Midwest. After its discovery by Europeans it rapidly acquired the name of "the sweetest plant in the world." A very small piece sufficed to sweeten a cup of coffee or tea.

During the past generation several partially successful attempts have been made to isolate and study the particular substance in the plant that made it so intensely sweet. It has remained, however, for the French chemists, M. Briddel and Lavielle, to accomplish the final purification.

They have discovered, to their surprise, that the sweet crystals of stevioside, upon chemical treatment to remove a part o fthe combined water in them, break apart into about 60 per cent. common glucose and 40 per cent. of a new stuff which they called "steviol." The latter has no taste, but combined with the glucose it produces a most poignantly sweet substance.

M. Briddel and Lavielle made another interesting discovery, the significance of which is not yet clear. If they freeze a 50 per cent. solution of the intensely sweet stevioside they obtain a mat of fine needle-crystals, which contain more chemically combined water than the original substance, and which are only faintly sweet. The sweetness of stevioside seems to depend on the presence of an exact amount of water in combination with the glucose and steviol; a trifle more or a trifle less spoils the effect.

Analysis Reveals Rain Falls Cycles

Existence of wet and dry cycles is revealed by mathematical analysis of the rainfall records of California, Dr. A. F. Gorton of the Scripps Institution of Oceanography reports to the American Geophysical Union.

"Fluctuations of rainfall," he says, "occurs at intervals of from two to three years, five to six years, and twenty-two to twenty-six years, the first being more noticeable in the record of the northern stations and the second in southern California. Los Angeles shows successive wet and dry periods eleven years in length, with a total cycle of approximately twenty-two years. In addition to these there is evidence of a longer cycle of fifty-five to sixty years.

"The most important for forecasting purposes is the five-and-a-half year cycle, especially marked in the records of the southern California station. It is brought out by computing the frequency of occurrence of seasons with two or more consecutive months of decidedly abnormal rain—the San Diego record containing thirteen such seasons in seventy-two years."

The twenty-two year cycle, he points out, appears to be universal while the others may be more dependent on local conditions.

The Summer Goes

How swift the summer goes,
Forget-me-not, pink, rose,
The young grass when I started,
And now the hay is carted,
And now my song is ended,
And all the summer splendid;
The blackbird's second brood
Routs beech leaves in the wood;
The pink and rose have speeded,
Forget-me-not has seeded,
Only the winds that blew,
The rain that makes things new,
The earth that hides things old,
And blessings manifold.

O lovely lily clean,
O lily springing green,
O lily bursting white,
Dear lily of delight,
Spring in my heart again
That I may flower to men.
—John Masefield, The Everlasting Mercy.

When Hope Lies Sick

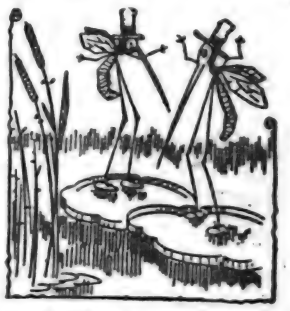
When hope lies sick on bed of fear,
And clouds are dark and days are drear,
Faith waits with cup of loving cheer,
To hasten Hope's reviving.
And Love comes with a golden bowl,
To warm and heal her sister-soul;
She steals a smile past Sorrow's toll
With winsomest contriving.
Ah, Hope look up! Arise! Partake
Of these sweet ministrations;
Thou must be well for their dear sake,
Who bring these inspirations.
Faith's cup of Peace, Love's bowl of grace,
Shall bring the smile back to thy face.
—Charles H. Hunter, in Echoes from the Hills.

Summer Quarters of Blue Goose Found

Discovery of a second breeding ground of the mysterious blue goose on Southampton Island in Hudson Bay is reported in the Auk, organ of the American Ornithological Association, by Dr. George M. Sutton, of Cornell University.

The blue goose is very abundant in winter about the mouth of the Mississippi but, until two years ago, its summer quarters were unknown. It seemed to disappear entirely over the northern horizon. Then a large nesting ground was found in Baffin Land.

On Southampton Island, 600 miles to the westward and with an area of 19,000 square miles, Dr. Sutton found an enormous summer bird population, ling with their close relatives, the many thousands of blue geese minglesser snow geese. The whole island has only about 140 Eskimo inhabitants, so the birds are little molested. Their nests are scattered through the lakes, generally close to the shore. As grass ranges between the numerous soon as the young are able to take care of themselves the geese move inland in family groups, feeding until late August, when all reassemble for the migration southward.



The blue goose family, Dr. Sutton found, is a rather stable organization, the male and female remaining devoted to each other and their young through the summer. Whether these families are broken up after the migration is unknown.

Power

Man has one power in particular, which is not sufficiently dwelt on. It is the power of making the world happy, or at least of so greatly diminishing the amount of unhappiness in it as to make quite a different world from what it is at present. The power is called kindness.—F. W. Faber.

Truth

Truth is always consistent with itself, and needs nothing to help it out; it is always near at hand, and sits upon our lips, and is ready to drop out before we are aware; whereas a lie is troublesome, and sets a man's invention upon the rack.—Tillotson.

"Well, old man, how are things?"

MANITOBA LETTER

348 Colony St.,
Winnipeg, Man., Aug. 29th

Dear Editor:

I have just seen the Army & Navy Vets band passing on their way to the station to entrain for Hamilton, Ont., where a number of delegates, with their band, are meeting in convention; also will attend the Toronto C.N.E.

Last Wednesday evening, is an evening Winnipeg people will never forget—The Tribune has been putting on a community sing-song through the summer, and Wednesday night was a climax for the last time this year. It is estimated there were fifty thousand people there. It was held in the City Park. The Tribune left nothing undone, that could make it a success. It was held near the pavilion. Davidson Thompson, was the master of ceremonies. Band stands were erected, and a choir stand. A choir of one thousand voices occupied it. Another stand with reserved seats for returned soldiers, from hospitals. Busses brought them to the park. Five bands gave us the finest music. It was opened by the High School boys' band from Vancouver. They stopped off for the festival, on their way to Toronto, where they intend to try and bring home credit to their own city. The Vets band, the Legion band, the Salvation Citadels band, Princess Patricia's band, any one which would be hard to beat. I cannot put into words the grandeur of it all, a clear night, with a full moon, and the pleasure the people had from singing old-time songs and when the bands and choir united in the Alleluia Chorus; it seemed to reach clear to the sky, and could be heard a mile away. When singing, "Let Me Call You Sweetheart," Mr. Thompson asked all to sing. Then he asked the men to sing. Then the women, then all together again. He says that is grand. Just keep on feeling like that. And such good order and feeling all through. The street car service said, it was the largest crowd they have ever carried, and less trouble; I expect singing did it. At one of the other sing-songs I heard a little child say—Daddy's singing. I think a good many had forgotten how to sing. Too much cannot be said in appreciation of the Tribune's efforts to help the citizens of Winnipeg to a happier life for a whole year—and a good many hope it will be repeated next year.

Tourists have been very plentiful and so many conventions. Instead of being Winnipeg, I think it should be Pegiwin. I heard a man say. I never dreamed, this was a city so big. Some think the West is still the home of the Indian and the Buffalo. A man from across the line came up to see our city. He hired a taxi to drive him around. He wanted to see all the main buildings; so taxi drove in front of Eaton's. What place is this? Eatons. H'm! h'm! we could put up a building like that in about six days. Then Taxi driver took up to Hudson Bay What building is this? Hudson Bay.

H'm! h'm, take about seven days to put that up, down our way. Taxi driver then drove to the Parliament Buildings. He says what building it that? Taxi driver looked this way, and that way, why he says, I don't know, they weren't there last night. I wish everyone could take as much enjoyment out of the beautiful parks, and fine beaches that I do. Everything is beautiful just now.

31st went up to Kildonan yesterday to visit an old friend in Sun-Set Lodge, owned by the Salvation Army, the home of old ladies. It is a large building, and beautifully situated on the Red Piver. They have a lovely garden. There seemed to be a large number of women in the Home, and most of them seemed very happy. My friend said, she felt quite satisfied with the home, and everybody was so kind, and did their utmost to please. But there was tragedy in some of their faces—as if they were there against their will. But I think they should be truly thankful for such a home.

Premier Bennett gave Winnipeg a short call Saturday. About one thousand went up to parliament buildings to interview him, unemployed and communists—I heard a few discussing the bye-election in Ontario. They were discussing Dr. Manion's speech, and he had this to say—James Woodsworth and his party were just the tail of Parliament. One man said, well if it is the Lion's Tail it will be alright, and it sure turned out to be the Lion's Tail.

Here and There

One thousand men will be employed and over $500,000 expended on highway repairs in Cape Breton and Richmond counties, Nova Scotia, during the coming autumn.

Miss Pauline Garon, Montreal motion-picture queen, formerly of Hollywood, sailed on the Canadian Pacific liner "Montcalm" recently, to make pictures in England and France.

Salmon taken in 1930 from British Columbia waters totalled close on 37,000,000 weighing more than 216,000,000 pounds. Number of fish was 9,500,000 more than in the biggest previous salmon catch year of 1926.

The New Brunswick Government is preparing to face the problem of unemployment on a practical basis this winter and has instituted a registration system through city and town clerks, who will gather full data as to out-of-works and their families.

Sir Lionel Fletcher, captain of the British rifle team, which competed against Canadian shots at Toronto and Ottawa, following the historic Bisley meeting, was warm in praise of Connaught Ranges, on his return to England. It is hoped that another Old Country team will compete in Canada next year.

Queen Helene of Roumania and her sister, Princess Irene of Greece, gave British railroad officials a shock recently, by travelling from London to Scotland, third class. The Queen smilingly declared that she was very comfortable and did not want people to know she was travelling.

The name of Admiral of the Fleet Earl Jellicoe has been added to the long list of distinguished travellers over Canadian Pacific steamship and rail lines. "Hell-fire Jack," as he is affectionately called, arrived in Montreal on August 22, on the liner "Duchess of York", to open the Canadian National Exhibition, at Toronto.

Hector Macdonald, of Montreal, was winner of the prize offered by E. W. Beatty, chairman and president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, for the competition between pipers representing the 17 Scottish militia units of Canada, at the Highland Gathering recently held in the grounds of the Banff Springs Hotel, Banff, Alta.

Among recent guests at Banff were Congressman and Mrs. Frederick R. Lehlback, of Washington, D.C., and Newark, N.J., on their way to the convention of the National Federation of Federal Employees at Seattle. They expressed themselves delighted with their stay at the Banff Springs Hotel, punctuating a journey from Montreal to the Pacific Coast over Canadian Pacific lines.

H. M. King Prajadhipok of Siam, accompanied by Queen Rambai Barni and a numerous suite, has been seeing real western life, with the Banff Spring Hotel as headquarters. He was recently made a member of the Trail Riders of the Canadian Rockies, following a pack-train expedition, and also attended a rodeo staged for him at Mrs. "Bill" Brewster's dude-ranch, at Kananaskis, Alta. His Majesty has also devoted considerable time to photography, golf and fishing. (772)

GUARD YOUR CHILD

It is possible to eradicate diphtheria from Canada. No longer need this disease be feared. No longer need children suffer and die as a result of diphtheria. The menace can be withdrawn and children can be protected from this severe and frequently fatal disease.

The germ which causes diphtheria is found in the throat and nose of those who are developing the disease or who actually have diphtheria. It persists for varying periods of time, during and after convalescence. Not a few apparently well persons are diphtheria carriers, that is, they harbour the germ although they are well.

Such being the case, it is obvious that, in our daily lives, we are almost sure to come in contact with such individuals and so be exposed to the diphtheria germs which they throw off in their coughs and sneezes or in talking. The germs pass out in the secretions of the mouth and nose, and may be transferred in the ways mentioned or in any other way, such as by means of the common drinking cup which allows for the secretions of one person to reach others.

The only practical hope of controlling diphtheria is to render each individual invulnerable to the germs to whose attacks each one is exposed from time to time. Fortunately it is in our power to render ourselves resistent to such attacks. We can be armed with the forces which overcome the poisons given off by the diphtheria germ and which render the diphtheria germs powerless to do harm.

We know, as the result of common experience, that the person who has recovered from an attack of diphtheria retains, as a result, some power, which he did not possess before, to resist subsequent attacks of the diphtheria germs. We say of such an individual that, as a result of the attack of the disease, he has become immune to diphtheria.

It is possible to secure this immunity without being exposed to the suffering and danger which accompany the disease. By the injection of diphtheria toxoid, which is a perfectly harmless substance, the body of the person injected develops the same protective forces as are produced during an actual attack of the disease, and so this person is rendered immune to diphtheria.

It is because this is so that our statement that diphtheria can be eradicated from Canada is not merely a hope or a dream, but is a practical possibility which is within our reach. We can make diphtheria disappear, but it will not do so until each and every parent realizes the responsibility to guard each and every child against diphtheria. When this is done, diphtheria will become a rare disease and the lives of children will be saved.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Brampton Town Council will complain to the Hydro-Electric Power Commission about the inadequacy of their system in that town. They say the power is so poor at times that it is impossible to cook with an electric range. If this is the case, Streetsville people have not much room to kick if the village power gets a little weak occasionally.

William Couse, Streetsville, offers $4.00 for best pair men's sox, knitted from Beehive Fingering Wool, by girl of 16 years or under, at Brampton Fair; sox to be his.

The Peel County Women's Institute is largest in the province, according to figures made public yesterday, total membership being 1,208.

Of the one hundred and four branches in the province, Peel was fourth in the number of meetings held, 287 meetings being held during the past year. In attendance at meetings, Peel ranks second, with 7,443.

Thirty-three counties competed in the Household Science judging for junior institutes at the Canadian National Exhibition and Peel Junior Institute team, comprising Mrs. Jack Fraser and Miss Jean Fraser, Huttonville, and Miss Jean Verner, Bolton, are to be congratulated for standing fourth. They were coached by Miss Pearl Church, home demonstrator.

'Bill" Hollingshead, a local sport, entered in the swimming contest at the C.N.E. last Saturady. While he was not fortunate enough to win a prize, he was plucky enough to finish the three mile course, and thereby helped to keep Streetsville to the front in swimming circles. We hope you will win a prize next time, Bill. Those who did not win a prize were presented with a silver medal, if they finished.

The work of constructing gas mains from the easterly limits of Lakeview to the westerly limits of Port Credit, a distance of about five miles on the Lake Shore Road, has now been completed by the Consumers' Gas Company. The construction of lateral mains will then proceed, and service, it is exxpected, will be available to the residents in about two months' time. Most of the unemployed in the district are being provided with work in the undertaking. For the present no mains will be extended to Toronto Township, but their construction may follow at a later date.

Charles Simpkins, of Terra Cotta, near Glenwilliams, was accidentally killed on Saturday, when he dived into shallow water and broke his neck. He was 27 years of age, and leaves a wife and one son.

Brampton Excelsior lacrosse team have won the Dominion Championship for the second time by defeating the Salmonbellies at New Westminster, B. C., last Saturday. They will be accorded a reception on a mammoth scale when they return home. There was a wild time in Brampton Saturday night when the news of their victory was received.

Dr. D. V. Reed found a puff ball which weighed 29 pounds on a farm near Streetsville this week. It was so large that he had to take an axe to break it up small enough to get it into sacks to convey it to his home. This is a record and if anyone can beat it, we would like to hear about it.

COMMUNITY CLUB

Secretary's Report for 1931

The following is a report of the N.T.C. Club for the year beginning Sept. 13th, 1930, and ending Sept. 12, 1931.

We held 23 meetings with an average attendance of 16 members. The meetings being held in the homes of the members. There were no new members joined during the past year, and at present there are 25 members on the roll. Many sick members and friends have been remembered with fruit and flowers, but no baby cups were presented.

We held six social evenings, a euchre and dance which was a great success, a picnic and a corn roast. This is the close of a very successful year and we hope and trust the coming year will be just as profitable.

Signed by the Secretary,
MRS. W. LESLIE.

The annual meeting of our Club was held in the White School house Saturday, Sept. 12, with a very good number in attendance.

It was moved that Mrs. Lee preside at the meeting. She then took the chair and the meeting proceeded with an entire turn over of officers:

There were several new and useful suggestions discussed which we expect to try out in our Club this year.

Though the day was hot and at an extremely busy time the attendance showed the keen interest of our Club members.

The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. S. Cordingly, Ninth Line, Tuesday, Sept. 22, at two-thirty sharp.

Members please notice the change of day.

PEEL COUNTY HERD WIN SECOND PLACE AT C.N.E.

With eight Counties competing in the County herd class, Peel Holstein exhibitors were placed second at the C.N.E. T. I. Dolson, Cheltenham supplied the Senior herd sire and a dry three-year old female. Jack Fraser, Huttonville, contributed his Junior Champion yearling bull and a mature cow. Edgar Lyons, Streetsville, and T. L. Leslie, Terra Cotta, put in their Senior yearling heifers. Not one of the above animals were placed lower than third in the regular classes. By winning first at Ottawa Fair and second at Toronto the Holstein breeders of Peel have proven that they have animals of show type as well as outstanding production qualities.

RESULTS OF ALBION TOWNSHIP BOYS HOME GARDEN CONTEST

With a view of stimulating the use of greater variety of vegetables and also to encourage the planting of flowers around the farm homes, the Ontario Dept. of Agriculture at Brampton conducted a Home Garden contest in Albion Township between farmers' sons of 12 to 20 years of age this summer. The gardens were judged during the growing season by J. C. Shearer, Agr. Rep. and the score counted 60 per cent. of the total points. An exhibit of the vegetables grown was held at the Bolton School Fair on Sept. 11th, and the remainder of the points allowed for the display.

The prize winners are:—1, Bob McAllister, Bolton No. 1; 2. Gordon Robinson, Mount Wolfe; 3. Frank Westlake, Bolton No. 5; 4. Robert Speirs, Macville; 5. Murray Boyce, Palgrave; 6, Bruce Gardner, Bolton.

Hon. L. McCaulay Opens Highway

Banquet and Dance Completes Eventful Day

Streetsville enjoyed the most momentous day of its long history of 110 years, when, last evening, Hon. Leopold MacCauley, Minister of Highways for Ontario, cut the barrier ribbon stretched across the fourth line at Dundas Street, and formally opened the recently paved section of the road for triffic and commerce. The broad white satin ribbon, gleaming in the gray light of the late afternoon, was held at either end by Misses Iola Hope, daughter of Reeve H. W. Hope, Streetsville, and Olive Bonham, daughterof Deputy-reeve G. S. Bonham, Toronto township, and representative for the west side of the township in the Municipal Council.

Mr. McCauley called the attention of the members of County Council, village and township councils, who were present, to the opportunitites placed before the village by the proximity of this new road to the Dundas and Toronto-Hamilton highway, and spoke of the third highway, soon to be constructed between Toronto and Hamilton, to relieve congestion on the before-mentioned roads.

From the junction of the fourth line wth Dundas Street, the party of 100 people moved in a long procession of cars, to the Streetsville end of the new pavement, here Mr. McCauley cut through a second barrier, using in both cases a handsome pair of gold scissors provided for the occasion.

The history of the road was told by Jack Drennan, toastmaster at the banquet which followed the opening ceremony, and which was held in the Oddfellows' Hall, 100 guests sitting down to a splendid repast prepared by the Woman's Association of the United Church. The tables were beautifully decorated with gladioli, which repeated the colors of the Union Jacks and bunting draped over the front of the hall, and around the pillars.

The fourth line west, of Toronto township, which Engineer N. L. Powell said later was a "Given" Road, was at one time, the road over which a stage coach travelled between Port Credit and Georgetown, this coach line carrying the mail. The road did not receive its first pavement this summer, for in 1850, to make it easier for the carrying of Her Majesty's mail, a pavement of 3 inch boards was laid down, side by side, the cost of the lumber being $4 per thousand.

Until about 1877, this coach route was continued, but in the latter year, the board paving having worn through and become dangerous to traffic, and the Credit Valley Railway being ready for operation, the fourth line became once more a humdrum country road.

Later it was made into a macadam road, then into a stone road, a few years ago, into an improved county road. S. E. Wolfe, engineer in charge of the construction, told the guests that 3.43 miles has been paved according to Highway specifications. The driving surface is 20 feet wide, the shoulders each five feet wide, and where necessary the curves have been raised above the level as much as two feet.

It required 15,590 tons of material for paving, nearly 1,500 tons of stone for the roadbed and nearly .18,000 cubic yards of earth for the shoulders. Four thousand feet of drain tile were used. County Engineer N. L. Powell was in charge of the work. Standard Paving Company were the contractors, Dalby Barclay was superintendent in charge of the work, with Mr. Patterson of the Paving Company as assistant.

The county is cleaning up the road on either side of the new pavement, and instead of buying land to secure the 66 feet width required in County Roads, will erect fences at the proper width.

Introduced by J. M. Dolson, Hon. Mr. McCauley gave a very interesting talk on present day conditions, and reminded his audience that road building is not likely to continue for long at the accelerated pace of today. He believes it is a good time to take stock of what is good for the country, and what could be discarded to advantage, and to make necessary changes without hesitation.

A very fine compliment was paid to the farmers of Peel, when the speaker said that it was such men who form the backbone of opposition to any Socialistic attempts to extinguish our present Government, and that they would be the ones to lead the Province in a safe and sane development.

The toasts were: Department of Highways, proposed by J. M. Dolson, reply by Mr. McCauley; County Council, J. H. Pinchin, reply by John Willis, warden. The Ladies, G. S. Bonham, reply by Mrs. John Willis, and Mrs. J. M. Dolson.

Other speakers were, Reeve of Toronto Township, L. H. Pallett; Engineers, N. L. Powell, S. E. Wolfe, and D. Barclay, and Mr. Johnston, Toronto.

Miss Iola Hope presented Mrs. McCaufey and Mrs. Willis, each with a handsome bouquet of pink roses and baby's breath.

A delightful program was given by Miss Pearl Carter, Toronto, and G. B. Jackson, Cooksville. During the banquet, Streetsville Harmony Orchestra played popular music then went down to the Agricultural Hall and played for the young people of the community to dance. Mr. and Mrs. Hector Graydon acted as accompanists during the evening.

This road was taken over by the County Council in 1910, when it was only a dirt road, and the County stoned it, making a fairly good road. The money spent on it from time to time up to this spring was, for construction and maintenance nearly $48,000, and with the new bridge at Patherston's totalled $62,549. The cost of the new pavement just finished will be about $63,000, or about the same amount as was spent on the road in 14 years previously. But it has been estimated that had the County endeavored to keep the road as a gravel road, it would have cost more than the new pavement.

The new road is a great piece of workmanship and should last very many years. We believe those in charge of the building of the same faithful and conscientious service and the people of this section will benefit thereby. It will certainly be a boon to Streetsville and several new businesses are locating here already.

MINISTER'S ADDRESS

In an impressive address at the C. N. E. on Agricultural Day, Hon. Thomas L. Kennedy made several strong points. "The time has come in Ontario," he said, "when registration of live stock should go to a higher standard. I hope to see the time very shortly when all breeds will be of far higher standard, so that the rest of the world will know that when they get an animal from Canada it will be free from disease and parasites and have a long line of production behind it."

The Minister also visualized what it would mean to Ontario farmers if Canadians would buy home-grown fruits. The repercussion of benefit would reach all industry and help provide jobs. The Minister also stressed that knowledge was an increasingly essential factor to successful farming and he outlined some of the Government work in conducting classes for young farmers.

COOKSVILLE

Mrs. William Ezard

Formerly Sophia Rowbotham, died at her residence, Cooksville, in her 82nd year. Born at Thornhill, Mrs. Ezard moved to Cooksville 58 years ago and was a connecting link between early settlement and present day progress in the district. A son, John, of Cooksville, and a brother, John Rowbotham, of Stoufffville, survive, in addition to 11 grandchildren and 2 great grandchildren.

A small bush fire, caused from a smoldering tree stump broke out on the Moodie estate, Middle Road. The Port Credit firefighters responded and soon had the blaze under control. No appreciable damage was done.

Jack Jamieson, son of J. J. Jamieson, county treasurer, received a gash in his tongue requiring five stitches when he fell at Cooksville Continuation school during a lacrosse game, and was struck across the face by a lacrosse stick.

HIGH PRICES FOR LIVE STOCK

As a further evidence that Western Canada is admirably suited to the production of high class livestock one need but refer to the sale of three pure bred Suffolk rams which were bred on the C.P.R. Farm at Tilley, Alberta, and sold on August 25th, 1931, at public auction at the National Wool Growers Sale, Salt Lake City, Utah. This is the largest ram sale on the continent.

One two-year-old, a yearling and a ram lamb, all pure bred Suffolks, and as already mentioned bred on the Company Farm, were placed on the express car at Tilley, consigned to the National Sale. They travelled over three lines of railway and were looked after by the Express Company on each line of railway. They passed through the American Customs and arrived at the sale in good condition. They sold at the following prices:

The two-year-old brought	$190.00
The yearling	$250.00
The lamb	$135.00

Considering the fact that the market for range sheep is so very low in the United States these prices are considered to be very high. The yearling ram was the second highest priced Suffolk ram in the Sale and his selling price was only exceeded by a ram imported from England.

The C.P.R. Farm at Tilley consigned two rams to the same Sale last year when their ram lamb sold for $80.00, the highest priced Suffolk ram lamb in the sale.

PROFESSION

It is of great importance to observe that the character of every man is in some degree formed by his profession. A man of sense may only have a cast of countenance that wears off, as you trace his individuality; while the weak, common man has scarcely ever any character, but what belongs to the body; at least, all his opinions have been so steeped in the vat consecrated by authority, that the faint spirit which the grape of his own vine yields, cannot be distinguished. Society, therefore, as it becomes more enlightened, should be very careful not to establish bodies of men, who must necessarily be made foolish or vicious by the very constitution of their profession. — Mary Woolstonecraft.

"THESE HARD TIMES"

"The hard times and scarcity of money makes it more important than ever to economize. One way I save on clothes is by renewing the color of faded or out-of-style dresses, coats, stockings, and underwear. For dyeing, or tinting, I always use Diamond Dyes. They are the most economical ones by far because they never fail to produce results that make you proud. Why, things look better than new when redyed with Diamond Dyes. They never spot, streak, or run. They go on smoothly and evenly, when in the hands of even a ten-year-old child. Another thing, Diamond Dyes never take the life out of cloth or leave it limp as some dyes do. They deserve to be called 'the world's finest dyes'!"

For a Child Born at Dawn

In this strange hour of dying stars, of light
Which breaks upon the slow earth with no sound
Of browsing wind, in this place where the night
Merges with day and on the shadowy ground
The wild grass bends beneath its weight of dew,
I give you dawn and darkness: they are for you. . . .

Never the full and blazing noon will thunder
Its storm of fire upon your eyes; nor star,
Set on the gulf of midnight, strike asunder
Your small and drowsy heart. Where dim things are,
You will follow shadow and sunlight, you will be broken
By the bird, by the ghost of love, by the word half-spoken.

Royal Palace at Madrid Becomes Public Museum

Madrid.—The plumed and corseted shades of Castilian princes haunting the royal palace of Madrid are not to be molested by the presence of republican politicians. One of the first acts of the constituent assembly under the Republic was to set aside the royal palace as a museum. The Presidential palace of the new Republic will be located elsewhere.

Designed by Filippo Juvara in 1735 and erectd by Gioanni Battista Sacchtti, 1738-'64, the former abode of Alfonso XIII is an impressive sight. It follows the general architectural scheme of a rustica base surmounted by a six-storey upper portion with Corinthian pilasters.

Among its treasures is one of Spain's greatest boasts—the royal collection of 16,000 pieces of tapestry. They are of Gothic, Arabic and other origins woven in gold, silk and linen thread. There is also a renowned collection of arms and armor. Here the famous "Toledo blade" of medieval times is shown to advantage.

Not the least interesting experience for future tourists and students traversing the vast corridors may be derived from treading the grand staircase where Napoleon laid his hand on one of the white marble lions and exclaimed to his brother, Joseph: "Now I have the Spain I so greatly desired. Yours will be a greater palace than mine."

Drinking of Wine Decreasing in France

Paris.—French wine makers are genuinely alarmed over the decrease in wine drinking, both in France and abroad.

While wine is losing favor, beer and milk are becoming more popular.

Billboard advertising by milk companies recently roused the ire of the wine merchants, who claim that heavy governmental taxes are driving drinkers to milk and other products.

Huge Skeleton

New Haven, Conn.—There has been assembled in the Peabody museum of Yale a skeleton of a prehistoric Bronto saurus, an animal believed to have lived 120,000,000 years ago. The bones of the beast were discovered in Wyoming 50 years ago and they have just been put together into the form of an animal. The skeleton is 70 feet long, six feet high, and weighs more than six tons.

New Statesman and Nation (London): The greatest opportunities in world trade will come to those countries which are promptest and most efficient in establishing new types of production designed to meet new needs. In this promising field Great Britain ought to be at a considerable advantage. She has a diversified home market, with a relatively high standard of life, so that her manufacturers can get experience at home in making the sorts of things the world will need more of as its standards rise. She has the most skilled workers in the world. And she has valuable preferences and prerogatives not only in Empire markets but over a large part of the earth. Her chance of expanding her export trade depends even more on developing new exports than on regaining those she has lost.

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS

Don Ellsworth's wife, formerly the actress, Sheila O'Shay, disappears, leaving no trace. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, learns that their married life has been very unhappy.

Peter Piper, Herald reporter, while trying to get an interview with Dr. Cavanaugh, meets Barbara, the attractive daughter, and finds she was engaged to Don Ellsworth before his marriage.

Dr. Cavanaugh identifies the body of a woman found in the tule marsh as that of Sheila O'Shay, and when Barbara hears this she faints. After many qualms Peter determines to call on Barbara.

CHAPTER XXI.—(Cont'd.)

Neither the etiquette books, which Peter hadn't read, nor the novels which he had, provided for a situation just like that. She'd probably take him for a cheeky roughneck. Maybe he was! But still, he had to see her.

He couldn't make her out. She kept playing hide and seek with his imagination, at the most inconvenient times; when he was dead tired and trying to go to sleep, for instance, or when he was half-way through a story that had to make a deadline. That was the devil of having an imagination! If he saw her again, she'd drop into place and he'd discover that he'd been making it all up. The best way to lay a ghost was to face it.

"Yes, sir?"

Peter jumped. The door stood open, framing a maid done in India pink and Chinese white. The tone of her voice indicated that the door had been open and the maid standing there for an interval long enough to require patience.

"I'd like to speak to Miss Cavanaugh," Peter spoke with his best Herald dignity to cover that absurd start.

"Yes, sir. What name shall I give, sir?"

A small shining tray was whipped into play before him. Peter had never possessed a calling card in his life. The only cards he owned were printed with "Evening Herald" in large Old English letters in the iddle, and "J. A. Piper" in small block letters in the lower left hand corner. He looked haughtily past the small shining tray, damning it into invisibility.

"Tell her it's Peter Piper of The Herald." His tone challenged the India-ink-and-Chinese-white automaton to make the most of it. The tilt of his long chin even indicated that for two cents he'd knock her block off. The automaton stood her ground, undeterred by this display of arrogance.

"I don't think—" she began.

"Well, you needn't, need you?" There was something sudden and disarming in Peter's wide smile. "Suppose you put it up to her? I'll bet you two bits she sees me. Are you on?"

The faintest flicker of responsive friendliness rippled across the automaton's face.

"Will you come in and wait, sir?"

Peter dropped into the nearest chair in the hall, and lapsed into unplumbed depths of discomfort. It was like sliding down an inclined plane. "Peter Piper of The Herald" had slid from his lips by habit. What did he want to say that for? It sounded unbelievably silly—like "Lord Raven of Ravenswood."

What had he come for, anyway? He and this girl had absolutely nothing in common. Curiosity—that was it! Curiosity was said to be fatal to cats. "Cats—bats—bats—cats." Alice in Wonderland. The immortal wonder-child of Lewis Carroll's imagination. Was she really like that—Alice in Wonderland grown up? Or was he betrayed by that trick of drawing her fair hair straight back from her round forehead? The real Alice probably grew up quite differently. She wasn't mixed up in a murder, anyway! Lewis Carroll made fools of us all—he made you love his Alice so.

Peter Piper brought himself up with a start. That word was dangerous. He was walking straight into danger—a danger that befogged your clearness of vision in a mist of sentimentality. Peter had a deep distrust of sentimentality. It was all right to be sentimental over "Alice"; you couldn't very well help it, and "Alice" was safely out of harms' way, in fiction. But this was reality, the twentieth century, and Sheila O'Shay was dead and Barbara Cavanaugh had fainted at the news of the discovery.

There were too many Barbaras—the "Alice" Barbara and the orphanage Barbara and the young lady Barbara with all those strange tribal customs he knew nothing about. And was there another Barbara—a deep, clever, wits-about-her Barbara whom he didn't know at all? Well, he had wits of his own if it came to that.

Curiosity. Let it rest there. If curiosity made a fool of him, he wouldn't be the first cat to succumb. It brought him up to his downward slide towards despondency to insist on the singleness of his motive. Curiosity. He turned his back resolutely on that other, more dangerous word. And she couldn't do more than turn him out—in which case he'd remember to slip the black-and-wite automaton her two bits. He needn't mind—he'd been turned out of plenty of houses before.

But he would mind—he would mind quite sickeningly. The other times it was The Herald that was turned out—just Peter Piper of The Herald. But this time it would be Peter Piper himself. Aghast at his own egotism, it dawned—with curses—on Peter that there wasn't a chance in the world that Barbara had been consumed with any curiosity about HIM!

He wiped his hands on his handkerchief—they were cold and damp with perspiration—and bunched the handkerchief into his already sagging coat pocket. He snatched his hat from the bench beside him. She'd know what a fool he'd been—it was too late to help that now—but he'd salvage the remnants of his folly. He'd get out before she turned him out.

He had already taken a step towards the door when he remembered the automaton and hastily clawed two dimes and a nickel from the chewing gum, rubber bands and paper clips in his trouser's pocket. The little shining tray winked up at him from a small table. He laid the three coins in a row on its gleaming surface, the nickel, being the largest, in the middle. Then he glared at it balefully.

'Damn!" he said softly, addressing the tray. "Damn! Damn! Damn!"

"Well, if it isn't Peter Piper swearing at the world!" Laughter rippled through the voice, through and under and around, like broken lights playing across water.

For the second time that day, Peter jumped at the sound of a voice.

Then he jerked the little tray a foot into the air, tossing the coins high, scattering them to the corners of the room.

"She's lost her bet! Bless Pat, the automaton's lost!" he caroled.

CHAPTER XXII.

Barbara stood slim and straight in the doorway. Her clothes, Peter noted, were slim and straight, like herself. So were the clothes of every other girl on the street, but the fact had escaped Peter's observation. She was a girl who never bothered with being surprised. The cascade of coins on the hall floor passed without immediate comment.

"Nellie needn't have put you in the Coventry like this—out in the hall," she said. "Come in, won't you?"

She held aside a curtain and they were in a small rather jolly little room which seemed to be full of a fireplace and orange marigolds. Peter followed the casual wave of her hand towards an arm chair.

He was already in it before he noticed that Barbara remained standing, her elbow crooked across the corner of the fireplace. Another of the tribal customs! He ought to have waited till she sat down. But it was too late now to jump up.

"Well," said Barbara, gazing down into the fire and addressing the glowing heap of coal. "I don't suppose you came on purpose to play with the card tray. Don't tell me you're after another story!"

Peter rose in his chair with deliberation. He was more angry than he had ever been in his life before. Anger broke over him, wave upon wave, and left him trembling.

He forgot that he had ever in his life gone after a story and been proud of it. He stood over her, tall and menacing, by the fireplace, with less than a foot between them. His clenched hands were drawn back, the arms slightly bent.

Barbara stared into furious gray eyes. If she had been a man, she knew that he would have knocked her down. She squared her shoulders, ever so slightly.

"Story—be—damned!" Peter said slowly, striking each word a separate blow. "What do you take me for? I came to see you. I tell you! I came to—to make a call!"

"Oh! Oh! Oh!" Barbara's laughter was not polite, controlled, musical laughter. It was the helpless, choking, clutching laughter of one seized and shaken by an irresistible hurricane of mirth. "So—so that's the way you make a call, is it? Do you—do you—do it like this—very often?"

She leaned her forehead against the mantel piece, her shoulders shaking. Against the mighty wind of such laughter there was no defence.

Peter was caught up in it, helpless. Barbara lifted her face, scarlet from chin to brow, and wiped the tears from her flooded eyes.

"No," said the grinning Peter. "I never made a call before."

"Let's begin then. The first thing people usually do in the course of a call is to sit down. Suppose we do that." But before she turned from the fireplace, standing very straight and small before the towering Peter, she held out her hand.

It was a small, slim hand, and yet somehow not incompetent—a hand that would be accurate and sure in all its movements, a hand that would never flutter nor fall helplessly nor make futile, bungling gestures. Its clasp was very firm, very alive.

"I want to thank you," Barbara said, her face grave now and sharpened into the withdrawn yet alert look which Peter remembered. "I haven't laughed like that since—for a long time."

The instant's hesitation brought Peter's mind leaping back to forgotten reality.

"You're feeling quite all right again after—your illness, the other morning?"

"Quite."

The word fell like a pebble dropped very gently into deep water. Barbara had sunk into the second of the two fireside armchairs. Her hands were clasped lightly in her lap, but something in the poise of her body was wary rather than relaxed.

A Happy Home

Six (says Mrs. Hamilton) are requisite to create a "happy home." Integrity must be the architect and tidiness the upholster. It must be warmed by affection, lighted up with cheerfulness, and industry must be the ventilation, renewing the atmosphere, and bringing in fresh salubrity day by day, while over all, as a protecting canopy and glory, nothing will suffice except the blessing of God.

Britain comes second in the list of nations using motor vehicles, with 1,556,980. The United States of America has 26,46,184, and France is third with 1,520,501.

The ADVENTURES of CAPTAIN JIMMY and his Dog SCOTTIE

What came before: Captain Jimmy sees a pirate ship shelling another little vessel. A fight follows in which the pirates are driven away but first set fire to the vessel they pursued. Captain Jimmy rushes to the rescue.

But we laughed too soon. Chung had no control at all, and the next moment that stream caught me squarely in the chest and bowled me end over end. Scottie must have stopped to laugh at me for the next moment I saw him half sailing and half skating down the deck in a stream of water.

Picking ourselves up, we finally got control of the hose and began playing it on the woodwork of the burning boat.

After Chung had soaked most of the passengers with his hose and one of the crew had dived overboard to avoid getting drowned at his hands, we finally got the stream under control and played it on the burning ship, while the freghter took off the people on board.

In spite of the use of two hose, the fire burned rapidly and as the ship's officers finally left their boat, the decks smoked under their feet. In another moment we cut the freghter free and backed away full speed astern.

We were only a few hundred feet away when the decks blew up with a tremendous crash, shooting columns of flame and sparks high into the air. The ship now burned brightly all over and began to settle rapidly into the sea. There was nothing more to do, so after watching it for a few minutes, we put about and soon the burning vessel was but a red glare on the horizon.

We sailed on for a few days after we had rescued the crew of the burning ship, then, early one morning we came in sight of a long dark shoreline. "Formosa" the captain called it—and what a picture that brings to mind.

Formosa, the beautiful island of rugged mountains, from which the savage head hunters of the hills still descend on the rich camphor groves and tea plantations. With such a fairyland so near to us, you can imagine that we took advantage of the opportunity to make a plane flight to the island. From the time it first appeared as a dark blue blur on the horizon, we were impatient to get started. "But you'll have to watch the Japanese" cautioned the Captain of the Madrigal.

"Formosa" is a Japanese possession and lies south west of Japan about ninety miles off the coast of China. Quite naturally they don't want strangers flying over their island without permission and the soldiers might shoot first and inquire afterwards."

It was still early in the morning when Captain Stuart, of the little ship whose crew we had rescued, and I took off in the plane. The island presented a splendid picture, sleeping in the bright sunlight. The coast at the eastern side rose up abruptly thousands of feet above water.

Picture for yourself those unscalable cliffs, five or even six thousand feet high. Over beyond were deep wooded valleys and high mountain peaks, while far to the west a coastal plain reached down to the sea.

From the north to the south side of the island runs a wide, cleared pathway. This is the "Guard-Line" that separates the mountain country of the Taiwans or head-hunting savages from the rest of the island. Away up in the valleys they live, in a beautiful wooded country.

Natives Use Sun, Stars and Birds As Guide Over Trackless Sea

Auckland, N.Z.—Primitive skill in navigation, which enabled the Maoris to reach New Zealand over a wide stretch of ocean, is preserved unspoiled among the natives of the Pamuotu, or Juamoto, island group east and southeast of Tahiti. This was discovered by a group of natural scientists sent out to study island culture groups by the Bishop Museum of Honolulu. Mr. K. P. Emory, an ethnologist attached to the expedition, now is visiting in New Zealand.

"While the Bishop expedition was on one of the islands," Mr. Emory said, "a party of 30 natives set off in a great canoe, which was the same in essence as the Maoris' craft, for another island 40 miles to the south. That is not a small accomplishment when one realizes that it is not possible to see an island until within five miles of it, and considerably less than that if there are no coconut palms rising above it.

"The natives navigate by the stars, by the sun, by the set of the waves, by the birds. In fact, it is an instinct with them. An 80-mile journey in those waters is no mean feat."

The tracing of Polynesian origins, movements, and affinities, Mr. Emory said, is a task that only now is being properly taken in hand. The Bishop expedition, which spent 2½ years on the Paumotu group, otherwise known as the Low Archipelago, discovered remarkable resemblances between the natives there and the Maoris of New Zealand.—The Christian Science Monitor.

Huge Flying Ship Is Declared Marvel

New York Herald-Tribune.—At last, after so many months of anticipation and so many advance notices, New York has seen the impressive majesty of the famous "flying ship." Riding easily on the tremendous thrust of her twelve motors, and with several ordinary planes buzzing like wasps beside her great hull and huge spread of wing, the DO-X passed up the North River looking, indeed, like a liner of the air. She makes an instant appeal to the imagination. The fact that it is possible to lift a great structure of this sort into the air—a true ship, with her large crew and sixty passengers, with her fuel and stores, her three decks, her pilot house and engine and radio rooms and all her elaborate living quarters—is still just a little difficult to credit. But we have now seen it done.

In spite of the many misfortunes which have followed the DO-X in her long course from Europe, the achievement which she represents is a very fine one. When in 1924 Dr. Dornier undertook his bold exploration in the new field of size it was confidently supposed that the airplane was reaching a structural limit. The larger the plane, it was assumed, the greater would be the proportion of dead weight which would have to go into the structure itself. The DO-X disproved the thesis, and Dr. Dornier now sees no limits to the possible size which flying vessels may reach. The DO-X can take off with a total weight, plane and load together, of more than fifty tons, but her designer thinks that within a decade we may see flying boats of 100 tons displacement.

Because of her size, many people leaped at once to the idea that she was intended for long ocean passages. It was, of course, a mistake. Increasing the size of the airplane does not increase its radius; like all other planes, the DO-X can get radius only by a drastic reduction in pay load, and the relative penalty which she has to pay for increasing her range seems no less severe than that exacted of other types. Perhaps it is more so, as her extreme theoretical range, carrying merely crew and fuel, is only about 2,200 miles. But it is on the transoceanic routes only that long range is even desirable; existing air lines use short "hops" only. The airplane cannot negotiate the oceans on a commercially profitable basis, and probably will not be able to do so until improvements in fuel and power plants radically alter the equation. The dirigible, on the other hand, has already achieved the necessary radius. The Akron has a calculated range of 10,580 miles at fifty knots and nearly 5,000 miles at seventy-two knots. One reason can be seen in the relative importance of the power plant. The DO-X, with a maximum useful lift of about twenty-five tons, carries 7,500 horsepower; the Akron, with a useful lift three times as great, has an installation of only 4,480 horsepower.

"The Glen of Weeping"

One of the most famous of Scottish beauty-spots—Glencoe — was put up for sale recently. But it isn't its rugged and impressive scenery which has made Glencoe famous, but the fact that it was the scene of one of the great tragedies of Scottish history.

This was the massacre of Glencoe, in 1692. The order for the massacre, which was carried out by a party of soldiers, has been reprinted in the particulars of sale, and tells Captain Campbell of Glenlyon to "putt all to the sword under seventy." It goes on:

"See that this is putt into executione without fond or favour, else you may expect to be dealt with as one not true to King nor Government, nor a man fit to carry commissions in the King's service. Expecting you will not fail in the fulfilling hereof, as you love your self I subscribe these with my hand," etc.

The estate is 48,000 acres in extent, and includes six miles of the shore of Loch Leven.

Duty And Its Fruits

Kindly actions begun from a sense of duty blossom into affection and afford some of the sweetest pleasures earth can bestow. Active industry at first painful and arduous unfolds our powers and comes to be the source of keenest satisaction. Purity of thought, word and deed, sought at first from a knowledge of its righteousness, comes at last to be the natural air which the spirit loves to breathe. Thus duty of every kind, containing within it the germs of delight and beauty, will, if cherished, develop the sweetest flowers and richest fruits, and the good and beautiful thus clasp hands and claim kinship for ever.

Pigeon Sets Record in Harwich-Berlin Flight

Berlin.—From Harwich to Berlin in eight hours is quite good time for an airplane, but for a carrier pigeon it is a record. This was accomplished recently, writes a correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor, by one of over 200 similar winged messengers and it arrived at its home in Charlottenburg without turning a feather. The Central German Travel Company organizes a pigeon competition every year, this year's flight being particularly successful. The birds—250 in number—were set loose in Harwich at six o'clock in the morning, and all of them, after a brief survey of the country, set off for home within a few minutes. The first to arrive, the Charlottenburg pigeon, did the distance in eight and a quarter hours, equivalent to a flying time of more than 100 kilometers an hour. Within 30 minutes quite a number followed the champion, their arrival being announced in their several homes by the ringing of a bell attached to the door of the cot. Remarkable astuteness is manifested by these little feathered flyers.

A Lost Facility

Our consideration of the art of speaking has become rather narrow. We do not consider it from quite the right angle. We think of it merely as a frill, whereas it should be a regular part of our school work.

That it is not is the fault of those in authority, not of the teachers. The art of speaking is badly neglected in this country, yet there are many professions where good speech is so necessary.

It would be a great boon if it were recognized that alongside the teaching of English should be the teaching of spoken English. Language, after all, is not for the eye but for the ear.

Therefore, instead of so much placing of English books in our pupils' hands, we should make them more familiar with the sound of our language. As it is, rhetoric is a lost art in this country.—Mrs. A. M. Henderson. Author and Lecturer, addressing the Summer School in Music Teaching at Oxford.

Another Problem

A farmer, visiting his son's college and wandering into a chemistry class, saw some students busy with retorts and test tubes.

"What are you trying to do?" he asked.

"We're endeavoring," replied one of the students, "to discover or invent a universal solvent."

"What's that?" asked the farmer.

"A liquid that will dissolve anything."

"That's a great idea," agreed the farmer. "When you find it, what are you going to keep it in?"

Noble Thought

Each life memorable for goodness and nobility has for its motive power some noble thought. Here is that cathedral spirit, John Milton. In his loneliness and blindness his mind was his kingdom. He loved to think of things true and pure and of good report. Often at midnight upon the poet's ear there fell the sound of celestial music, which he afterwards transposed into his "Paradise Regained." Dying, it was given him to say proudly: "I am not one of those who have disgraced beauty of sentiment by deformity of conduct, nor the maxims of the freeman by the actions of the slave, but by the grace of God I have kept mp soul unsullied."—N. D. Hillis.

World's Finest Wire Used In tiny Lamp Filaments

Fine wire 410-1,000th of an inch in diameter—one-fifth the thickness of a human hair—provides the filament for a new type of electric lamp developed by engineers of the Westinghouse Lamp Company.

A diamond with a tiny hole bored in it serves as the die through which the wire is drawn. When coiled in a filament 1,500 turns are required to the inch and no two turns may touch.

The lamp has been designed especially for sick room service, to illuminate house numbers, electric clock dials or inside refrigerators and cabinets.

At ordinary rates for electricity the lamp will burn for forty hours for 1 cent.

Paris Expected To Eat More Than Million Canadian Apples

Paris.—A consignment of more than a million Canadian apples soon will be on sale in automatic vending-machines on Paris boulevards, as the first step in a big campaign to make France eat Canadian fruit.

The final details of the campaign remain to be settled, but French importers already have made a cash offer for 7,500 boxes of Canadian apples, realizing their superiority over the French variety.

At the same time, negotiations are far advanced, whereby a Canadian company will install 2,000 vending machines along the boulevards. It is expected that each machine will sell 60 apples daily at one franc each, which is cheaper than the retail price of apples in Canada.

This enterprise is the result of the initiative of the Canadian Trade Commissioner's office, which also has just induced the French Ministry of Agriculture to grant a concession to Canadian apple exporters, allowing them to store their apples at Havre without paying the customs duty until the apples are sold.

This concession on the part of the French authorities will permit the holding of fortnightly sales of Canadian apples at Le Havre. It is expected that such sales will be started shortly.

Previously, consignments on which the customs duty had been paid, remained unsold at French ports, causing a heavy cash loss to Canadian apple growers.

Science Plans to Repair Vital Organs by Synthetic Substitutes

Buffalo, N.Y.—Another step toward the time when science hopes to repair man's vital organs with synthetic substitutes for damaged functions will be taken at the meeting of the American Chemical Society.

This step will be a joint study by physicians and chemists of the endocrine glands, the organs which regulate the body all the way from its production of energy to its rate of aging. The study will be made in a symposium held jointly by the divisions of medicinal chemistry and biological chemistry.

The endocrine glands secrete substances called hormones, which medical men use not only in various types of illness, but in daring attempts to control obesity and the size to which a person may grow.

The secretions usually are obtained from animals, whose endocrines correspond closely to those of humans. The chemist's role—the next step—is to synthesize the hormones, to make them up artificially in the laboratory. The synthetic stuff has advantages in treating human health. It is easier to keep free from impurities which often are found in the animal extracts. Its strength can be controlled more accurately, which is important because of the exceeding potency of hormones.

The principal endocrines now recognized include the pituitary, a pea-sized organ in the head, controlling the gigantism, dwarfing certain types of obesity and apparently master regulator over some of the sex glands. In the neck is the thyroid gland, with limited control over weight and over some mental diseases. The pancreas, digestive aid, causes diabetes when its hormone flow goes wrong. The adrenal glands, source of the explosive energy that carries a man through a sudden crisis, and the various sex glands are other endocrines.

Sunday School Lesson

September 20. Lesson XII—The Council in Jerusalem—Acts 15: 22-29; Galatians 2: 1, 2, 9, 10. Golden Text—For brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another.—Galatians 5: 13.

ANALYSIS

I. THE QUESTION RAISED, Acts 15: 1-3; Gal. 2: 1.

II. THE JERUSALEM CONFERENCE, Acts 15: 4-21; Gal. 2: 2-10.

III. A PROPOSAL ACCEPTED, Acts 15: 22-35.

INTRODUCTION—We come now to a great crisis in the history of the whole church. Paul and Barnabas, back from Asia Minor, were convinced that a great field was open in the Gentile world for the spread of the gospel. The news of their work, however, was causing some uneasiness in Jerusalem. Ever since the death of Stephen and the removal of most of the more broadminded Hellenistic Christians, the attitude of the Jerusalem church had been growing more Jewish. It was granted that Gentiles could be saved. The question was, how? "By becoming Jews," said the Judaizers. "By faith alone," said Paul. Was Christianity to be a mere sect of Judaism, or was it to become a gospel for all men? The question arose in Antioch, hortly after the apostles returned from their tour.

I. THE QUESTION RAISED, Acts 15: 1-3; Gal. 2: 1.

Visitors from Jerusalem who gave the impression, apparently, that they had been sent to deliver a message, said, "Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses ye cannot be saved."

Their announcement came like a bombshell into the church at Antioch. Most of the brethren were uncircumcised, and Jew and Gentile were associating as equals. Paul and Barnabas refused to recognize the claims of the law upon Gentiles. Bitter controversy developed. The question once raised, must be settled.

The church suggested an appeal to the Jerusalem leaders, v. 2. Paul, while recognizing their authority to be no greater than his own, was divinely encouraged to go, Gal. 2: 2. Besides Barnabas, he took with him Titus, one of his most faithful disciples, who was a Gentile.

II. THE JERUSALEM CONFERENCE, Acts 15: 4-21; Gal. 2: 2-10.

The welcome at Jerusalem left nothing to be desired. At the first public meeting of the Conference, the apostles told how God had blessed their labors. He had accepted the Gentiles. The inference was plain—who, then, dared refuse them? The legalists, who had also arrived from Antioch, rose up and maintained doggedly, "They must keep the law of Moses." Their doctrine had blinded them to the evident facts. "Our way, or not at all," was their attitude. The clash had come. The leaders required time for consideration. The meeting was adjourned.

Paul saw the legalists none too honorable in their methods (Gal. 2: 4), might, by an appeal to popular prejudice, discredit the apostles. He was too sharp-witted to be caught in that manner. He privately interviewed the key-man, Gal. 2: 2. It was most important that James, and Peter, and John should know exactly what had been taking place. Paul's brains were dedicated to God's service.

In the second public session the legalists and their sympathizers probably had a majority. After prolonged debating, Peter made his speech, Acts 15: 7-11. He reminded them how he had dined with Cornelius and had won him for Christ. The debaters were silenced. Barnabas and then Paul told their story. James, now the head of the church, and most orthodox Jew, showed from Scripture how God had long planned to save all the Gentiles who should call upon him, Acts 15: 15-18. He then made the proposal which for the time, settled the question.

III. A PROPOSAL ACCEPTED, Acts 15: 22-35.

The proposal which gained the consent of the Council was, of necessity, a compromise. It repudiated the teaching of those who had gone to Antioch. Nothing was to be said to Gentiles about circumcision. They were to guard against certain practices associated with idolatry and immortality; and, out of consideration for the scruples of Jewish brethren, observe two food laws, vs. 28, 29. Similarity in diet would make social intercourse possible. A letter (vs. 23-29), tactful, and beautiful in its brotherly spirit, was drafted, and sent to Antioch by Judas and Silas, prominent members of the Jerusalem church. In Antioch the proposals were gladly accepted, and once more the church had peace.

Illustrated Dressmaking Lesson Furnished with Every Pattern

A midnight blue silk crepe is an excellent choice for all around daytime occasions particularly with white silk crepe collar as model illustrated. This attractive scarf collar is passed through a strap of material at end of open Vionnet neckline. The wide loose ends that reach to the normal waistline, tend to break the width through the bodice.

The pointed treatment at the front and at the back of the bodice is a clever idea to add length to the figure. It also emphasized the flat hipline.

The attached two-piece circular skirt is shaped through the hips with a widening toward hem that shows graceful flared fulness.

Style No. 358 is designed in sizes 16, 18, 20 years, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust. In the medium size, it takes 3¾ yards of 39-inch material with ½ yard of 35-inch contrasting for collar.

Wool crepe, printed crepe silk and light weight tweed are suitable for this slim model that you'll find so entirely wearable.

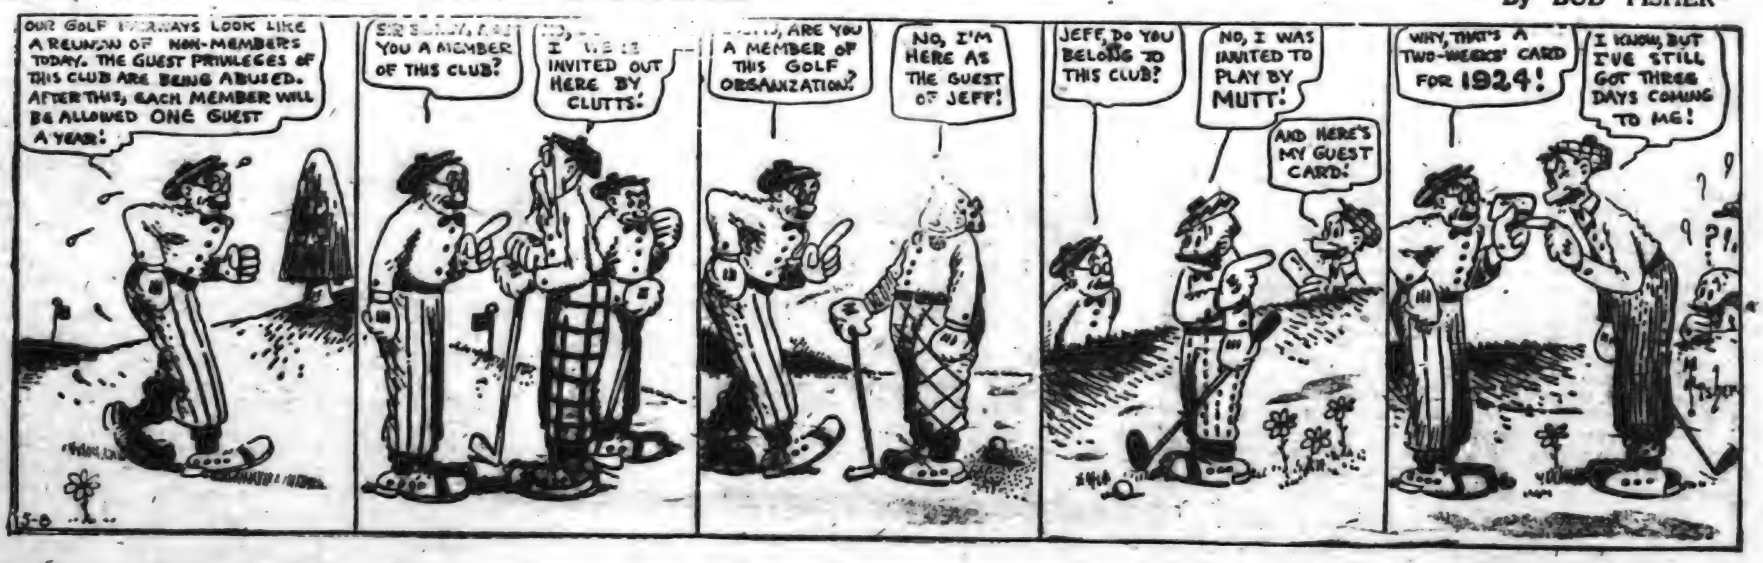
British Railway Safety Is Proved by Report

London.—Of 1,218,000,000 passengers who traveled on British trains during 1930, only one lost his life in an accident.



Figures just issued show how safe are British railways in these days of increasing travel. During the last Bank holiday main line railways carried over ten million passengers without a single person being injured.

The reputation for safety that the British system enjoys is laid to skilled engineering and the use of the latest mechanical devices that can aid the human element in railway operation.

BRAMPTON

Peel and Halton Beekeepers' Association held their annual meeting here with 20 interested apiarists attending and Harry Sibbald, Claude, acting as Chairman. The following officers were elected: President, William Barrett, Caledon; Vice-President, E. P. Saunders, Hornby; Auditor, Norman Switzer, Inglewood; Secretary-Treasurer, J. C. Shearer, Brampton. William Barrett, Caledon, and Clifford Sibbald, Alton, inspectors for the district, gave their report for the past year. While the eradication of foul brood was almost efficient, they urged beekeepers to recognize the disease, or it would prove a source of contamination to nearby apiaries. A report showed that Peel had 126 apiaries and 5,000 colonies, and had produced 527,144 pounds of light honey, and 34,425 pounds of dark honey, a total crop of 561,569 pounds, averaging 112 pounds to the colony.

KENNEDY OUTLINES MARKETING PLANS

Thornbury, Sept. 15.—Showing the urgent necessity of proper grading and sizing of apples, as well as of vegetables, if Ontario growers hoped to obtain and maintain export markets, Hon. T. L. Kennedy, Provincial Minister of Agriculture, in an address Tuesday at a banquet of 250 farmers, fruit growers and others, emphasized the keen competition which has to some extent robbed Ontario of markets abroad and in the Canadian West. Colonel Kennedy was the chief speaker at the official ceremonies in connection with the opening of the $65,000 cold-storage and packing plant in Thornby built by the Georgian Bay Fruit Growers Limited.

The teacher had given a lesson on the Wars of the Roses. "What do you know of Margaret of Anjou?" he asked.

"She was very fat," said Billy.

"How is that?" inquired the teacher.

"Because," he replied. "I read that she was one of Richard's stoutest opponents."

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA

Hospital days were lonely. Of course, her friends did all they could to keep her cheerful — her room was a bower of roses — but how she looked forward to evening when Jack could sit by her and talk of his day at the office.

Then came the news that he must leave town on business. She wondered how she could stand the wait until he came home. But Jack, wise fellow, knew how to bridge the gap. Promptly each evening at nine he called her over Long-Distance and told her all the things she wished to hear.

Extravagant? . . . not a bit . . . for night rates are always inexpensive! What could be worth more for what it cost?

404 Mile An Hour Speed Made By British Plane

Average at Calshot 340.08 Miles—Schneider Cup Now Belongs to Britain—Winner Maintains Height of Only 300 Feet

Calshot, England.—Flight Lieut. G. H. Stainforth, his lanky body crouched over the controls of a bullet-like little seaplane, flashed over the water Sunday afternoon at 404 miles an hour, faster than any man had ever travelled before.

Stainforth's supermarine Rolls-Royce S-6 plane, so small that its pontoons looked like claws on a bird, set a world record of 386.1 miles an hour for the best four of six successive runs over the straightaway course of three kilometers, or about 1.86 miles, to climax Great Britain's unchallenged tests fof retention of the Schneider cup trophy.

TROPHY RETAINED

The trophy was officially retained, however, when Flight Lieut. J. H. Boothman, flying an S-6B plane through brilliant sunshine, completed the flight around the 350-kilometre triangular course at a record speed of 340.8 miles an hour. His speed of 343.1 miles an hour on the first lap was a record and he covered the entire seven laps of the 31-mile course in 38 minutes, 22.15 seconds.

On the first two laps he broke the 100-kilometre (62.1 miles) record, averaging 342.9 miles an hour and he also broke the 50 kilometer record for closed circuit flying.

FRANCE AND ITALY OUT

Because of the withdrawal of France and Italy from the Schneider Cup competition, chief interest centered in Stainforth's attack on the straight-line record, particularly in view of reports from Italy that a speed of 407 miles an hour had been attained in a test flight which ended fatally.

There was a slight wind and the water was choppy when the crowd along the piers and shore saw Stainforth lift his craft from the water and dart upward over the course. He straightened out and circled to start the dash from a good height, swooping over the water at such speed that the roar of the motor could not be heard until the plane drew even with the spectators.

Six times the little craft circled and shot across the marked course, each time straining every inch of its stream-lined structure until it seemed Stainforth was on the verge of crashing. The four best times, counted in record achievements, were 372.822; 404.275; 377.011 and 390.162 miles per hour. The record is subject to approval of the International Aeronautic Federation.

The former record was held by Squadron Leader A. H. Orlebar of the last British cup team, who averaged 357.7 miles an hour. In the last races, however, Flight-Lieut. H. R. D. Waghorn attained a speed of 370 miles an hour on the straightaways.

AIM TO BREAK RECORD

Another test will be held Wednesday in an effort to break Stainforth's mark.

Boothman's speeds for the seven laps of the race were 343.1, 342.7, 340, 338, 339.6, 339.4 and 337.7, as compared to the winning time of 328.63 set by Waghorn in the 1929 races.

The crowd was large despite lack of foreign competition, and covered every vantage point including water craft, rafts, ocean lines and beaches. Ships were gaily decorated, except the grim grey warships anchored off shore. Sir Austin Chamberlain, Air Minister, was aboard the aircraft carrier "Courageous."

Chapleau Sawmill Burned to Ground

Three Dwellings Also Prey to Sunday Morning Fire Which Causes Damage of $125,000—Lumber Yard and Station are Saved

Chapleau.—Fire early Sunday destroyed a sawmill at Nicholson's Siding on the Canadian Pacific Railway, near here. Four storehouses full of camp equipment and three dwellings also were burned. Only the efforts of employees of the company, Austin & Nicholson, Ltd., and of people of the settlement averted further destruction. The damage is about $125,000.

Sparks from the planing mill refuse-burner fanned by a strong south-west wind, are believed by officials to have caused the fire. The sawmill was soon a roaring mass of flames and the adjacent lumber yard and the Canadian Pacific Railway station were menaced.

Fire fighters were handicapped when the flames consumed a fire pump on the property. Two lines of hose from an auxiliary plant at the planing mill were brought into action. Provincial fire rangers lent their aid and almost every resident of the community turned out to form a bucket brigade.

The Canadian Pacific Railwey sent a special train with a water tank car and brought two Government forest fire service pumps from Chapleau when the flames threatened its property. With this additional equipment the blaze was brought under control, the lumber yard and planing mill being saved.

The mill was erected in 1916, according to George B. Nicholson. It had been closed for the last season, after operating continuously since it was built. Work will probably be resumed at the planing mill immediately. It was damaged only slightly.

1200 Dead In Belize Hundreds Injured

Business Paralyzed — Survivors Volunteer to Clear Away Wreckage

U.S. SHIPS GIVE AID

Tegucigalpa, Honduras.—The Honduran Consul at Belize, British Honduras, reported that a plague has broken out in that city, following the hurricane and tidal wave.

Two unidentified Honduran schooners were reported caught in the hurricane area between Puerto Cortez and Belize, and sunk with the loss of crews and passengers.

FUNERAL PYRES BURN.

Huge clouds of black stench-laden smoke hung over Belize Sunday, as cremation was resorted to in disposing of bodies of victims of the tropical hurricane which took an estimated death toll of 1,000 to 1,200 lives, and caused enormous property damage to this Honduran capital.

Scores of bodies were burned on five vast funeral pyres, almost in the centre of the devastated city, as health and government officials attempted to prevent the spread of disease.

The bodies cremated were in addition to more than 700 counted as they were placed in crude graves, dug in the city cemetery by prison labor.

SOLDIERS DIRECT WORKERS

Meanwhile, squads of volunteer laborers worked ceaselessly under the direction of Honduran soldiers, clearing away the tangled wreckage of homes and business houses that until Thursday made up the capital of British Honduras.

Hundreds of persons injured in the storm, and by the tidal wave which accompanied the blow, continued to receive medical aid rushed here by aeroplane and ship.

Every manner of business has been paralyzed. Residents, many of whom lost their homes and all their belongings, turned willing hands to aid in carrying on the relief work. The shock of the storm has just begun to be felt.

Relief work by the U.S.S. Swan was augmented by the arrival of the U.S. S. cruiser Sacramento.

Officials believe that danger of food riots has passed, and that relief measures now are in hand.

BOATS ON DRY LAND

From the air Belize appeared a conglomerate mass of wreckage. An aeroplane which arrived from Miami, Fla., flew over the city for an inspection of the damage, and its occupants saw no building undamaged.

More than a dozen sea-going boats were piled up on land along the waterfront, some as far as 50 yards from the water's edge.

The United States Consul's office reported that ten Jesuit priests apparently were the only United tSates citizens to lose their lives in the storm.

Almost every family in the city has been affected in some way by the death toll.

Houses Made of Tar

Bakelite, which is already used for many purposes, is made from tar, and it is considered possible that houses made of it are a practical possibility of the future.

Britain Offers R-100 For Sale

Cardington Base Placed on Care and Maintenance Basis

London.—The R-100, giant airship, which visited Canada in August, 1930, is to be disposed of and the airship base at Cardington will be placed on a care and maintenance basis, according to an announcement made by Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald.

The Prime Minister estimated that more than half a million dollars a year would be saved by the policy.

Cardington, until about eight years ago, was an obscure hamlet in the flat and uninteresting country a few miles from Bedford. Then two sheds, each 812 feet long by 157 feet high and 180 and her ill-fated sister, the R-101, and her ill-fated sisted, the R-101, which crashed in France last October.

Around the giant sheds grew up a little cluster of trim buildings for the personnel attached to the station, a mooring tower 200 feet high and 70 feet square at the base, designed to take a pull at the top of 30 tons in any direction, was also built. Within the tower is an elevator which can carry 12 persons at a time to the passenger platform 170 feet from the ground.

Staff Taken By Surprise

The Cardington base therefore represents ambitious enterprise and a considerable original outlay of money. The staff there was taken completely by surprise by this announcement.

R-100 has been lying almost dismantled, in her shed at Cardington since shortly after the crash of the R-101. Besides the Cardington mooring mast, there is a great mast at St. Hubert, near Montreal, another at Cairo and a fourth at Karachi, India. There were proposals to construct others in Australia and South Africa two years ago, when it seemed the ambitious plan of an Empire air service for which the two giant vessels were built, would materialize within the near future. The crash of the R-101 wrecked this hope; the economy axe is removing almost the last vestiges.

Germany to Buy United States Wheat

Washington.—The farm board have now reached an agreement for sale of 7,500,000 bushels of wheat to Germany.

Negotiations have been going on for several days.

The sale means the board has disposed of 82,500,000 bushels of the huge store of grain acquired during stabilization operations.

Brazil was given 25,000,000 in exchange for 1,050,000 bags of coffee and China bought 15,000,000 bushels outright. The amount of wheat sold at seaboard has been estimated at 35,000,000 bushels.

The farm board has not made public the amount of wheat it has left, but unofficial estimates place this at a few million bushels below 209,000,000.

Board members said the base price of the wheat was 49½ cents a bushel.

Chairman Stone said recently other wheat deals were being considered.

Bad Driving Results To Be Shown by Films

Toronto.—A one-reel talking picture designed to bring home to the public the necessity of exercising care when driving on the highways of Ontario has been taken by the Ontario Motion Picture Bureau in collaboration with the Ontario Department of Highways.

The evils of cutting-in, making wrong turns, negligent and careless driving and other breaches of the traffic act are portrayed. A radio announcer supplies the conversation with which the picture is synchronized. The premier view of the picture will be in Toronto theatres after which it will be shown in all moving picture theatres in Ontario.

Tall Men of Thane

John Fothergill is probably the most original innkeeper in England. He is a painter and a former Oxford Don, and he conducts his inn—the 17th century Spread Eagle at Thane, thirteen miles from Oxford—in a velvet suit and buckled shoes. Mr. Fothergill is responsible for the legend of the tall men of Thane. About five years ago, Mr. David Plunkett-Greene, who is 6 feet 9 inches, signed his name on the wall of the inn, as high as he could reach. Since then 2,000 men, distinguished for personal charm or altitude, have added their autographs. Many of them have names honored in the worlds of arms, literature and the arts, and all are personal friends of Mr. Fothergill. The longest reach so far has been achieved by Charles Maslin, whose signature is written at a height of 9 feet 3 inches.

New Hat Styles Boost Ostrich Sales

London.—The introduction of the new bowler hat for women, with its feather ornament, has already affected the trade in ostrich feathers.

"The one bright feature at the moment is the welcome arrival of interest in ostrich feathers, prices for wings having recently improved at least 50 per cent," says the monthly review of the Standard Bank of South Africa, Limited.

Berlin Drivers More Careful

Berlin.—Statistics show that Berlin's automobile drivers are learning to drive properly and that the police are extremely successful in their educational efforts. During 1925, 52,550 tickets were served on the city's chauffeurs, but in 1930 only 28,940 were issued, although the number of automobiles in Berlin has more than tripled during the period.

Willy Rody and Christian Johanssen Leave Portugal for New York

Lisbon, Portugal.—The transatlantic aeroplane of Willy Rody and Christian Johanssen was reported to have passed over the Island of Fayal in the Azores at 5.47 p.m. G.M.T. (12.47 p.m. E.S.T.), Sunday.

The fliers hoped to reach New York within 40 to 42 hours. They were undecided as to how long they would remain there, but expected to return by air by way of Ireland.

Ships that might sight the plane would be unable to speak to them because the fliers carried no radio equipment.

Former German Ace Thrills Crowds at Cleveland Races

Cleveland.—Maj. Ernst Udet, German ace, has not only captured the admiration of thousands of spectators at the 1931 national air races with his unprecented stunting, but has come close to "stealing the show."

On the ground, Major Udet, short and stocky and neatly dressed, looks and acts like any conservative business man. But in the air he makes the crowd gasp as he slips his scarlet ship, which he himself designed, through stunts that few would attempt.

Major Udet performs loops, rolls and banks close to the ground. His most spectacular stunt is to take off and fly across the field with one wing almost touching the ground. He closes his exhibitions by stopping his motor at 1000 feet, making three loops and landing with a "dead stick"—an idle propeller.

Since the war Major Udet has turned his attention to peace-time exploits. He has made nine landings on Mt. Blanc at an altitude of 5800 meters in the interests of photography, and is the only man to have landed a plane on Mt.Zugspitze, the highest in Germany.

He is making his first visit in America, and is amazed at the scale of things. "It is not merely miraculous but fabulous," he said. He finds the United States has some large and fine airports, but those in Germany are better kept, especially in being free from dust.

Fishermen Want Planes

Wesermuende. — The German herring fisheries which last year could supply only 21 per cent. of the home market demand have urged the organization of an air scout service to trace the movements of the schools. While Great Britain and Norway take herring almost at their doors, the German fishermen must go as far as the Shetland Islands for the bulk of their catch.

The distance is too great to operate hydroplanes from a home base and Great Britain is not expected to permit the establishment of a landing base on its coast. It therefore is proposed that the government adopt two fisheries guard vessels as plane carriers.

The scout fliers would hunt down the migrating schools of herring by observing predatory fish, seals and whales and especially the great flocks of gulls that always follow herring and direct the fishing fleet by radio and marking buoys.

Canadian Imports Decreased in July

Ottawa.—Canada's imports during July had a value of $48,379,000 a decrease of $36,172,000, or 43 per cent from July of 1930, according to a recent report issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

Imports from the United Kingdom declined by 33 per cent. and those from the United States by 49 per cent. Comparative totals were:

	July, '30	July, '31
United Kingdom:	$12,934,000	$ 8,891,000
United States:	54-165,000	28,995,000

The largest group item was "iron and its products," of which Canada imported $8,108,000 worth. Of this amount the valuation of British imports was $1,207,000 and of American, $6.463,000.

Of textiles Canada imported commodities valued at $7,152,000. Imports from the United Kingdom had a value of $4,440,000 and from the United States, $2.280,000.

Saskatchewan Surveyed For New Land Opening

Regina.—Definite plans have been completed by the Provincial Government for the first real inroad into Saskatchewan's far northland by the survey of a townsite at Beaver Lake with a view to disposal of real estate. Announcement to this effect was made recently by Premier J. T. M. Anderson.

Fifty woodsmen are being sought by the Government to work on the Beaver Lake-Flin Flon road and more teams will likely accompany them. The Government expects to dispose of sufficient real estate through this development to pay for the new northern road.

Girl Flier Cancels Atlantic Flight

St. John's, Nfld.—Belief that the proposed transatlantic flight of Laura Ingalls has been cancelled for the present was expressed here over the week-end after Mrs. Clarence Chamberlain, who had been awaiting Miss Ingalls' arrival at Harbor Grace, sailed for New York. Lopez and Giskop, flying experts who had been in Newfoundland in connection with the flight, also sailed on the steamer Fort St. George.

Electricity on Farms

Farmers of the United States spent three times as much money for electricity in 1930 as the railway companies of the country, says the United States Department of Agriculture. More than 644,500 farms out of the 6,288,648 farms in the United States now use electricity. Electrical power used on farms in 1930 amounted to 1,779,940,000 kilowatt-hours and cost $46,187,000. This amounts to 15 per cent. of the total power used on farms annually.

North Ontario Wolves Encircle Automobile

Cochrane.—To have the car in which he was driving encircled by wolves was the experience of Lewis Milligan of the provincial game committee, driving between Cochrane and Kapuskasing early Saturday. The car was halted at the time, with lights shut off. The animals fled when the car was started again.

The average daily strength of the City of London Police Force is 1,117.

Canadian Birds and Beasts Sent to Australia

A short time ago a shipment of unfamiliar specimens of the animal and bird kingdom in the antipodes arrived in Toronto for replacement in the zoo, and Toronto has responded with a return shipment of birds and beasts native to Canada. The return gesture was made even more effective because the furred and feathered representatives of a sister Dominion were shipped to Adelaide Zoo in the same steamer which brought the Australian fauna, the Canadian National steamship Canadian Constructor.

While these creatures, which began long journeys from Toronto by Canadian National Express, are well-known to Canadians and Americans, they have no near relatives in the antipodes, and therefore should prove as interesting to Australians as kangaroos and other strange fauna are to natives of this country, says the writer.

New York Area Held To Be World's Largest

Washington.—The Census Bureau has found what probably is the largest "metropolitan area" in the world —the New York City-northeastern New Jersey territory, in which dwell between 9,000,000 and 10,000,000 persons.

Civic organizations will be given a chance to look over the bureau's "metropolitan area" before it is made an official part of the 1930 census record.

In mapping these areas the Census Bureau follows the rule that all contiguous areas with more than 150 persons to the square mile constitute a "metropolitan area."

Playing the Same Game

It was Jane's day off. She was spending it with the maid from the house next door.

"My mistress is so curious," she told the girl.

"All mistresses are," said her companion knowingly. "How curious is yours?"

"Well," said Jane, "yesterday I was looking through the keyhole into her room, and she was looking through the keyhole at me."

"I was never made to be ornamental."—Mahatma Gandhi.

The County Fair

This is the time when everywhere
Men drag the flivver from its liar
And hustle to the county fair.
I love the life upon the grounds,
The shoot the shoots and whirl arounds.
I love the harrows, plows and diskers,
The old-time farmer with his whiskers.
I love the thing-ma-jig that whirls
The fellows and their buxom girls.
I love the fair where time is spent
In such diversions innocent.
But darn the crude and coarse fair places,
Made up of side shows and horse races.

O, on our farms are Plymouth Rocks,
Both handsome hens and lusty cocks,
We ought to show those charming chickens,
Not human ones that raise the dickens.
We need more Dominicks and Darkings,
Instead of birds that roll their stockings.
Our youths should watch more Morgan prancers
And fewer hella hulu dancers.
The Jersey cows and other cudders,
The Holsteins with their well-filled udders,
The cattle from a thousand hills,
Are wholesome sights for Jacks and Jills,
And give us all the needed thrills.

Those poor, forsaken, homeless drifters,
The refuse of our human sifters,
No more should be allowed to show
As missing links from Borneo.
The folks who pay to see those ginks,
They are themselves the missing links,
Come, let us rise and bust the side shows,
The gambling nuisances and the side shows.
Though graft and bribing may entrench,
From their old places let us wrench
The things that make our fairs a stench;
Cut out the sights that harm our kiddies,
And fill the space with boars and biddies.

Some men who think they are marrying angels get nothing better than good cooks; and they never discover the difference. The Chinese are starving, ships are idle, and yet no one can think of anything to do with wheat. The best is none too good, for a lot of folks, so long as they don't have to pay for it. At twenty, he thinks he can save the world; at thirty, he begins to wish he could save part of his salary. Another trouble with life is that we so often get a severe kick in the pants when all we wish is a gentle slap on the back. You can't expect tonsil-snatchers to make a cheerful appearance—they hafta look down in the mouth. Diplomacy is the art of letting some one else have your way.

Myrtle—"My folks are going to send me to a girls' finishing school."

Mildred—"Mine can't manage me, either."

A Scotchman had lost his wallet and had it returned to him by the police three days later. He was asked to examine the contents to see if his money was all there.

"Aye, the money's there a'richt, but, mon, ye've it three days—what about the interest?"

Little Lucie—"Auntie, why do you put powder on your face?"

Auntie—"To make me pretty, dear."

Lucie—"Then why doesn't it?"

Getting Nowhere

A gentleman pretty well perfumed picked up the telephone.

Drunk—"Hello! Hic! Hello!"

Operator—"Hello."

Drunk—"Hello."

Operator—"Hello."

Drunk—"My gosh! How this thing echoes!"

New Types of Fodder Found in Australia

Adelaide, S. Aust. — New grasses valuable for fodder and other purposes may be developed in Australia. This was brought out by Mr. James F. Bailey, director of the Adelaide Botanical gardens in Kew, London, who recently has returned to England after a year in the Australian Commonwealth on exchange with Mr. William D. Francis, assistant government botanist in Brisbane.

Mr. Hubbard took back to London grasses gathered in the Commonwealth, according to Mr. Bailey. These will be classified, some entirely new types will be named, and the entire collection will prove highly valuable to students concerned with botanical research.

Most of the specimens were obtained in Queensland, the richest state in Australia for grasses. Some unusual specimens were obtained in Nullarbor county, a region of treeless plains where the train runs without deviation for 300 miles.

Glass Opaque From Outside

Glass that opaque from the outside recently was demonstrated in the windows and windshield of an automobile. Passengers and drivers can see perfectly from the inside of the car, but the appearance from the outside is that of a mirror. The only difference from ordinary glass from the inside is a slight bluish tinge.—Popoular Mechanics Magazine.

What Is Man Coming To?

"What is going to happen to man physically, terrestrially, in the future?" asks Ales Hrdlicka, Curator of Anthropology. U.S. National Museum, in "Evolution." He continues: If we had a perfect knowledge of the human past we should be able to understand ourselves much more fully and appreciate the changes that are now going on in the human species. However, there are certain facts which we don't know, and from which we can make intelligent deductions for the future. We know that man has developed, in all probability, gradually, from the nearest subhuman forms, under the exciting influence of environment. During his progress he differentiated into numerous types and races, the less successful of which have become extinct. He is still substantially attuned t Nature, though the relation is weakened through his artificialities. Man multiplied very slowly up until the end of the last main glaciation; from that time he began to spread all over the habitable eartl, the various types and races all developing from one human species.

The main phenomena of human differentiation or "evolution" throughout the past, are on one hand a progressive mentality, or. the other hand a progressive physical adaptation and eventual refinement. It is a wonderful and, in general sustained progress from the more or less ape-like precursor to the highest type of man and woman of today. The present is merely a developing continuation of the past. Man still appears to be as plastic in body and mind as ever he as, probably even more so; he is still struggling with environment, though controlling it more and more every day; and he still changes.

He lives longer and better. He suffers less physically. Elimination of the less fit has largely changed to elimination of the unfit only Less mother's and child's hard labor, more and better food, with exercise, sport and personal hygiene, are bringing about an increase in stature of civilized man, while less use of the jaws and muscles of mastication is reducing the jaws the breadth, protrusion and massiveness of the face. The head in general among the cultured is becoming slighly broader and larger, the skull and facial bones thinner, the physiognomy more lively and expressive.

The features, the hands, the feet are becoming more refined, and general beauty is on the increase, in both men and women. The sensory organs and centres, particularly those of sight, hearing and taste, are evidently growing more effective as well as more resistant. And there is an unquestionable advance in civilized man of mental effectiveness and mental endowments. Records in endurance and in accomplishments are ever being surpassed, and in modern commerce, industry, finance science, applied arts, bring to light mental giant after mental giant.

Those and other progressive changes in the cultured man of the present are resulting, it is true, in various weakenings and consequent disorders. The hair, especially in men, is being lost prematurely; the teeth are weakened in resistance, there are troubles in eruption, and some of the dental units tend to disappear. The facial changes, while favoring a greater variety and higher range of the voice, lead often to disturbing irregularities of the nasal structures and palate. The weakenings through less use of the feet and other organs (appendix, muscles, etc.) result in difficulties even dangers. Great mental application favors digestive and other disorders. But all these advantages are being checked by adaptations and have but moderate effect of retardation on the general evolutionary progress of civilized man.

In the light of man's past and his present it is very likely that he will continue to progress in adaptation, refinement and differentiation. But this applies only to the main stream of humanity, the civilized man. The rest will be more or less brought along, or left behind.

The progress of the advancing parts of the race may be foreseen to be essentially towards even greater mental efficiency and potentiality. The further mental developments may be expected to be attended by an additional increase in brain size; although the gross increase will be of but moderate proportions. The main changes will be in the internal organization of the brains, in greater blood-supply, greater general effectiveness.

The skull will in all probability be still thinner than it is today, and will likely grow fuller laterally and anteroposteriorly, due to developments in the directions of least resistance. The indications are that the hair on the head will be further weakened. The stature promises generally to be even somewhat higher than today among the best nourished and least repressed groups. The face is likely to become more refined, handsome, and with more character, partly on account of intensifying intelligent sexual selection, partly through further reduction of the bony parts consequent upon diminished mastication and partly through the further development of the frontal portion of the skull. The eyes will be deeper set, the nose prominent and rather narrow, the mouth still smaller, the chin more prominent, the jaws even more moderate and less regular, the teeth tending to smaller, diminished mostly in number, even less regular than now in eruption and position, and even less resistant. The future of the beard is uncertain, but no such weakening as with the hair of the head is yet observable.

The body will tend to slenderness in youth, the breasts smaller, the pelvis little affected the lower limbs longer, the upper shorter, the hands and feet narrower, and the fingers and toes more slender, with the fifth toe further diminishing. As to the internal organs, the most obvious probabilities are a further weakening and diminution of the appendix, and a shortening, with diminution of capacity f the intestines. As food will likely be more refined and made more digestible, the necessity of a spacious large intestine will diminish in proportion.

Physiologically, the tendencies indicate a rather more rapid pulse and respiration with slightly increased temperature—in other words, a livelier rather than a slower metabolism. But substantial changes will probably require millenniums; the functions are too firmly established for any quick change.

So much for normal conditions. There is, regrettably also the debit side to be considered. Man has ever paid for his advance, is paying now, and will pay in future. Functional disorders, digestive, secretive, eliminative, disorders of sleep and sexual, can not but multiply with the increasing stresses, eruptions and absorptions. Mental derangements will probably be more frequent. Destructive diseases such as diabetes, and various skin troubles, will probably increase until thoroughly understood and hindered. The teeth, the mouth, the nose, the eyes and ears, will ever call for increased attention. The feet will trouble. Childbirth will not be easier nor less painful; though assistance will equally rise in effectiveness. Due to prolonged life, heart troubles, apoplexies, cancer and senile weaknesses of all sorts, will tend to be more common, until mastered by medicine. All this, with many social abnormalities, will retard man's progress but will not stop it, for the indications are that he will rise equal to all his growing needs as they develop and begin to hurt. If there is a danger to human future, it is in the lowered birthrate.

As man advances in knowledge he will grow to understand what is best for him so that it will be easier for him to follow the right road. He will advance in the control of nature; he will better understand disease and its antidotes and immunization.

The Lake

In sprin of youth it was my lot
To haunt of the wide world a spot
The which I could not loce the less,
So lovely was the loneliness
Of a wild lake, with black rock bound,
And the tall pines that towered around.

But when the night had thrown her pall
Upon that spot, as upon all,
And the mystic wind went by
Murmuring in melody,
Then—ah, then—I would awake
To the terror of the lone lake.
Yet that terror was not fright,
But a tremulous delight:
A feeling not the jewelled mine,
Could teach or bribe me to define,
Nor love. . . . . .

WHEN GASTRIC JUICES FAIL TO FLOW

You know how badly an engine runs when it gets clogged up. It's the same with your body when your gastric—or digestive—juices fail to flow. Your food, instead of being assimilated by your system, simply collects and stagnates inside you, producing harmful acid poisons. What you need then is a tonic—Nature's own tonic—Nature's six mineral salts.

You get all these six salts in Kruschen Salts, and each one of them has an action of its own. Together, they stimulate and tune up the bodily functions from a number of different angles. The first effect of these salts is to promote the flow of the saliva and so awaken the appetite. The next action occurs in the stomach, where the digestive juices are encouraged to pour out and act upon the food. Again in the intestinal tract certain of these salts promote a further flow of these vital juices which deal with partly digested food and prepare it finally for absorption into the system.

So you see there is no mystery about Kruschen. It works on purely scientific and well-known principles. Prove it for yourself.

PACIFIERS OR COMFORTS

The pacifier or comfort is one of the few things for which not one good word can be said. It is undesirable from every point of view.

To begin with, this article is misnamed, because it does not pacify the baby. It does the very reverse. The constant sucking of the comfort makes the child irritable and tends to upset him. True, it may stop his crying for the time being, but it does so simply because he has succeeded in getting what he wants.

The reason he cries for his comfort is because he has been given the habit of having one. That does not mean that it is good for him. It simply indicates that he has acquired the bad habit of having something in his mouth, just as some older people want to chew gum constantly.

The pacifier does actual harm. It causes a deformity to the mouth, commonly seen in projecting teeth. The bones of the baby's body are rather soft and so they are easily moulded by pressure. The constant sucking of the comfort forces the bones around the mouth into an abnormal shape and destroys the natural formation of that part.

The pacifier may be and frequently is the means whereby disease germs gain entrance into the child's body. It is impossible to keep a comfort clean. No mother would think of using nipples on a feeding bottle for her baby unless they had been boiled. Neither should she think of placing a comfort in the baby's mouth unless it had been boiled each time it came into contact with something, and that is not practicable. What actually happens is that the comfort is constantly moist, and it comes into contact with many articles even if it hangs from the child's neck. The result is that it is continually soiled by the many objects which it touches, and so it frequently picks up the germs of disease and these are later transferred by it to the baby's mouth.

There is no reason why a child should be constantly sucking at something. The comfort does not help to keep the baby healthy or to make him happy. The child who is irritable has something wrong with him which needs to be properly dealt with, and the way to do this is certainly not by sticking a comfort into his mouth.

Babies do not need a comfort any more than they need to be rocked to sleep or to wear long clothes. We have learned to let the baby go to sleep quietly by himself and to clothe him so that he may kick and exercise. In the same way, let us discard the comfort which in addition to being useless is harmful.

LET US SMILE

"To-morrow night," said the evangelist, "I'm going to talk about liars. Before the service I would like everyone to read the 17th chapter of Mark."

The following evening at the beginning of his remarks he said, "My subject to-night is 'Liars.' How many of you read the 17th chapter of Mark?"

More than 200 hands went up.

"Those who raised their hands will pay particular attention," said the evangelist. "There is no 17th chapter of Mark."

Hotel Clerk (suspiciously to prospective guest, whose bag had come apart, thereby disclosing a strange contrivance—"May I ask what that queer thing is?"

FENIAN VETERAN, 86, OBSERVES BIRTHDAY

Major Grant Has Lived in Georgetown for 70 Years

Major Lachlan Grant, one of the few remaining veterans of the Fenian Raid, celebrated his 86th birthday on Friday last, at the home of his grand-daughter, Mrs. J. A. Early, Georgetown. Major Grant enjoys excellent health considering his advanced years, but to-day is confined to his bed with a slight cold.

He is one of the oldest residents of Georgetown and can recall many interesting chapters in the history of the town and district, where he has resided for over seventy years. Major Grant has served his town in nearly every office in the gift of the citizens. He has been a member of both the high and public school boards and for many years was a member of the council.

Always keenly interested in the militia, he has been with the Halton Rifles since a young man. Major Grant is a Presbyterian and a Liberal. He has one son, John, residing in Chicago, Ill.—Georgetown Herald.

OBITUARY

Frederick W. Hill

Frederick W. Hill died in the Toronto General Hospital from lymphatic leukemia. Mr. Hill was born at Meadowvale, and was in his thirty-seventh year. He was a son of Mrs. Grace Hill and the late Richard Hill, and spent his early years at Pine Orchard. Twenty years ago he entered the service of the Standard Bank of Canada, and at the time of his death was manager of the Canadian Bank of Commerce at Mundare, Alberta. Mr. Hill went overseas with the 151st Infantry (Edmonton) Battalion, was wounded at Vimy Ridge in April, 1917, and was invalided home in 1918. He is survived by his widow and two boys, four years and fourteen months of age.

COOKSVILLE

An apple tree bearing two distinct varieties of apples on a single limb has been found on the farm of J. Walker & Son of Cooksville. According to the owner, the tree has never been grafted, and yet on one limb are to be found both Snow and St. Lawrence apples in profusion. When asked how he accounted for this strange condition, Mr. Walker expressed the opinion that it had come about as a result of bees carrying the pollen from the blossoms of one variety into the blossoms of the other.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Royce lent their home to the Excelsiors' Bible Class of the United Church for a corn roast last night, the event being well patronized, the proceeds to go towards the improvement of the basement of the church.

C. S. Macdonald, of Toronto, formerly of Brampton, died very suddenly while playing golf in Toronto. He was a retired business man and very wealthy.

Ten thousand people attended the reception given the Excelsiors of Brampton, winners of the Mann cup for the second time, Thursday night, and half a dozen brass bands furnished music.

MARRIAGES

Sutton—Ostrander

The marriage of Miss Alice Wilhelmina Ostrander, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Ostrander, Huttonville, to Mr. Charles Cuthbert Sutton, Brampton, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Sutton, Schomberg, was solemnized at the home of the bride's parents. Rev. H. E. Payne officiated. The house was attractively decorated with autumn flowers arranged in masses. Mrs. M. Bellerby, Owen Sound, played the wedding music. The bride wore a princess frock of eggshell satin and lace and her hat, a close-fitting Dutch shape, was made of the same lace. She carried a shower of Butterfly roses and lily-of-the-valley. Mrs. Clay Ingram, Toronto, was matron of honor, wearing blue georgette and lace with hat to match, carrying Ophelia roses. Mr. Bernard Sutton, Toronto, was best man. Following the luncheon, Mr. and Mrs. Sutton left by motor for a trip through Ontario, the bride travelling in a rust-colored worsted, with black and white fur and hat to match. They will live in Brampton on their return. Mrs. Ostrander, mother of the bride, was gowned in brown ripple crepe, with Eugenie hat to match. Mrs. Sutton wore midnight blue crepe with touches of egg-shell, blue hat and corsage of roses and lily-of-the-valley.

Pinchin-Bonter

On Saturday, September 12 at the home of the bride's parents, the marriage took place of Margaret, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. Bonter, of Toronto, to Mr. Robert Pinchin, son of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Pinchin, of Clarkson. The bride, who was unattended, wore a frock of delphinium blue and carried a bouquet of pink roses and lily-of-the-valley. Rev. R. A. Spencer, of Clarkson, performed the ceremony before the group of relatives and intimate friends. The young couple left on a motor trip to Quebec and after their return, will reside in Clarkson.

PORT CREDIT

For the second time within a week, fire broke out Saturday night at a frame cottage, corner of Bay and Peter Streets here, the property of Mrs. N. Patchett, of Clarkson. Damage is estimated at $500. In the previous blaze $100 damage was caused.

When members of the local fire brigade, under Chief W. Newman, arrived, the fire which had its origin in the attic, had gained much headway, the flames coming through the roof and windows.

Early Saturday morning Police Chief Telfer Wilson of Port Credit found a man wandering along the Hamilton Highway, unable to give his name and apparently suffering from a lapse of memory. Closer investigation revealed that the man had sustained injuries on his head, believed to be the result of either a violent blow or possibly an automobile striking him. Dr. A. B. Sutton of Port Credit had the man taken to St. Joseph's hospital, Toronto, where he was identified as Harry Cornes, 24 Le May Road, North Toronto, as the result of a description flashed on The Globe newscast at noon on Saturday. His condition today shows some improvement, although he is still unable to tell just what happened to him.

Funds well nigh exhausted, Marvin Nelson, Fort Dodge, Iowa, youth, winner of last year's Exhibition swim, but who this year did not finish, started for home yesterday via the hitchhike route. Nelson on arrival plans to use the money which would have been spent on railway fare, to further his education. He will return for next year's swim, he says, when he expects to line up in Johnny Walker's camp.

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS

Don Ellsworth's wife, former actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, learns their married life has been unhappy.

Peter Piper, a Herald reporter, while trying to get an interview with Dr. Cavanaugh, meets Barbara Cavanaugh, the attractive daughter, and finds she was engaged to Don before his marriage. Dr. Cavanaugh identifies a body burned in the tule marsh outside the city as that of Sheila O'Shay. Barbara faints when she hears this. Mrs. Kane, Sheila's maid, is arrested, and Peter learn that Sheila forced Ellsworth to marry her by a breach of promise threat. Peter makes a social call on Barbara.

CHAPTER XXII.—(Cont'd.)

"Please don't look like that," Peter blurted. "I like you ever so much better when you're Alice in Wonderland. I like you that way best of all."

"But this isn't Wonderland."

The sad little voice was barely a murmur, from very far away.

"Besides," the voice had come back this time, was near and crisp and firm, like watercress just out of a brook, "you musn't like me that way, in pieces. I won't be a character that you've made up for yourself. I'm just—I. If that's not good enough—"

"It's quite good enough." To his surprise, as if it belonged to someone else, Peter heard his voice shaking. "I'm sorry I made such a fool of myself, and got mad a minute ago."

"You were, rather," Barbara agreed. "After all, the only times I'd ever seen you, you'd been after a story. I thought it was the only thing you ever did. I'm glad it isn't." Her eyes, lifted to his, had the undisguised beaming friendliness of a child's.

Peter made a decision. It was rather a momentous decision, inasmuch as it sacrificed his gods—the gods of The Herald—without a quiver.

"Look here," he said solemnly. "I promise that I'll never mention the Ellsworth case to you again. I guess that'll show whether I'm always 'after' something."

"Oh, but don't do that!" There was a touch of panic in the hurrying protest. "I want to know all I can about it. The newspapers never tell anything until it's—too late. Don't shut me out, please!"

Peter's hand reached out in a gesture of warning. She was giving herself away—and she musn't; not to Peter Piper of The Herald. The small face turned up to him was harried.

"Look here," he said again. "Are you taking me for a friend?"

"Yes," she said quietly. "I've no business to, I suppose. But I think I am."

Peter sighed—a heavy, lusty and by no means chivalrous sigh with which to greet an offer of friendship.

"It complicates things, rather. But it's worth it."

"Thanks." That was said as a small boy might say it, hiding feeling with an abrupt casualness.

"I can't help knowing that you are—interested—in this case."

"I am that." In the remembered Irish inflection of her voice he heard again the gamin, the "gutternipe," the girl of the orphanage, the girl who had been like a little wild thing in a hostile wood. If she had bared her small sharp teeth and struck, in circumstances she could not know, he for one, would remember that girl of the orphanage. He would not blame her for it. Never. But she did not know what she was up against. He didn't know either, for that matter. He'd have to know, if he was to help her.

"I won't shut you out," he said gently. "I'll tell you anything you want to know. But believe me, it's for your sake I ask you not to shut me out either. Let's go at it together."

"I know." She closed her eyes. Her face became a sharp, white mask against the dark chair back. For a moment he wondered if she were going to faint again. But her eyes, when she opened them, were intent and very steady. "I'm willing to help you in any way I can," she said. "I'll help you with my father. If there are things I can tell you, I'll say so. But I'm asking you to be frank with me, when all I can promise is to be as frank with you as I can. It doesn't seem a very fair bargain."

"It isn't a bargain at all—I'm not dealing in bargains. Did you think I was holding out for aquid pro quo?"

"No," Barbara said hastily. "Now don't go and get angry again. You're so—unpredictable."

"Goodness knows what I'm letting myself in for. I may be compounding a felony, for all I know. Not that I care, only I generally prefer to compound my own felonies, with my eyes open.

"But I'm going to trust your judgment—because I believe you've got judgment. Only there's just one thing.

"I'm willing to tell you anything you want to know—only you must never ask me to withhold anything from the paper unless you can give me a perfectly clear and complete reason for it. And even then you must leave it to me absolutely.

"If you use anything I get to keep somebody else two leaps ahead of the sheriff—well, that just adds to the complications of existence. By the way, the one bit of news you probably don't know is that Don Ellsworth married Sheila O'Shay under threat of a breach of promise suit."

"Oh, I am glad!" Barbara's face was lit with sudden, incredulous delight. "Me," she added thoughtfully, "I didn't know that."

"You seem rather pleased about it." The room, for all its dancing firelight, seemed gray and chilly, tricked out in the flaming mockery of orange marigolds. Don Ellsworth belonged to her own tribe.

"I am. Up to the very day that I got his wedding announcement, I thought Don and I were engaged. I just had to believe there was some explanation—he wasn't the sort of person who could let you down without a reason. Of course I'm glad to know he didn't do a thing like that of his own free will!"

"You care—such a lot?"

"That isn't the point at all. He would cut his tongue out sooner than acknowledge a thing like that. It's the one thing I never understood—and couldn't ask."

"Well," said Peter wearily. "I don't think he'll share your transports at having it known. It rather puts a crimp in him as the bereaved young husband of an adored wife."

"You mean they'll suspect him?"

"They'll suspect everybody they possibly can—you can bet on that."

Barbara opened her mouth as if for a furious protest. Then she closed it again and merely squared her shoulders against the back of the chair.

"Don's all right," she said at last. "Only I suppose there isn't any use shouting about it. But if you go after him with any of your strong-arm methods, be sure you know what you're about. Don doesn't like newspaper reporters—not one little bit, he doesn't!"

CHAPTER XXIII.

Peter parked "Bossy" in the gloom of a large shade tree at the corner, and extinguished the lights.

"If you do get bumped, it can't hurt you very much. You've got to take your chances in this game, Bossy, old girl," he remarked.

Then he marched debonnairely up the graveled driveway and rang the doorbell of the Ellsworth house. When on business Peter lost no time over doorbells. And he was on business now—on "detail" to cover the Ellsworth house and not to come back till he got something.

That is was now 9 o'clock in the evening and Peter's working day supposedly closed at 4, meant nothing to Jimmy. To be fair, it meant very little to Peter, either. His gray overcoat was worn smooth at the cuffs so that the criss-cross of threads was plainly visible to the observing, and one pocket was ripped half-way down by the jamming of copy-paper, folded magazines, and large apples into its capacious maw, but he wore it as jauntily as if it were an opera cape.

Peter on an assignment was not to be intimidated by men, angels or butlers.

The door opened with surprising promptness and revealed a young man with eyebrows done in charcoal, a sullen mouth, and eyes puffy from lack of sleep, whose hat and overcoat indicated that he was just leaving the house. He had the air of one not so much answering the doorbell as accidentally coinciding with it.

Peter stepped at once into the shaft of light that streamed from he open door.

"Oh you rang? Someone will answer the door in a minute." The young man would have brushed past if Peter had not obviously and bulkily stood in the way.

"I rather think you're the person I wanted to see," Peter remarked easily, with one of his friendliest grins. "In that case, mayn't we consider the door already answered? You're Mr. Don Ellsworth, I think."

"What did you want to see me about? I'm in rather a hurry." The voice was brusque and noncommittal.

"I think it would be worth your while to wait for a few minutes," Peter said firmly.

"I don't believe I know who you are—?" The young man, defensive but puzzled, peered at Peter's kindly and quite unabashed countenance.

"You don't. I'm Peter Piper of The Herald. I'm sorry to have to trouble you at this time, when I know you must be busy and worried, but if you can give me a ten-minute interview, it will help greatly in putting your position in a proper fight before the public."

"I have nothing whatever to say in which the public is interested." The voice was controlled, but the heavy brows drew together in a single line across Don Ellsworth's forehead.

"I'm sorry, but the public already is interested. It's painful to you, but you can't help it. Certainly I can't help it. It's news. That news will be printed despite you and me.

"If it were news about somebody else, you'd read it. It happens to be news about you, and other people insist on reading it. Believe me, I'm not invading your privacy because it's my personal idea of fun. But if you answer my questions frankly, what you say will derive an immense advantage from being said by you of your own free will. You can't keep the public out of it, so you'd better have them on your side. I'm giving you your chance."

Tails They Lose*

Is the London sparrow loving its tail?

The writer has recently noticed a number of tailless sparrows in London suburbs, but didn't pay very much attention to the fact. He thought that they had been fighting, or had had a narrow escape—by the tail feathers—from a predatory cat.

But it seems to be a fairly general phenomenon in London, and scientists have now begun to take note of it. There is a reference to it in a recent number of a scientific journal, in which it is described as "a very peculiar form of degeneracy . . . the breakage of the tail feathers some time after the moult."

London pigeons, now being rigorously kept down, have always had the reputation of being unhealthy; now we are told that London sparrows are degenerates. A big city seems to be a bad place for birds.

Probably that is because, in a city, their natural food is often unobtainable. In the country the main diet of the sparrows consists of hard seeds. In the cities they eat breadcrumbs and soft scraps. This diet, it has been suggested, may be responsible for their broken tail feathers.

Making it Clear

The steamship office clerk was being pestered by questions from a prospective traveller. Finally he decided to teach the man a lesson.

"Now, sir," he said, "upper or lower berth?"

"What's the difference?" asked the customer.

The clerk rubbed his hands triumphantly.

"The difference is five shillings," he commenced to explain. "The lower berth is higher than the upper one. The higher price is for the lower. If you want it lower you have to go higher. We sell the upper lower than the lower. Most people don't like the lower upper, although it's lower on account of it being higher. When you occupy an upper you have to go up to bed and get down to get up."

London's official affairs are handled by an army of 6,500 people, who are responsible for the expenditure of about £63,250,000 a year.

The ADVENTURES of CAPTAIN JIMMY and his Dog SCOTTIE

What came before: After the rescue of the crew of the burning ship, Captain Jimmy decides to fly over the island of Formosa and visit the country of the head-hunting savages. He and Captain Stuart take off early in the morning.

But don't think that the Taiwans are not still head-hunters. They're just as savage as ever, and all efforts to civilize them have failed. Every young boy is taught to steal through the woods and make his kill. Then he brings back the head of a fallen enemy — for what Taiwan girl would have a youth who had not proven his bravery by bringing her back a head?

Yes, sir, they still hunt heads in the mountains of Formosa. So dangerous are these savage men of the hills that the Japanese have placed a wide road through the island, guarded by soldiers and a high fence charged with electric current.

Now and then the savages tunnel under the fence and attack some outlying camp where camphor is made. One or two of the Japanese are always killed before the head-hunters are driven back, yet they continue to push right up to the guard line, for the best camphor trees are found on the mountain slopes and the industry is very profitable.

Flying low over the island, we were struck by the wonderful beauty of the country—also we were impressed to see a couple of planes hurriedly leave the ground to investigate us. Maybe those Japanese army planes weren't fast. They came up so quickly it made it feel as if we were tied to a post.

We knew that we could not get away from them, so we spiralled down into the harbor and taxied up to the landing. Dozens of people crowded down to the water front to meet us, curious to see what was going to happen. Then a big automobile, driven by a chauffeur in uniform rolled up to the water front and stopped. From it alighted the snappiest Japanese officer you ever saw.

He certainly looked like trouble, for we knew we shouldn't have flown over the island without permission. Anyway, there we were, so we might as well make the best of it.

He waited until we came within speaking distance—but before he had a chance to say a word, I asked for the Governor of the island. In very precise English, he replied:

"I have the honor to present His Highness, Count Ogachi."

I introduced Stuart and myself and explained that we were anxious to visit the camphor camp and see the article being made. By this time, the two Japanese army planes had arrived and two very hot, irritated army officers were on the scene. They all seemed put out — probably because they hadn't found an opportunity to shoot us down or place us under arrest.

They all asked us a flock of questions. When one would run out of ideas another would take it up. Finally they brought us before a magistrate and we answered all the old questions and a lot of new ones as well.

Then, all of a sudden, they decided we were all right. We could go where we pleased. Visit the camphor camps—and they gave us an official guide and a car! We were too surprised for words.

After a drive of fifty miles or more we came to the end of the good road. Out we climbed and trudged up the steep path into the mountains. On both sides were evidence of great camphor trees having been chopped down; here and there stumps had been chopped apart and even roots dug up. The roots, you know, are the richest in camphor.

Are Stamps a Menace?

A campaign has been started in France against what is called the "pernicious habit" of licking stamps.

"The habit," we are assured, "is dangerous. Microbes are carried by stamps. Even poisons may be absorbed from the dyes.

It is certainly unpleasant to have to lick any considerable number of stamps one after the other, and most people who have many letters to stamp use a sponge or a gadget of some kind for the purpose. But there is really no need for alarm.

Similar "scares" have been started from time to time about paper money, or even about coins. But they have never caused any of us to refuse money.

FASHION HINT

"How to make my old short skirts conform to the new length was a problem to me until I hit on this plan. I dropped the hems; and as the part that had been turned under was darker than the rest, I redyed the entire dress, after having bleached the goods, following directions in the Diamond Dyes package.

"I used Diamond Dyes for the redyeing, of course. I have dyed many things with these wonderful colors. They have saved me many dollars and have never failed to give perfect results—smooth, even colors—fast to wear and washing. Friends think my things are new when I redye or tint them with Diamond Dyes. They do give the most gorgeous colors!"

"Freighter Plane" To Be Used On Northern Trade Route

A new era in the aviation industry in Canada is opened by the purchase, by Canadian Airways, Limited, of a new-type Junkers "freighter" 'plane, for service in Northern Canada. The use of airplanes for carrying freight is already an accepted thing but the coming of the new machine from Germany, probably some time in October, will establish the business on a new scale.

The machine, known as the "J-62," is primarily designed for carrying freight and can carry a load of two and one-half tons for more than 600 miles at normal cruising speed, which is about 100 miles per hour. For a range of 620 miles, it carries a pay load of 32 per cent. of the flying weight.

The new 'plane, the first of its type to be brought to America, will be used in Northern Canada, officials of Canadian Airways stated, with headquarters in Winnipeg. No definite plans for its employment have been made as yet, and it will be operated "wherever there is work for it." Because of its large cargo space and large pay load, it will be valuable in freighting supplies and machinery in to mines and fur posts in the interior.

The 'plane is an all-metal monomotored, low-wing monoplane, incorporating several advanced features of aerodynamical designing.

10,000 Hens Lay Eggs In Old London Buses

Londoners have often inquired of their favorite papers what had become of the old horse-drawn omnibuses which used to crowd the streets of the metropolis, while writers to poultry papers had inquired why the hens of Bedfordshire always carried off the prizes for egg-laying at the county fairs.

A reporter who was recently sent to Bedfordshire to investigate the latter problem solves both in the issue of Aug. 20 of The Daily Telegram. He visited a farm in Bibbleswade and found that the poultry there lived, laid eggs, and raised chickens in the missing buses. He thus describes his findings:

"The chickens do not take possession of their homes just as they come off the road. Some of the buses I saw were being stripped of their seats, straps and handrails and engineers were dismantling the engines. They are left with their wheels to enable them to be moved easily about the land by a tractor.

"In the place of the engine a water tank is placed under the bonnet, which feeds a drinking pan beside the bus. Within the bus I saw special trap nests, by which a record of every hen's egg-laying standard can be kept.

"It is no idle joke to say that every fowl there knows her own bus. There are 10,000 of them, all pedigreed birds, and while I was there J. A. Whitehead, the owner, had all the Rhode Island Reds and the White Sussex hens fed together. Hundreds of them scratched and scuttled for the grain, and then brown hens and white ones dispersed in various directions down the avenues of buses until they reached their own particular homes. Mr. Whitehead told me he paid out £5 for each bus."

Hungarian Aristocrats Enter Business or Trade

Budapest—The end of the war brought great changes to Hungary. The loss of Transylvania and Slovakia, in particular, meant that many of the leading families saw large parts, of their estates pass into foreign hands. Their wealth decreased, and in consequence many of the younger members were forced to fend for themselves. Formerly, it was considered quite undignified for a Hungarian aristocrat to enter trade or business, and even becoming a civil servant was more or less a concession. But today things have quite changed writes a correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor. The sons and daughters of the highest families are in public service, banks and industry. Countesses and baronesses, and their daughters are doing applied art work, interior decoration, fancy leather work, while others are busy translating novels and general literature. A popular figure in Budapest society has become a guide for foreign tourists in this capital, using his linguistic gifts to great benefit. Though they regret the circumstances which have compelled them to adopt such measures, few of them would say that they are any less happy thereby.

The Penny Whistle

The new moon hangs like an ivory bugle
In the naked frosty blue;
And the ghylls of the forest, already blackened
By winter, are blackened anew.

The brooks that cut up and increase the forest,
As if they had never known
The sun, are roaring with black hollow voices
Betwixt rage and a moan.

But still the caravan-hut by the hollies
Like a kingfisher gleams between:
Round the mossed old hearths of the charcoal-burners
First primroses ask to be seen.

The charcoal-burners are black, but their linen
Blows white on the line;
And white the letter the girl is reading
Under that crescent fine;

And her brother who hides apart in a thicket,
Slowly and surely playing
On a whistle an olden nursery melody,
Says far more than I am saying.

Beginning a Library

In a world that simply teems with books, many of which are procurable at prices so small as to be within reach of people with the most slender means, it is disconcerting to learn from a recent statement, made upon the authority of a number of university teachers, that the average student of the present generation does not know how to read for himself.

There was a time when poor students had a greater familiarity with books than their more fortunate successors to-day. They had not the same advantages but many of them seem to have been endowed with, or early to have acquired, a book-sense, which led them to collect for themselves curious little libraries, which they gleaned from secondhand book-shelves or bookbarrows at the expenditure of a few of their never too plentiful coppers. And there are at the present time, possessors of fine libraries, who can point with pardonable pride to a handful of modest, shabby, but none the less precious little volumes, occupying an honored place upon their well furnished shelves, that had been gleaned in this way, and which represent the beginnings from which their library has grown.

That being the case, we venture to suggest that young and old alike should be encouraged to form libraries of their own. A very good rule to adopt would be that, whenever we feel the desire to read a book a second time, to pause and consider whether that is not a book we should buy for ourselves. The result would be that as these judiciously selected volumes gradually form themselves into a growing company of book-friends, we shall come to realize that we are in proud possession of a library of our own, and that our appetite for books has been growing with what it has been feeding upon.—From "The Art of Reading," by Henry Guppy.

Ditch Diggers Fly 25 Miles to Jobs

Mishawaka, Ind. — Modern ditch diggers, or at least some of them, fly to work. Messrs. Claude Grose and Frank Lipka of Mishawaka, employed digging a drainage ditch at Baldwin Lake, fly 25 miles to work.

Both are skilled workmen, but had been out of work for several months and took jobs on the drainage ditch as common laborers. Lipka owns his own plane, an old ship he bought at the South Bend airport three years ago. Grose has at his disposal a newer plane which he keeps at Mishawaka for the owner, a man who lives at Valparaiso, Ind.

The planes are stored at Eagle Point, not far from Mishawaka. The men originally flew to work only when their automobiles were not working, or when they were late, but recently they have been making the trip by plane two or three times a week. Both men have private pilot licenses.

In the vicinity of Kodiak, Dr. Hrdlicka tells of finding relics of prehistoric villages which show Asiatic origin and had been destroyed and revived many times before passing into oblivion. Dr. Hrdlicka also said that these settlements antedated the Russians by several centuries.

Sunday School Lesson

Our study during the past Quarter has lifted the curtain on the early years of the Christian Church, and the manner of its growth and expansion. It should be our aim in this review to fix in the minds of our group the salient factors in that growth, and their relation to one another. We should see the outlook of the Christian Church growing from its first narrow Jewish exclusiveness until their conceive Christianity as the universal religion. As a means of bringing forward this discussion, you might have different members of the class make short reports on the following topics, or you may lead a discussion following some such sequence as is here suggested.

1. The meaning of the Holy Spirit and how his presence was manifested in the work and preaching of the apostles. Note, also, what this experience of the Holy Spirit meant to the Gentile Christians.

2. Persecution resulting in the spread of Christianity. Note especially the scattering of the disciples following the death of Stephen with the consequent scattering of the gospel.

3. The contribution of Peter and that of Paul in extending the gospel to the Gentiles. Peter's experience at Joppa, and the conversion of Cornelius will be noted; also Peter's reference to this as the Council at Jerusalem. But observe that Paul was the persistent champion of a wider outlook for the Christianity, and the real leader of its extension to the Gentile

4. The contribution of Barnabas to the promotion of the early church. Besides recognizing the fine Christian spirit of the man, note how he befriended Paul from the first, when he was rather in suspicion, and put him in the way of exercising his great powers to the full. Then, of course, he shared splendidly in that first missionary journey from Antioch to Derbe.

5. The beginning of foreign missions. The attitude of the Church at Antioch, and its fine spirit in releasing its ablest men and sending them out on this mission to foreign parts

6. The gist of Paul's message, as gathered from his own experience and from his preaching, as seen in Acts, chapters 13, 14. You would recall here, too, the meaning of conversion, as experienced and as preached by Paul.

7. The Judaizing controversy in the early church—the attempt to make all Gentiles become Jews, in order to become Christians. Observe the reasons for such a contention, and the way it was met. Paul again was the leader against this narrow policy, and remained the champion of religious liberty.

8. An interesting report might be made on the religions of some of the Gentiles of Asia Minor, as, for instance, the worship of Jupiter and Mercury at Lystra.

Throughout this early glimpse of the Christian Church we see that the Christian gospel is something infinitely greater than the men who handled it, with potentialities in it of becoming the world-wide religion of mankind, which alone can satsfy the life-needs of the human race.

Why Not Live 100 Years?

Some interesting facts are brought out through the perusal of the Eighth Annual Report of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, Ottawa. One of particular interest is the fact that in 1928 there were 79 deaths of reputed Centenarians, 35 of whom were males and 44 females. The ages as given in death certificates ranged from 100 to 108 years.

Each province of Canada was represented in this loss, Ontario having 28 and Manitoba and Alberta two each, the others being distributed between these figures.

That living for a century or over is not so uncommon as may be supposed is evidenced by the following record of deaths of centenarians during recent years in Canada.

1921—72 deaths.
1922—63 deaths.
1923—65 deaths.
1924—39 deaths, (22 males, 17 females, from 100 to 113 years).
1926—91 deaths, (34 males, 57 females, form 100 to 116 years).
1927—80 deaths, (34 males, 46 females, from 100 to 113 years).

Canadian Grapes Delicious Food

Made Delicious Conserves and Desserts During Winter Months

Reports received by the Fruit Branch of the Dominion Government indicate that the Canadian grape crop this year will amount to 32,000 tons of grapes, coming from vineyards in Ontario and British Columbia. As any doctor will say, there is no fruit more healthful than the grape. It contains iron, and eaten raw adds bulk to the diet. In conserves, it offers carbohydrates also to the diet, supplying heat and energy.

Grapes make wholesome conserves and refreshing beverages. The Canadian grapes include blue, white and amber varieties, and both in quality and flavor are equal to any imported fruit.

A simply made grape conserve is jam. Separate skins and simmer pulp of 3 lbs. grapes for about minutes in a covered kettle. Remove seeds by sieving. Crush skins (tough skins need chopping) and mix with the cooked pulp. Add ½ cup of water, stir until mixture boils, cover and simmer slowly for 30 minutes. Then measure 4 cups (2 lbs.) of cooked fruit into large kettle. Add 7 cups, (3 lbs.) sugar, mix and bring to a full rolling boil over hottest fire. Stir constantly before and while boiling. Boil hard 1 minute. Remove from fire and stir in ½ cup of liquid pectin. Skim; pour quickly. Cover hot jam with film of hot paraffin. When jam is cold, cover with 1/8 inch hot paraffin. Roll glass to spread paraffin on sides. If desired, grated orange rind may be added to the jam. This recipe makes about 10 eight ounce jars of jam.

Britain Now Supporting Making of Cheap Jewelry

A phase of the British jewelry business which has developed rapidly during the last five years is that of the chain stores selling foreign-made imitation gems, according to a Department of Commerce report. Both the number and elaborateness of these shops have been steadily increasing and they now practically dominate the field.

The first of these chain projects was that of a British firm, who about eight years ago instituted the guinea string of artificial pearls. At that time the trend of fashion was toward a cheap line of pearls, and for a period of years opened a number of shops. The pearls this firm did a large business and were manufactured in France.

With the decline in demand for artificial pearls about five years ago, another company entered the market selling Czechoslovak and German rings and brooches. Ten shillings was their top price at this time, but as the volume of business increased and their sources of supply became more efficient, the greater portion of their stock consisted of the five-shilling variety.

The shops are located on the streets devoted to the best women's trade and a great deal of attention has been devoted to the arrangement of window displays and showcases.

A Perfect Alibi

It was the twentieth time Bill Sluggers stood in the dock at the local police court.

The magistrate opened the case:

"You are accused of robbing the defendant at four o'clock on the morning of the tenth. What have you to say?"

Bill sluggers smiled triumphantly.

"Not guilty, your worship," he said. "I've a lullaby, too."

"Lullaby?" echoed the magistrate. "You mean an alibi, I suppose?"

Bill shrugged his shoulders.

"Call it what you like, your worship," he continued, "but my missus will swear that I was walking the floor with the twins at the hour mentioned in the charge."

Quick COMFORT for fretful upset children

ALL children are subject to little upsets. They come at unexpected times. They seem twice as serious in the dead of night. But there's one form of comfort on which a mother can always rely: good old Castoria. This pure vegetable preparation can't harm the tiniest infant. Yet mild as it is, it soothes a restless, fretful baby like nothing else. Its quick relief soon sees the youngster comfortable once more, back to sleep. Even an attack of colic, or diarrhea, yields to the soothing influence of Castoria.

Keep Castoria in mind, and keep a bottle in the house—always. Give it to any child whose tongue is coated, or whose breath is bad. Continue with Castoria until the child is grown!

DATE TUESDAY, SEPT. 29th

BRAMPTON

Ten thousand ardent lacrosse fans cheered themselves hoarse and hoarser when the Excelsior lacrosse team, twice champions of Canada, returned to their homes Thursday night after a triumphant march across Canada to capture the Mann Cup with a team crippled by losses to box lacrosse.

Seven bands led a procession of hundreds of roaring rioters over the mile-long route through the town, to end in Gage Park, where the champions received the plaudits of the biggest crowd Brampton has ever seen. The Peel and Dufferin Regimental Band, Georgetown, Acton, Milton, Orangeville, Bolton and Woodbridge bands supplied the time for the procession, while almost every noise-making device supplied the volume.

On the stand, Mayor George Akehurst spoke through the amplifying system the official words of welcome to the boys, congratulations to the officials who have led them, and held out the thanks of the town to the men who financed the trip west.

After duplicating the feat of the Senior Excelsiors in winning the championship of its class for the second consecutive year, Brampton Intermediates received a royal welcome from the citizens of the town on Saturday night.

The Peel and Dufferin Regimental Band met the team at the town limits, and escorted it to the heart of the town, where, before the balcony of the Victoria Hotel, it received an official welcome from Mayor Akehurst, Reeve W. T. Beatty, E. W. McCulloch, deputy-reeve, and T. W. Duggan. Abie Hillgartner, manager of the team, Jack Fink, Frank Blanchard and other officials of the team replied.

With the red, white and blue barred standard of Siam fluttering above them in the summer sunshine, pipers from all parts of Canada proudly marched and counter-marched in the grounds of the Banff Springs Hotel, Banff, Alta., during the recent Highland Gathering, which was graced by the presence of T.M. King Prajadhipok and Queen Rambai Barni of Siam and their suite and a large number of distinguished guests. His Majesty, who opened the festival by raising the flag of St. Andrew, met an interesting character in the person of "Willie" Campbell, of New Westminster, B.C., who was a piper on the personal staff of H. M. Queen Victoria, when King Chuldalongkorn of Siam paid an official visit to her, at Osborne House, Isle of Wight, in 1894. Piper Campbell gave a special performance for King Prajadhipok, at the Banff meeting. A new feature of the Gathering was a competition for representatives of pipe bands of the 17 Canadian Scottish militia regiments, which was won by Piper Hector Macdonald, of Montreal. Dancing and Highland sports rounded out an excellent program, with specially presented Scotch light operas in the evenings. The picture shows the massed pipers, parading under the Siamese flag and (inset) T. M. the King and Queen of Siam and Piper Campbell.

Great Britain Declares Suspension of Gold Standard

Unprecedented Withdrawal of Gold for Foreign Account Brings Financial Step of Greatest Moment—Citizens Warned Against Buying Foreign Securities

London.—Great Britain, faced by huge withdrawals of gold and falling prices in the exchange, suspended the Gold Redemption Act, it was announced Sunday after a special Cabinet meeting.

It also was announced that the Bank of England had raised its discount rate to 6 per cent. The rate has been 4½ per cent.

Pending passage of urgent legislation concerning the British financial situation, the stock exchange will be closed for a day and provincial stock exchanges also have been asked by the London board to remain closed. It was emphasized, however, that there would be no interruption to ordinary banking business.

After the Cabinet meeting, a statement was issued from 10 Downing Street, residence of Premier Ramsay MacDonald, as follows:

Text of Communique

"His Majesty's Government have decided, after consultation with the Bank of England, that it has become necessary to suspend for the time being operation of the sub-section of the Gold Standard Act of 1925, which required the bank to sell gold at a fixed price.

"A bill for this purpose will be introduced immediately, and it is the intention of His Majesty's Government to ask Parliament to pass it through all its stages on Monday, the 21st of September; in the meantime, the Bank of England has been authorized to proceed accordingly in anticipation of the action of Parliament.

"The reasons which led to this decision are as follows:

Terrific Withdrawals

"Since the middle of July, funds amounting to more than £200,000,000 (approximately $1,000,000,000) have been withdrawn from the London market. The withdrawals have been met partly from gold and foreign currency held by the Bank of England, partly from proceeds of a credit of £50,000,000 ($250,000,000) which shortly matures, secured by the Bank of England from New York and Paris, and partly from proceeds of French and American credits amounting to £80,000,000 ($400,000,000) recently obtained by the Government.

"During the last few days, withdrawals of foreign balances have accelerated so sharply that His Majesty's Government felt it was bound to take the decision mentioned above.

"This decision will, of course, not affect obligations of His Majesty's Government or of the Bank of England which are payable in foreign currencies.

"Gold holdings of the Bank of England amount to some £130,000,000 ($650,000,000) and, having regard to contingencies which may have to be met, it is inadvisable to allow this reserve to be further reduced.

"There will be no interruption of ordinary banking business. Banks will be open as usual for the convenience of their customers, and there is no reason why sterling transactions should be affected in any way."

A Lucky Escape

Frank McDougal, of Owen Sound, narrowly escaped death when he was just entering his auto a freight car fell on it.

World Confidence Necessary For Ultimate Restoration

London.—The consequences of suspension of the gold standard by Great Britain depend upon the extent of world confidence in the nation, declared Sir Josiah Stamp, director of the Bank of England and an outstanding European banker.

Britain was forced to abandon the gold standard because "the run on the Bank of England had to be stopped at any cost simply because we had no more gold," Stamp said.

"The suspension of the gold standard amounts to this: If you have anything saved in sterling, what are you going to do with it? Are you going to keep it or sell it? If you keep it in the belief that Britain will restore the gold standard later, then everything is all right.

"But if you get panicky and decide to sell it, then naturally the result will be that the pound will depreciate.

"Just suppose that as a consequence of this move we should receive only $4 in exchange for the pound sterling, which is now worth $4.87. Then a Liverpool miller who desires to purchase American wheat must pay more for it. Naturally he would pass it on to the bakers, who, in turn, would pass it on to he public. As a result the British people would be compelled to pay much higher prices for anything that is imported.

"The same argument applies to war debts."

Wealth of Gold Still in Cariboo

University of B.C. Expert Makes Report on Survey

Victoria.—Gold to the value of hundreds of millions of dollars is still to be found in the Cariboo country, according to Dean R. W. Brock, of the University of British Columbia, who recently conducted a survey of the mineral resources of that section for the provincial government.

According to his report, evidence is accumulating to indicate that in the day when the Cariboo goldfields lured fortune-seekers from all quarters of the globe more than half a century ago, the surface of the district's mineral wealth was barely scratched. Intensive development and more modern methods may be expected to yield a vast treasure of gold far greater than the records of the past.

Gold scales, which for 20 years have been accumulating cobwebs in basements and warehouses at Quesnel, are restored to their former conspicuous places on the counters of Cariboo general stores for the accommodation of bar miners.

There are more prospectors at present working on the river bars and in the hills of Cariboo than at any other time in the last three or four decades.

Italy Offers Concessions In Colonizing North Africa

Rome.—Italy is colonizing her north African possessions by offering concessions of land to farmers from the home country on terms calculated to attract them.

The policy has been fairly successful, though much remains to be done in Tripolitania. Progress in this colony is revealed by the figures just issued. At the end of 1922 there were only 3,612 hectares of land in Tripolitania under cultivation by concessionaires, while at the end of 1930 the figure was 122,031 hectares.

The concessionaires at present number 744 families, composed of 2,814 persons.

Germany's Transportation Lines Continue to Grow

Berlin.—The traffic in Berlin, as everywhere else, is continually growing and expanding, writes a correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor. Subway and elevated lines, railways, buses and street cars, not to speak of the taxis, are busy conveying 4,000,000 people to their work, their sports, recreations, lessons, friends and back home again. In some instances several of these transportation systems cross each other. Near the Anhalter Bahnhof, whence the trains for the South leave, a waterway, the railway and the elevated cross on three different levels. At the Jannowitz station four systems now meet: a subway line, the River Spree, a busy thoroughfare and the Metropolitan railway.

MOTORS GIVE "PASS" SIGNAL

The rear of some motor cars is gradually developing into a veritable display window for multi-colored signals. There is the white slow-down signal, the red stop sign, the arrows pointing in the direction the car wants to turn. And now a man in Bochum, an industrial town in the Ruhr district, has added a green light, putting a car at east that wishes to pass. If the driver hears the horn of a car behind that wants to overtake him—and if he is willing to permit this—he presses a button and the green light sparkles forth at the rear of his car illuminating the words: "I shall make room for you."

TIME-TABLES FOR AIRSHIPS.

What could be a more convincing proof of the dependability of airships than the following advertisement which appeared in several German papers: "In four days from Friedrichshafen to South America (Pernambuco) with the airship Graf Zeppelin. Departure from Friedrichshafen on August 26 and September 19, return from Pernambuco on September 1 and Steptember 24. Fare, including meals, $1,000. When the Graf Zeppelin made its first flight across the south Atlantic not so very long ago, it was considered almost an adventure, as tropical regions were traversed for the first time by airship. Today, the exact date of the departure and of the return flight are given weeks ahead, as in any steamship list.

Wood Alcohol Cause of Death

Two Kingston Men Succumb in Hospital—Coroner Probes

Kingston—The deaths over the week-end of two Kingston men, it is believed, were caused by drinking wood alcohol. Provincial and city police are conducting an investigation.

Dr. P. M. Macdonnell was called to an Ontario Street address to attend Frank Seaton. A careful examination was made, and outside of the fact that Seaton complained that he could not see very well, the doctor was unable to find any symptoms suggesting that the man was in a serious condition.

Shortly before 3 o'clock a.m. Dr. Macdonnell was called to the Ontario Street address again. He found Prillips unconscious and Seaton seriously ill. Both men were taken to the hospital and died within an hour.

It is understood that Seaton made the admission before he died that he and Phillips had been drinking. The inference that the doctor drew from the symptoms was that the men had been drinking wood alcohol. Coroner J. Gardiner is inclined to agree with this theory. He is making a report to the Crown Attorney, who will decide if an inquest is necessary.

Both men were well known about the city. Seaton was for some time employed as driver of a delivery wagon, and served overseas.

Britain Takes Train Record from Canada

Montreal.—Recently Canada was credited with the highest train speed record, but on Sept. 15th she stood second to Great Britain, after a record-breaking run of the Cheltenham Flyer in making a "start and stop" trip from Swindon to London, 77½ miles in one hour flat.

The previous record was held by the Canadian Pacific Railway train, the Royal York on the Chicago-Montreal run covering the 125 miles from Smith's Falls to Montreal West in 108 minutes, a speed of 69.44 miles per hour.

It was stated that the Cheltenham Flyer reached the speed of 85 miles per hour at imes. Speeds of from 80 to 85 miles per hour are made by both Canadian National and Canadian Pacific fast trains on the Montreal-Chicago routes, on the former between Montreal and Cornwall, where the average speed is 64 miles per hour, and on the latter line between Montreal and Smith's Falls.

Canada's Asbestos Output Grows

Montreal.—Manufacturers of asbestos products in Canada reached a high level during 1930, according figures just released by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. Production for the year was valued at $2,301,924 in comparison with $2,286,638 in 1929. The gain marks the seventh successive year in which an advance has been made in the industry.

Rich Furs Leave Manitoba

Winnipeg.—Nearly $500,000 worth of fur gathered from the sub-Arctic barren lands recently passed through on route to London. The shipment, 75 bales in all, was composed of silver fox, white fox and a few choice beaver skins.

Import Value Set On Wicker Furniture

Minimum Duty of $4 is Placed on Each Piece

Ottawa—A minimum value for duty purposes of $4.00 each has been set by the Department of National Revenue for all wicker furniture entering Canada. The new value comes into effect immediately, but does not apply to furniture purchased before this date and brought into the country before October 31.

The items of furniture mentioned in the bulletin issued to customs appraisers include chairs of all kinds, tables, flower and other stands, settees and couches made from bamboo, cane, rattan, reed grass, willow or similar materials; or frames wrapped with such materials.

The new rate will apply to all wicker furniture entered under the intermediate or general tariff provided that the value at $4.00 is not less than the fair market value as sold for home consumption in the country of export, nor less than the actual selling price to the purchaser in Canada.

Saskatchewan Cutting Education Cost, Service

Regina—Drastic reductions in services and expenses of the Saskatchewan department of education are announced by the minister, Premier J. T. M. Anderson.

An enforced holiday of two months next year for all school inspectors, with three months for normal school instructors, appointments in the case of superannuations and retirements to be delayed, the work being divided among other members of the staff, and a salary reduction ranging from 5 to 10 per cent. for the balance of departmental employes are among the economies to be effected.

Aerial Globe Trotter Starts Second Brazil Trip

Friedrichshafen, Germany. — The Graf Zeppelin, Leviathan of the Trans-Atlantic Airways, left on Sept. 18th for Pernambuco on her second non-stop cruise to South America within three weeks.

She took off at 7.15 (Eastern Standard Time), and was sighted over Lyons, France, about four hours later, heading for Sainte Marie de Gamer. She was carrying ten passengers, 265 pounds of mail and 2,000 pounds of provisions.

Captain Ernest Lehman was in command, acting for Dr. Hugo Eckner, who was attending a conference at Innsbruck. The Graf will wait five days in Pernambuco for return mail as she did on the last trip, starting August 29 and ending Sept. 7. A third cruise is planned for the middle of October.

57.2 Air Passengers Are Regular Patrons

Montreal.—A graphic illustration of the manner in which the regular traveling public has turned to air transportation was presented in a statement of Century Air Lines officials that 57.2 per cent. of traffic over those lines was composed of men and women who travel regularly. This fact was brought out in a survey of Century passenger lists just completed. This survey also showed that 78 per cent. of the regular traffic over Century lines was composed of business men.

Scots Refuse to Pipe In Trousers, Ask Kilts

Melbourne.—Australian Scots, recently invited by the Victorian government to join a regiment to be known as the Victorian-Scottish Volunteers, are protesting because they have been issued khaki trousers instead of the traditional kit.

The pipers have refused to play in trousers and are demanding the kilts.

Greater Quality Wheat Shown in 1931 Crop

Winnipeg.—The milling and baking quality of Canada's new wheat crop is exceptionally high and equal to, if not better than, that of any year tested by the Dominion Grain Research Laboratory, it was recently announced.

The protein content is much higher than the previous crop, while the gluten of different grades also is exceptionally good.

The baking quality is excellent, the report says, and the flour absorption is higher and the loaf volume greater.

Bishop of London is Taxed $34,000 on $50,000 Income

St. Thomas, Ont.—In the interests of national economy, the Right Rev. Arthur F. Winnington-Ingram, Bishop of London, who is visiting in Canada, would be willing to give up his desidence, Fulham Palace, and live in a more moderate house, he said recently.

The new budget amendments impose further financial burdens upon the Bishop, who at resent pays nearly two-thirds of his income in taxes.

"My official income is $50,000 and my taxes have been $34,000," he declared.

Murder in the Air

The dangers to which the Schneider Trophy pilots were exposed were very real, but there was at least one peril which marked the first big air pageant which they escaped.

This pageant was held at Rheims, in 1909. The evening before it started a machine crashed, and it was discovered that the rudder had been tampered with. The same night there was a mysterious fire at one of the hangars.

Other accidents occurred next day—Bleriot being injured and Jules Varennes killed. It was then concluded that wreckers were at work, and detectives traced a cleaner to a house in a suburb, which was a nest of anarchists.

There was a raid in which the woman leader of the gang was killed by a bomb, and a number of arrests were made. After that, the pageant passed off without any further "accidents."

St. Lawrence Waterway

Windsor Border Cities Star (Ind.): In spite of any difficulties that may still lie in the way, there is a general feeling, on both sides of the line, that settlement of the negotiations and an actual start on this ambitious work cannot be long delayed. It will be an international project, of course, in spite the effort of certain politicians to draw a herring across the trail by insisting on an all-Canadian route. The latter is just about as feasible as daily airplane service to the moon.

1853—Ginti, an Austrian technician, shows how two messages can be sent over a single telegraph wire (duplex telegraphy).

1854—Henry D. Stone and Frederick W. Howe perfect the turret lathe so that a number of tools may cut metal mechanically. The general idea of the turret lathe goes back to Stephen Fitch (1845).

1855—Robert Wilhelm von Bunsen invents the burner now used in every gas stove.

1856—Sir Henry Bessemer devises the process for making Bessemer steel.

1860—Dr. Antonio Pacinotti conceives the first continuous-current dynamo but does nothing with it. It is independently re-invented by the Belgian, Z. T. Gramme (1870-1872).

1861—Coleman Sellers of Philadelphia patents and demonstrates the first motion-picture machine of the modern type. Edison brings out the commercial apparatus in 1893. Wilhelm Siemens invents the regenerative furnace. This, in the hands of two Frenchmen, Pierre and Emile Martin, is applied in making open-hearth steel (1864).

1865—William Bullock of Philadelphia builds the first press to print from a continuous roll or web of paper.

1867—Christopher L. Sholes invents the modern typewriter. Perfected in 1873.

1868—George Westinghouse demonstrates his airbrake.

1869—J. H. Greathead designs the modern shield used in tunneling under water.

1870—Sir William Siemens invents the electric furnace for melting iron and steel.

1871—Charles Goodyear Jr. invents the welt-shoemaking machine.

1874—Thomas A. Edison devises the quadruplex telegraph, which sends four messages over a single wire. Sir William Thompson (afterward Lord Kelvin) devises the syphon recorder, which becomes indispensable in writing down cable messages.

1876—Alexander Graham Bell and Elisha Gray independently invent the telephone. Dr. N. A. Otto, of Cologne, Germany, invents the four-cycle internal-combustion engine now generally used in automobiles.

1877—Thomas A. Edison demonstrates his phonograph.

1879—Thomas A. Edison produces the first practical incandescent electric lamp.

1884—Sir Charles A. Parsons receives the first patent for his steam turbine. The modern trolley car appears. Van Depoele invents the trolley wheel and Frank L. Sprague the multiple-unit system of control. Gottlieb Daimler brings out the light compact gasoline engine of to-day and in 1885 drives a bicycle with it. Thus the automobile begins. Carl Benz of Karlsruhe is simultaneously working on the automobile problem and turns out his first gasoline vehicle.

1886—Ottmar Mergenthaler perfects his linotype machine. Hall produces aluminum by an electrical process which eventually becomes commercial.

1887—Tolbert Lanston patents the monotype. The Rev. Hannibal Goodwin patents the celluloid film. George Eastman independently works out the same principle. The induction motor of Nikola Tesla appears.

1888—John Boyd Dunlop reinvents the double-tube pneumatic tire, the original invention of Robt. W. Thompson (1845) having been forgotten.

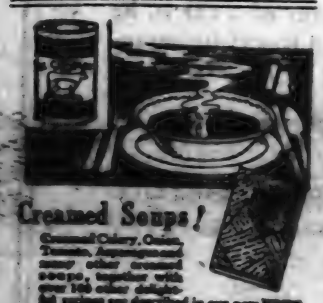
1890—Dr. Carl Auer von Welsbach produces his mantle burner.

1893—Rudolf Diesel publishes a description of his proposed engine. The first specimens are exhibited in 1898 at Munich.

1896—Guglielmo Marconi patents the first high frequency system of wireless telegraphy.

1899—Francis Elmore first actually uses the oil-floatation process for separating ores from waste. The germs of ore flotation are also found in a patent granted to Carry J. Everson of Denver, Col. (1886).

1900—Heroult devises his furnace for producing steel electrically.



1901—Frederick W. Taylor and Maunsel White develop the modern high-speed alloy steels which have made the cheap production of automobiles and other machines possible.

1902—Professor Arthur Korn of Germany makes the first long-distance experiment in transmitting photographs by wire.

1903—The Wright brothers produce a motor-driven airplane and fly it successfully at Kitty-Hawk, N.C. Valdemar Poulsen and Reginald Fessenden independently devise successful experimental radio telephones.

1906—Dr. Lee de Forest invents the vacuum tube now indispensable in all electrical communication.

1926—J. L. Baird sends recognizable images over a wire.

A Riddle of the Thames

At windows that from Westminster
Look southward to the Lollard's Tower,
She sat, my lovely friend. A blur
Of gilded mist,—('twas morn's first hour,)—
Made vague the world; and in the gleam
Shivered the half-awakened stream.

Through tinted vapor looming large,
Ambiguous shapes obscurely rode.
She gazed where many a laden barge
Like some dim-moving saurian showed.
And 'midst them, lo! two swans appeared,
And proudly up the river steered.

Two stately swans! What did they there?
Whence came they? Whither would they go?
Think of them,—things so faultless fair,—
'Mid the black shipping down below!
In through the rose and gold they passed,
And melted in the morn at last.

Ah, can it be, that they had come,
Where Thames in sullied glory flows,
Fugitive rebels, tired of some
Secluded lake's ornate repose,
Eager to taste the life that pours
Its muddier wave 'twixt mightier shores?

We ne'er shall know: our wonderment
No barren certitude shall mar.
They left behind them, as they went,
A dream than knowledge ampler far;
And from our world they sailed away
Into some visionary day.

—William Watson, in "Collected Poems."

Canada is now the second largest gold-producing country in the world.

Foolish Questions

How near is soon?
How close is nearly?
What is most likely?
How many is a few?
When is by and by?
How low is low down?
How far is over yonder?
How good is pretty good?
How high is up?
When I say I don't want any how many do I want?

Gasper—"Have you ever had a lesson by correspondence?"

Lennox—"Yes—I never write to women now."

He sent his precious poem to the editor. "Let me know at once whether you can use it," he wrote, "as I have other irons in the fire."

In a few days the answer came back from the editor: "Remove irons, insert poem."

Gladys—"Dick's clever. I wish dad would give him a start in life."

Brother—"The next time your father finds him staying later than midnight, he'll need a head start."

Harry—"Whenever I see you I think of Jones."

Sam—"But I'm not a bit like Jones."

Harry—"Yes, you are. You both owe me $10.00.

Windy Wolfe says, "One of the biggest kicks I ever got was when the doctor's assistant told me to look pleasant as he proceeded to take an X-ray o' my liver."

They tell of a Scot's wife whose doctor told her that she needed salt air. She woke up next morning and her husband was fanning her with a herring.

When you observe the methods of parents and see how well the kids turn out, how can you keep from believing in Providence? There are open minds so confoundedly open that they can't even hold a single conviction. And then there was the timid freshman who preferred blondes because he was afraid of the dark. The more some young couples try to get ahead, the farther they get behind in their payments. Nothing will ruin an interesting intellectual argument quicker than the arrival of a pretty girl. When your own plans go wrong, it's tough luck; when another man's plans go wrong, he oughta knowed better.

Lord, suffer me to catch a fish
So large that even I
In talking of it afterward
Shall have no need to lie.

Mother—"Now, Johnnie, I know thousands of little boys and girls who would be glad to eat that spinach."

Johnnie—Name three of them!"

Catherine—"I don't believe that gossip about Doris. Nor what little I've heard."

Margaret—"Oh, Gee, I hoped you might have heard more about it."

Abie—"Papa, vat is science?"

Papa—"My, how could you be so stupid? Science is dose tings vat says "no smoking."

The Answer

What are the wild waves saying
As they lap the shores of our land?
Just this: "Your bathing suit, dearie,
Is shrinking to beat the band."

Golf was invented by somebody who was looking for something else to worry about.

Homesickness Cured

There's a long grind between entering college and the graduation exercises. The telephone helps bridge many difficulties as the following incident shows:

"However do you get along without Horace?" asked Mrs. Sparkles who had called to console Mrs. Rathburn following the departure of her young son to boarding school.

"John and I were certainly very anxious and would have just worried our lives out had we not arranged for Horace to call us on the telephone twice a week. In fact Principal Chapman explained to us what an advantage it was to have students call their parents at regular intervals.

"In most cases he said the charges of these calls are reversed to be paid at the home telephone.

"He said, too, that it made the students more contented and homesickness has practically disappeared."

Just another example of the important part played by the long distance telephone in family life.

Modern Family Has Wide Interests

Chicago.—It is not only the laundry that the modern family sends out of the home in its trend away from self-sufficiency, a University of Chicago statistician has found, according to a recent report.

By comparing figures for 1900 and for 1930, Dr. John Dollard offers percentages to show that almost every economic activity of the family, from tending the furnace to planning the interior decoration, is gradually being put into the hands of specialists outside the home, as well as education, religious training and recreational and other functions. His conclusion, however, is that this trend does not necessarily mean the decline of the family, but results in an extension of its interests.

Some of the contrasts sketched by Dr. Dollard the university reports as follows:

"Where formerly women remained at home, doing house and family work, with only one woman out of every seven employed outside the home, one woman in every four was a breadwinner in 1920, and out of every three working women in 1929 one was married.

"Between 1900 and 1923 the average attendance of children in public schools increased 100 per cent. and expenditures for public schools increased 4.1 times as fast as did the number of families. Teachers are taking children away from their parents for longer periods and at tenderer ages.

"Between 1922 and 1927 the number of trained workers in urban recreation programs increased from 11,000 to 20,000. The weekly attendance at moving picture theatres tripled between 1922 and 1930.

"The number of Sunday school scholars increased 45 per cent. during the last 30 years and the average contributions of church members indicated that at least 50 per cent. increase was made in purchasing power, while such practices as saying grace at meals declined.

"The loss of certain functions by the family need not mean its decline, however. It will rather offer the opportunity for a more effective integration," Dr. Dollard declares. "The disintegration of family functions," he observes, "is undoubtedly accompanied by widened interests."

Food For Thought

The professor was lecturing on natural history.

"Yes," he said, "when I get close to Nature it makes me feel like a little grub."

Smart Aleck shook his head.

"What, only a little, sir?" he spoke up. "It makes me feel like a lot. Anyway, when I'm in the country I eat like a horse."

Here and There

Ontario gold production for the half year to June 30 reached $20,608,195, the greatest on record. Indications are that the output for the full year 1931 will be well over $41,000,000 in value.

Working at the rate of a mile a day and employing a daily average of 450 men, completion of rockballasting in the Ontario district from Windsor to Smiths Falls on the Canadian Pacific tracks was announced recently.

Canadian hens are working much harder than their ancestors of ten years ago. In 1920, statistics show that 6010 birds produced an average of 122.1 eggs apiece. This average rose steadily until in 1930 it was 178 eggs per bird.

New Brunswick moose and deer will make their debut on the talkie screen this Fall while the famous moose calls of New Brunswick guides will be recorded in sound for the edification of millions of patrons in thousands of theatres across the continent.

The site of the first cheese factory in Canada, located in Oxford County, Ontario, will be marked with a cairn as an historic site. There are now more than 2,300 factories in Canada making butter or cheese, and the cheese production exceeds 150,000,000 pounds yearly.

"Generally satisfactory", is the comment on wheat grading in the Prairie Provinces, according to reports coming in from the Agricultural Department of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Winnipeg. Wheat cutting in the West was virtually completed by the middle of September and rather more than half of it was threshed at that time.

Playing spectacular golf, F. G. Hoblitzel, of the Lambton Club, Toronto, defeated Philip Farley, Ontario amateur champion, in the finals of the Prince of Wales Trophy, played at the Banff Springs Golf Course in September. Sixteen players from all over Canada and the United States, qualified for the title fight.

Award of three scholarships at McGill University to minor sons of Canadian Pacific employees has been made to M. M. Madre, D. K. Gowans and Keith W. Shaw. The scholarships provide for five years' tuition in architecture and chemical engineering, all fees being met until the recipients have taken their degrees as Bachelors of Science.

"We are coming to realize that most of our national problems have an international background and can only be solved by international co-operation," declared Hon. Vincent Massey, former Canadian Minister at Washington when sailing recently on the Empress of Canada at the head of the Canadian delegation to the forthcoming conference of the Institute of Pacific Relations at Hangchow, China.

"Jim" McKenna, dean of passenger travelling agents and friend of presidents, passengers and porters from Saint John to Victoria and from Montreal to New Orleans, with over 1,000,000 miles of railway travel to his credit, died recently at Quebec in his 79th year. His intimate knowledge of the Chinese whom he accompanied across Canada earned him the sobriquet of the "Chinese Ambassador" and "The Mandarin."

Brampton Fair

Eight thousand people attended Brampton Fair yesterday, weather conditions being ideal. The exhibits in every department were well up to the standard of other years and in some classes the entries were far more numerous.

The track races seemed to be the centre of attraction, while a large number watched the judging of the Light and heavy horses,cattle etc.

The exhibit by the Boys Calf and Colt Clubs was very interesting and was a special feature of the Fair.

This is an innovation that is going to help to keep up the good standard of our County Fair, for by giving the boys a chance to exhibit their colts and calves now will indnce them to take a continued interest in the Fair and become the big exhibitors of the future.

66 boys had exhibits. The trophy given by the Hon. T. L. Kennedy, Minister of Agriculture, was won by Milton Graham, son of Mr. Oscar Graham, Derry West, 12 years old. He won 4 fiists, also took first for showmanship, first for attendance at meetings and first for monthly feed reports.

Peel is noted for its fine horses and cattle and showmen are trying to keep up that reputation.

Brampton Band furnished excellent music during the day. There was a large number of sideshows and in spite of the depression every body seemed to be free with their money.

The dance in the Armories at night was well patronized.

YES! GOOD POSITIONS FOR GOOD PUPILS

During the past few months scores of graduates of the Canada Business College, College and Spadina, Toronto, have accepted positions ranging from Seven Hundred and Fifty Dollars to Two Thousand Four Hundred Dollars per year. Two recent lady graduates started at Twenty-eight Dollars per week. Their names and addresses supplied to interested persons. One Huron County farmer's son, who graduated two years and has since remained on the farm starts at Eighteen Hundred Dollars per year in Ottawa next month. Forget about the "Depression." "Depressions" never last long. Some will prepare and be ready. Others will whine. You may attend College or study all by mail. Pay when you like. For particulars write Geo. Spotton, M.P., Canada Business College, College and Spadina, Toronto.

RESTAURANTS ON WHEELS

Strange as it may seem, good housekeeping is one of the prime essentials of modern railroading. Mr. Traveller has become so used to strolling through the train to the dining car, for his needs in the way of food for himself, as well as for Mrs. Traveller and all the little Travellers, that he hardly gives a thought to how he gets a first class hotel meal, while whirling along at 60 miles an hour. The answer lies with about 1,200 highly trained employees of the Canadian Pacific Railway, serving in some 150 dining and cafe cars, from Atlantic to Pacific, and with an organization in stores and farms throughout the country, which places high class foodstuffs in the chefs' cupboards and refrigerators. The average number of meals served in a year is approximately 2,000,000. As to quantities, suffice to say that these include nearly 500,000 lbs. of various meats; 1,000,000 lbs. of tea and coffee and some 400,000 quarts of milk and cream. The Pictures show meals being served in a typical C.P.R. diner and types of the staff of chefs and waiters employed in the service.

. . . Face the Traffic

This rule is important at all times, but especially so at dusk and at night.

At such times, no matter how careful the driver of a car is, he may not see you until he is very near to you and it may be impossible for him to stop in time to avoid inflicting serious injury.

Should he swerve to avoid hitting you, though you may escape injury others may be hurt.

Of the 524 fatalities on the highways of Ontario last year a large number were caused by persons walking with rather than against traffic.

SOURCES OF TUBERCULOSIS

Tuberculosis is a widespread disease in spite of the encouraging progress which has been made with regard to its prevention and treatment, it nevertheless remains with us as one of the major causes of disability and death. he results of the work which has been done enable us to face the future with the happy prospect that, provided the necessary effort is made, we shall see this disease decline and disappear.

Tuberculosis is the result of the activity of the living germ known as the tubercle bacillus. Other factors may play a part in the occurrence of the disease by favouring the opportunity for the spread and development of the germ, but it is the germ itself which causes the disease.

If there were no tubercle bacillus, there would not be any tuberculosis. If no tubercle bacillus gained entrance into the human body, there would be no tuberculosis among us. In order to keep these germs out of our bodies, we should know whence they come. Once we have obtained this information, we may put it to practical use by protecting ourselves from tuberculosis.

The secretion called sputum, which is coughed up by the person suffering from tuberculosis of the lungs, is by far the most common source of the germs of tuberculosis. This sputum contains millions of the germs, and it is the transference of this germ-laden secretion from the sick to the well which accounts largely for the spread of the disease.

Tuberculosis may be spread by uncovered coughs or sneezes which scatter the droplets of sputum. The careless spitter provides a source of contamination for children's hands. Children usually play on the ground or on the floor, and so pick up the sputum on their fingers and their toys. The little hands re then carried to the mouth, and the germs which are on the fingers gain entrance to the children's bodies.

The tuberculous person who has been trained in a sanatorium knows how to live without endangering others. Such a person is a perfectly safe individual with whom to live. He covers his coughs and sneezes. If he expectorates, he does so into a container and not on the ground. As long as there are germs in his sputum, hekeeps his eating and drinking utensils apart and boils them after use. He does not kiss other persons on the mouth.

The germ of tuberculosis is our enemy. Outside our bodies it cannot do us any harm and direct sunlight destroys it in a short time. We should do our best to keep it outside of our bodies, and we can do this by avoiding all careless spitters, coughers and sneezers, some of whom likely have tuberculosis. We can set the example by always using our handkerchiefs to cover coughs and sneezes, and we can further protect ourselves by keeping our hands away from our faces and by washing our hands before eating.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Brampton Fair Was Great Success

Frank Fenwich, president of the County of Peel Agricultural Society for 1931, has the supreme satisfaction this week of being able to remark to himself and others, "Well, I did it!" meaning that he carried out the intention of the board of directors of Brampton Fall Fair, to make the fair the biggest and best in the history of that institution.

And it was a success, a huge one! Although a certain amount of pessimism prevailed as to the size of the crowd that would attend last Wednesday, that pessimism turned to optimism early in the day, when people began to flock into town, and then to the fair grounds. It was estimated that when the crowd was at its biggest, some 8,000 people thronged the show rings, the circumference of the race track, and the various sections of the grounds and the halls. And what was most noticeable, it was a happy, enthusiastic crowd. Said one of the directors, "Not much appearance of worry or fear of business depression about that crowd. They certainly all look as if they got enough to eat! And they are all well dressed!"

While the directors had done their part to make the fair a success, exhibitors had done theirs The poultry exhibit was 25 per cent. larger than in 1930. The show of vegetables and fruit in the main hall was marvellous for quantity and quality, the women had done their share in sending in large quantities of home products, cooking, canning, butter and dressed poultry. So that there was plenty for the crowd to see indoors.

Outdoors on the second day, the interest centere about the calf club competitions, the Holstein competitions and the horses. So keen was the competition in the last named class that dusk had fallen before the judges finished their work, and the quality of the splendid creatures shown, demonstrated that Peel is still in the front rank with her equines.

The calf club and colt club competitions were the result of the formation some months ago of those clubs among the boy farmers of Peel. Fifty calves and 16 colts were brought in, and shown by their young owners, half of the marks in the contests going for showmanship.

It was a proud moment for Toronto township when Martin Graham, son of Oscar Graham, of Britannia, carried off the honors of the day and the splendid Hon. T. L. Kennedy trophy. Martin won first place in Jerseys with his calf, first in showmanship in the ring, won first in the Purina special, and was first in the class for calves shown at school fairs. This is a heavy load of honours for young shoulders to carry, and should stimulate harder work among the contestants another year.

Showing of animals, Holsteins, Bob Cousins, Britannia; H. Cameron, Norval; Arthur McKane, Terra Cotta; Jerseys, M. Graham, Ken Ella, H. Laidlaw, Norval; Shorthorns, Jim Pinkney, Gordon Robinson, Tom Ruston; Purina special, senior Holsteins, W. Fraser; junior Holsteins, H. Dolson; Jerseys, M. Graham.

Colt Club, Willy Wiley, Norval; Joe Lyons, Streetsville; Charles Montgomery, Tulamore; John Fletcher, Brampton; H. Herring, Brampton; J. Reid, Derry West.

W. L. Stephens, Islington, who had an excellent showing of horses at the fair, carried off the Ward and Carberry trophy.

There was some keen competition in the pony classes between J. W. Fleury, Brampton and W. Delill, Islington. Fleury won firsts with Baby Grand, Baby Doll, Rosebud and Tannea while Delill had good success with Show Girl, Dorothy D. and Bonny Mary. A. B. Weber, Kitchener exhibited two first prize winners in Fire King and Buckley O'Flame. Dan, driven by M. J. Carter, Brampton, won three firsts in the single carriage horse class.

Stewart Houlding, Toronto, on his handsome horse, Kelly, won two firsts in the jumps, while Mrs. George Giffen, riding Kilkelly, owned by Mr. Houlding, secured two thirds. Miss Nora Gordon, riding J. F. Brownridge's Lindberg, was second in the jumps.

In the lady riding special, Mrs.

SOCIAL GATHERING IN NORTH TRAFALGAR

McGregor Homestead Opened for Ladies of Presbyterian Church and Friends

A really delightful welcome greeted the W.M.S. of the Presbyterian church, Streetsville, when they visited the cosy home of Dugald McGregor, and his sisters on the ninth line, Trafalgar, last Friday evening. The gathering was social in character so near neighbours were bidden to join the party and enjoy the programme, games and the refreshments.

The long living room was thronged to overflowing when all had gathered and when Wm. Couse, ever the leading figure in Streetsville happenings, assumed the chairmanship there must have been well over a hundred souls assembled.

There were musical numbers, impromptu dialogues and recitations, through all of which ran a vein of humor. The friends were welcomed in a musical composition sung by Mrs. C. May, the words having been composed by the host, Dugald McGregor, himself. Local names were interwoven in the verses. This led A. S. Forster, in a few words, to say that the McGregor home had been the mecca for oratory, for poetry, for literature and for hospitality, but this was the first he had heard of there being a composer in the home.

Naturally in a McGregor home, Scotch sentiment predominated and this was aroused when a Mr. Donald appeared in the costume of the Highlands and in real good voice sang such pleasing selection as "A Wee Hoose 'Mang the Heather," and other Sir Harry Lauder favorites.

After the program there were original contests, again literary in character, and choice refreshments served by the host, hostesses and merry associates. These were richly enjoyed, the more so in this highly hospitable home, just before the company dispersed to their homes in Toronto, Brampton, Cooksville, Oakville and the district.—Oakville Star.

BRAMPTON

J. Stoll, 23, Lilac ave., Long Branch, received a bullet in his thigh when a companion's rifle was accidentally discharged while Stoll and three comrades were hunting in a bush north of Brampton, Saturday.

Stoll's companion, whose name the victim refused to divulge because of his mother's nervous temperament, was taking cartridges from his belt when the rifle accidentally discharged. The bullet struck Stoll's hunting knife, which lessened its force before it entered his thigh.

The injured youth's chums rushed him to Peel Memorial Hospital, Brampton, where X-rays were taken and medical attention given. He was able to walk yesterday and returned to his home in Long Branch.

The X-ray showed the bullet imbedded in the muscle of the thigh, but no attempt to remove it was made, the physician stating it would not do any harm in that particular part of the muscle.

Hold Rally Services

The annual rally service of Cooksville United Church was held Sunday, individual parts in the service being taken by Miss Nita Tolman, Mrs. R. Pickett, Robert Whaley, Jr., and Archie Armstrong.

Cars Ditched, No One Hurt

Cars driven by G. Moore, Brampton, and H. Moorecroft, Toronto, were ditched in a collision at Britannia on Saturday, caused by the slippery pavement. No one was hurt. Traffic Officer Ted Kyle, Cooksville, investigated, but laid no charges.

LET US SMILE

Old Mose Parker was pretty sick and the darky doctor promptly put him to bed and laid down all sorts of rules and regulations as to sleep and diet. After he had gone, Mose turned to his wife and complained:

"Mandy, how does dat dere fool doctor reckon ah's gwine to eat breast ob chicken ebery day if ah ain't got mah ebenin's free?"

"My poor woman," said the vicar, meeting one of his flock in widow's weeds. "I had not heard you had again suffered bereavement." "Nor I ain't, sir," was the reply, "but my old man annoyed me this morning, so I'm paying 'im out by going into mourning for my first 'usband."

EXCELSIORS BEATEN BY MIMICO

Mimico, flashing superb passing attacks, defeated the famous Brampton Excelsiors by 6 to 3 in the first of the "Sunnyside League" championship play-off games Monday night at the Arena Gardens. The "Suburbanites," cleverly coached by Jack MacDonald, were full value for their victory.

Excelsiors, leaders at Sunnyside previous to their departure for the West in quest of the Mann Cup, were plainly at sea, and their passing was atrocious They couldn't get going at any stage of the contest, despite the smart instructions issued by Coach Eddie Powers. They were woefully weak on defense and attack, and had no excuses to offer for the reverse.

MARRIAGES

Bonham—Carstairs

The marriage was solemnized Saturday afternoon at half-past three o'clock at Rosedale Presbyterian Church, of Violet Beatrice, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James A. Skeletons Confirm Legends Of Pre-Indian Giants?

Bones Unearthed by Vernon Road-Gang Include That of Abnormally Tall Man, Seemingly of Earlier Race Than Those Known to History

Victoria, B.C.—Ethnologists and archaeologists in British Columbia are intensely interested in the discovery by a road-gang of a group of skeletons near Vernon. It is believed they may prove to be the remains of a race preceding the native races that met the first coming of the white men to the interior valleys 120 years ago. Among modern Indians there are legends of the existence of a race of giants who inhabited the country before the coming of the people of Mongolian extraction. The particular skeleton that is causing speculation is that of a man. It measures 8½ feet, but the man in life would have measured at least one inch or possibly two inches more. The skull formation is much larger and of different shape than those discovered in other excavations in the district.

The find was made by a gang at work on the Vernon-Kamloops Highway, about four miles from Vernon. Six skeletons were discovered. One was that of a woman, three of boys in their 'teens, and a fifth of a young man, possibly of 19 or 20. Near by was located the frame of the man.

Many Mishaps Mark Week-End

Motor Accidents Take Heavy Toll in Ontario

St. Catharines.—The desire of S. Turcotte, Burlington, to show the Welland Ship Canal to his wife on Sunday cost the woman her life. She drowned when their automobile backed into Lock No. 2. Turcotte was attempting to turn his car around after parking close by the brink of the lock, when the accident occurred. In reverse, the car ran over the edge of the lock before he could bring it to a halt. He managed to free both himself and his wife from the automobile and hold her above water for a time, but the woman struggled from his grasp and Turcotte was able to save himself with difficulty. Dragging operations, carried on for close to two hours before being halted by darkness, failed to bring the woman's body to the surface.

Fatality at Reformatory

Guelph.—Serious injuries which he received in some unknown manner resulted in the death in St. Joseph's Hospital of Thomas Suieck, 55 years old, of Brantford, an inmate of the institution. Suieck was found unconscious in the basement of the Reformatory Saturday afternoon at the foot of a flight of stairs which run to the third floor of the building. As there were no witnesses of the accident, officials of the institution cannot state how he came to his death. One leg was fractured and he had also suffered severe head injuries, apparently in a fall from one of the upper floors. Sentenced at Brantford for a breach of the Excise Act, Suieck had been at the Reformatory since early in August. An inquest will be held.

Dixon is expected to recover.

Bumper Crops In Saskatchewan

Better Wheat Prices Predicated by Hon Duncan Marshall

Regina.—The biggest crop in the history of Southern Saskatchewan is predicted for next year by Hon. Duncan Marshall, former Minister of Agriculture for Alberta.

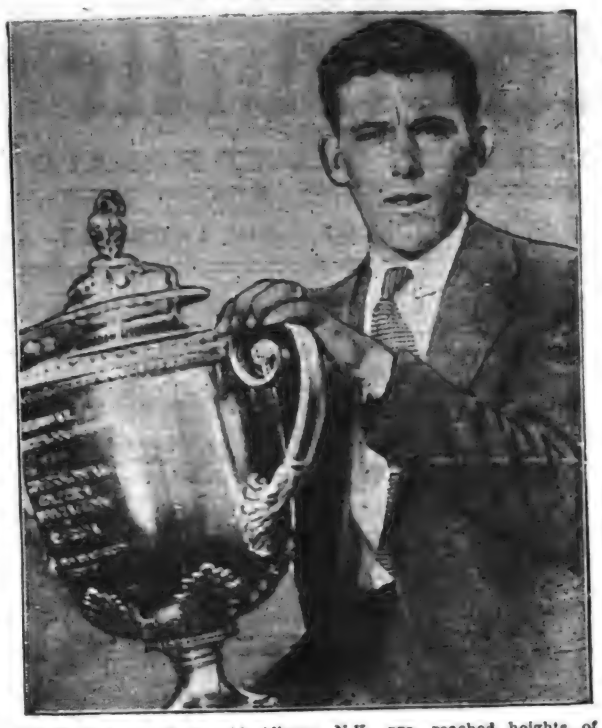
Mr. Marshall travelled through Southern Saskatchewan and visited farms in the Yellow Grass, Long, Weyburn, and Talmage areas.

"Farmers I spoke to told me that where there was sod covering the rain had penetrated a foot deep. I am told by Dean Shaw that there has been five inches of rain go into the ground around Saskatoon this fall, and another observer says that there has been five inches around Swift Current.

All the conditions point to the best bumper crop in 1932 the West has known."

Asked as to the prospects of prices for wheat in 1932 in the event of there being big crops, Mr. Marshall said all indications point to better wheat prices for next year.

Norway and Sweden Drop Gold Standard



Norway and Sweden suspended the gold standard Sunday, a week after similar action by Great Britain.

The Danish cobinet will meet shortly to consider Denmark's position.

Attempting to prevent further withdrawal of gold from their countries, both Norway and Sweden increased their bank rates and Denmark possibly will follow suit.

With the effects of Britain's suspension of the gold standard more apparent and the pound sterling down from $4.87 to less than $4, the action of the Scandinavian countries was not entirely unexpected.

London Crowds Cheer Kaye Don

Speed King Thanks Lovable Canadians for Their Hospitality

London.—Cheered by hundreds of Londoners, Kaye Don, who won the first race for the Harmsworth speedboat trophy at Detroit but was disqualified at the start of the second race, made a triumphant return to London last Friday. Stepping out of a railway coach bearing in large letters the words "Welcome to Kaye Don," he was surrounded by a crowd of motoring celebrities. One of the foremost to shake hands with him was Sir Malcolm Campbell, holder of the land speed record, Don holding the water speed record.

Mr. Don warmly thanked the "lovable" Canadian people for their wealth of hospitality, and said he hoped to return to Canada one day to fulfill an engagement on Lake Ontario.

Friends of Mr. Don were amused when he stated that when arriving at the British customs he had to "declare" his key to the City of Hamilton, Ont., but had kept his eye on it as one of his most treasured possessions.

Throughout the whole reception proceedings Mr. Don made no complaint about events at Detroit.

The World of Finance

Melbourne Australasian: Australia's recovery depends to a great but unappreciated extent upon an improvement in world conditions. We have, to repeat a well-worn phrase, to set our own house in order, but even a well-ordered house may have its chimneys blown down and its roof dismantled by a hurricane. The world is becoming more and more knit together in an economic system, so that it is impossible for financial collapse to occur in one country without injuring nearly every other. It has been pointed out recently that political unrest with the consequent disruption of purchasing power in India, China, and Egypt, affecting about a third of the population of the world, is "one of the chief causes" of the industrial crisis. That is why Australia is vitally interested in the financial problems of Great Britain and of the rest of the world, as well as responsible for the settlement of her own.

Terrific Gale Sweeps Over Nova Scotia

Hundred Thousand Barrels of Apples Blown Down —Reef Unmarked

Halifax.—A fierce gale lashed the western coast of Nova Scotia and swept the Annapolis Valley late Friday, causing heavy damage to fishing gear and orchards.

R. W. Saxby Blair, of the Dominion experimental station at Kentville, estimated the loss in the valley at between $50,000 and $100,000. Apples which would have filled about 100,000 barrels were blown to the ground, and in some sections the ground was covered with a carpet of fruit. Fortunately less than half the crop was on the trees, all the early varieties having been picked and shipped.

During the storm the flag pole of the Kentville post office fell crashing through telephone and power lines to place its butt on top of a motor bus.

Somewhere off the coast a dangerous reef is left unguarded, at what is known as "the churn." On the bay shore, fishermen found a large bell-buoy rolling about on the surf. The sea was too rough for the men to land it or even get near it so it was not known what stony ledge it had marked.

Starving Mob Lindberghs' Plane

Attempt to Carry Medicines and Doctors in China Proves Futile

Nanking, China.—Charles Lindbergh's experimental flight to take physicians and medicines to flood-isolated centres of Northern Kiangsu Province failed Sunday because a starving Chinese throng crying for fod rushed the plane and endangered the initial relief expedition.

Declaring the failure "the most heart-rending experience of my career," Colonel Lindbergh and his companions sadly returned to Nanking, convinced the only way to place doctors in the flood towns would be to send them with military escorts.

The assengers were Dr. Heng Liu, head of the national food relief commission's medical staff, and Dr. J. N. Grant, United tSates member of the Peiping Union Medical College faculty. The plane was loaded with medical supplies.

As soon as Colonel Lindbergh alighted on the flood waters on the outskirts of Hinghwa, normally a city of 600,000 population, there was a rush of sampans crowded with starving people who, seeing the medical packages in the plane's fuselage, believed food had come at last.

Dr. Lieu, the only one of the party speaking Chinese, tried to explain the mission, but his voice was lost in the din. Leaping on the runner, mad people tore open many of the packages and finding no food, turned upon the doctor. The air rang with shrieks of disappointment.

The situation looked desperate. It was evident the three men were in danger of bodily harm. Liu regained his place in the plane only with great difficulty, leaving the crowds fighting over his packages. The three decided it was hopeless to try to face such an appalling situation, and that it would be better to save the plane.

Alaska Seals Start South As First Frost Appears

Dutch Harbor, Alaska.—Winter is in the offing. A white frost recently settled down over the misty Pribilof Islands in Bering Sea. Several of the oldest bull seals sniffed the northwest wind currents and moaned dismally. Soon there was commotion among the 1,250,000 fur seals.

In a few hours a general mobilization had been completed and, apparently at a given signal, every fur seal slipped off the icy rocks into the Pacific Ocean and headed south. Fur seals of the Alaska herd do not touch land again until some time next May, when they again climb out of the surf onto the Pribilof beaches.

Two Bears With One Shot Is Farmer's Boast

Ottawa.—Two bears—a little one and a big one—with one shot, is the proud boast of Edward Findlay, a farmer of Eardley Township. A 200-pound mother bear and her cub were the victims.

When he fired Findlay did not see the cub. But he found that the first bullet from his rifle had passed through the larger bear and into the heart of the 50-pound "baby." The cub had been standing on the near side of his mother.

Marriages and Births Drop Again in Britain

Another quarterly decline in the growth of Great Britain's population is recorded for the return ended June 30, published by the Register General on Sept. 12.

The number of live births recorded was 13,874, a decline of 6,398 from the figure for the corresponding quarter of 1930. Deaths, which totaled 114,770, were 3,347 more than in the corresponding quarter of 1930, but 47,498 fewer than in the quarter immediately preceding.

The figures show that the natural increase of population by excess of births over deaths was 49,174—the lowest recorded for the second quarter in the last four years.

The death rate was 11.5 per 1,000 of the population, or 0.3 per 1,000 above that recorded for the corresponding quarter of last year. The mortality of infants below the age of 1 year was 7 per 1,000 lower than the average for the ten preceding second quarters.

Marriages showed a decline in comparison with both quarters. The total number of persons married was 208, a decrease of 65,942 on the 1st quarter of 1930 and of 4,286 on the first quarter.

During the quarter more males were born than females, but the balance of "surplus women" was maintained by an excess of male deaths. The figures were: Deaths, 58,760 males, 55,940 females; births, 83,596 males, 80,273 females.

Alaska Eskimos Like Jail

Last Winter the United States Marshal at Point Hope, Alaska, according to Capper's Magazine, arrested two native Eskimos for misdemeanors and put them in jail. Afterward the two natives told their neighbors how warm and comfortable was the white man's prison and that they had a good meal three times a day. A wave of law-breaking followed and the jail became crowded with Eskimos. Now a larger jail will be built. However, this does not seem to be a logical remedy for law-breaking, says the magazine.

Skeletons Confirm Legends Of Pre-Indian Giants?

Bones Unearthed by Vernon Road-Gang Include That of Abnormally Tall Man, Seemingly of Earlier Race Than Those Known to History

Victoria, B.C.—Ethnologists and archaeologists in British Columbia are intensely interested in the discovery by a road-gang of a group of skeletons near Vernon. It is believed they may prove to be the remains of a race preceding the native races that met the first coming of the white men to the interior valleys 120 years ago. Among modern Indians there are legends of the existence of a race of giants who inhabited the country before the coming of the people of Mongolian extraction. The particular skeleton that is causing speculation is that of a man. It measures 8½ feet, but the man in life would have measured at least one inch or possibly two inches more. The skull formation is much larger and of different shape than those discovered in other excavations in the district.

The find was made by a gang at work on the Vernon-Kamloops Highway, about four miles from Vernon. Six skeletons were discovered. One was that of a woman, three of boys in their 'teens, and a fifth of a young man, possibly of 19 or 20. Near by was located the frame of the man.

Many Mishaps Mark Week-End

Motor Accidents Take Heavy Toll in Ontario

St. Catharines.—The desire of S. Turcotte, Burlington, to show the Welland Ship Canal to his wife on Sunday cost the woman her life. She drowned when their automobile backed into Lock No. 2. Turcotte was attempting to turn his car around after parking close by the brink of the lock, when the accident occurred. In reverse, the car ran over the edge of the lock before he could bring it to a halt. He managed to free both himself and his wife from the automobile and hold her above water for a time, but the woman struggled from his grasp and Turcotte was able to save himself with difficulty. Dragging operations, carried on for close to two hours before being halted by darkness, failed to bring the woman's body to the surface.

Alaska Seals Start South As First Frost Appears

Dutch Harbor, Alaska.—Winter is in the offing. A white frost recently settled down over the misty Pribilof Islands in Bering Sea. Several of the oldest bull seals sniffed the northwest wind currents and moaned dismally. Soon there was commotion among the 1,250,000 fur seals.

In a few hours a general mobilization had been completed and, apparently at a given signal, every fur seal slipped off the icy rocks into the Pacific Ocean and headed south. Fur seals of the Alaska herd do not touch land again until some time next May, when they again climb out of the surf onto the Pribilof beaches.

Two Bears With One Shot Is Farmer's Boast

Ottawa.—Two bears—a little one and a big one—with one shot, is the proud boast of Edward Findlay, a farmer of Eardley Township. A 200-pound mother bear and her cub were the victims.

When he fired Findlay did not see the cub. But he found that the first bullet from his rifle had passed through the larger bear and into the heart of the 50-pound "baby." The cub had been standing on the far side of his mother.

Marriages and Births Drop Again in Britain

Another quarterly decline in the growth of Great Britain's population is recorded for the return ended June 30, published by the Register General on Sept. 12.

The number of live births recorded was 13,874, a decline of 6,398 from the figure for the corresponding quarter of 1930. Deaths, which totaled 114,770, were 3,347 more than in the corresponding quarter of 1930, but 47,498 fewer than in the quarter immediately preceding.

The figures show that the natural increase of population by excess of births over deaths was 49,174—the lowest recorded for the second quarter in the last four years.

The death rate was 11.5 per 1,000 of the population, or 0.3 per 1,000 above that recorded for the corresponding quarter of last year. The mortality of infants below the age of 1 year was 7 per 1,000 lower than the average for the ten preceding second quarters.

Marriages showed a decline in comparison with both quarters. The total number of persons married was 208, a decrease of 65,942 on the 1st quarter of 1930 and of 4,286 on the first quarter.

During the quarter more males were born than females, but the balance of "surplus women" was maintained by an excess of male deaths. The figures were: Deaths, 58,760 males, 55,940 females; births, 83,596 males, 80,278 females.

Alaska Eskimos Like Jail

Last Winter the United States Marshal at Point Hope, Alaska, according to Capper's Magazine, arrested two native Eskimos for misdemeanors and put them in jail. Afterward the two natives told their neighbors how warm and comfortable was the white man's prison and that they had a good meal three times a day. A wave of law-breaking followed and the jail became crowded with Eskimos. Now a larger jail will be built. However, this does not seem to be a logical remedy for law-breaking, says the magazine.

When Japanese Speak English

(The N.Y. Times)

More and more the English language becomes a ruling factor in the Orient. Although the Chinese outnumber all the English-speaking peoples of the world, they themselves must often fall back on English in order to convey their meaning to other Chinese of a different dialect. English is a compulsory part of common school education in Japan.

The language of the British Isles—or some close variant—will bob up in the most unexpected situations in the Orient, as witness the experience of a young American couple who visited Japan recently.

Scene: The smoking room of a passenger ship from Seattle putting in at Yokohama. Four Japanese are having a final session of bridge in one corner. They converse in Japanese—but bid in English.

Scene: Ueno Park, Tokyo. The two Americans discover a baseball game between school-boy nines.

The umpire holds up his right hand after the pitcher throws the ball. The American husband listens eagerly to catch the Japanese word for "strike," but there apparently is none. What the umpire says is "Strike one."

The Americans find that the Japanese have adopted the whole nomenclature of baseball as it was developed in the United States.

Scene: Lake Chuzenji. Japanese in their late 'teens stand back to let the Americans get into a sampan. "Thank you," says the American wife, hoping they will understand. "Not at all," one replies, adding: "You are Americans, are you not? We go to school at St. Paul's in Tokyo."

He and his fellow collegians follow in a second sampan, and the American husband, perhaps thinking he is in a bathtub instead of a boat, breaks into a light song. Conversation stops among the college boys. Presently the sheepish husband is startled to hear, coming from the sampan of the Japanese, the full chorus in English of "Onward Christian Soldiers."

The singers motion to him to join in, but he does not know the words.

Scene: Sleeping car pulling out of Tokyo. The Americans are starting to enter an upper and lower when a middle-aged Japanese, removing his stockings in full view across the aisle, asks: "You are Americans?"

A moment later he is nimbly standing beside them, telling them he hopes they will have a good ride to Nagoya, explaining that he teaches English there.

"Oh, yes,' replies the American wife hurriedly, and with an air of finality, for by that time the loquacious one, having continued to exercise his nimbleness, stands before her quite dressed for his bed.

AT LAST

Perhaps it will all come right at last;
It may be, when all is done,
We shall be together in some good world,
Where to wish and to have are one.
—Richard Henry Stoddard.

"If a smile improve a man's face, he is a good man. If a smile disfigures his face, he is a bad man."—William Lyon Phelps.

Owl Laffs

Sunday-School Teacher—"And when the prodigal son returned, what happened, Tommy?"

Tommy—"His father ran to meet him and hurt himself severely."

Sunday-School Teacher—"Wherever did you get that impression?"

Tommy—"It says so right in the Bible—that his father ran to meet him and fell on his neck."

Jack—"Say, Mary, are you going to the party to-night?"

Mary—"I'll say I am, Jack! I'll be there with bells on!"

Jack—"Okay, I'll ring you later."

Hotel Keeper—"I have rooms for fifty and seventy-five cents a night."

Guest—"What's the difference between them?"

Hotel Keeper—"Not much, only the seventy-five-cent ones have rat traps."

The teacher was examining the class in physiology.

Teacher—"Mary, you tell us, what is the function of the stomach."

Mary—"The function of the stomach is to hold up the petticoat."

Tramp—"You're equal to any situation, aren't you?"

Second Hobo (scornfully)—"Equal? I'm above it!"

Wife—"John, is it true that money talks?"

Husband—"That's what they say, my dear."

Wife—"I wish you'd leave a little here to talk to me during the day. I get so lonely."

One reason for so many divorces is that so many fool people insist on getting married. A girl sings this defiant refrain: "I'd rather freeze in B V D's than to wear long underwear." We will be better off when the brain instead of the pocketbook creates our opinions. Washing clothes can become dry work. Most of us forget the lucky breaks and remember only the bad ones. A man who makes a lot of money is considered a wonder, and we know a lot of girls who work wonders. It must be terrible to have money to burn and not be able to start a fire. Men don't mind marrying a flapper—if she's a pancake flapper. To see a long way behind doesn't require much gray matter.

Nurse (going off duty)—"Is there anything else you wish, sir?"

Patient—"Yes, kiss me good night."

Nurse—"I'l send in an orderly—he does the dirty work."

Epitaph of Pneumonia Victim

For her on the front door
They've rung a wreath;
She would wear naught above,
And less beneath.

Wife (to husband, at dinner)—"You won't read that book of etiquette, and now look at you. Here's the desert and all you've got left is a butter spreader."

Tommy—"Ma, do I have to wash my face again before dinner?"

Mother—"Certainly, dear."

Tommy—"Aw, gee, why can't I just powder it over again like you do yours?"

"Oh, yes," said Mrs. Gadgett, proudly, "We can trace our ancestors back to—to—well, I don't know exactly who, but we've been descending for centuries."

Harry—"I'm forgetting women."

George—"So am I. I'm for getting a couple as soon as possible."

Reversal

When I was child—(at least in part,
For never was I wholly child)—
I felt a woman in my heart,
Too little reconciled.
Bred in the flesh, bred in the bone,
Hard on my hope eternally,
Around my neck, like to a stone,
That terrible maturity.

But when I knew a woman's state
And should have ceased to be demure,
Bewildered, lost, it was my fate
To feel a child, and insecure.
Around my neck, like to a stone,
There is reversal meaningless.
Bred in the flesh, bred in the bone,
This terrible ingenuousness.
—Dorothy Rowles Pinkney.

Blue Glass Windows Keep Flies Away

Blue, yellow or red tinted window glass to keep flies out of butcher shops and cow barns has proved successful both in England and in Holland, it is stated by Professor J. W. Munro, of the Imperial College of Science and Technology, in London. Following observations made originally by the Building Research Station of the British Government, Professor Munro has tested the tendency of flies, wasps and other insects to remain in rooms provided with window glass of various colors, as compared with their tendencies to congregate in similar rooms provided with ordinary window glass and illuminated with white daylight. Flies are found to prefer white light to any color. In similar tests with insects confined in cylinders of colored glass provided with one end made of clear glass, the insects move always to the clear glass end. Some of the observations may be explained, it is suspected, by the different percentages of heat rays which the various glasses admit, the insects probably preferring more such rays and greater warmth. In addition to this, however, mere color seems to be repulsive to the insects. Red or yellow glass cannot be used in meat shops, it is reported, because the tinted light makes the meat look dull and stale so that customers will not buy it, but light that is tinted blue does not spoil the appearance of the meat and aids considerably in keeping out the insects.

Service

The law of perfect service is simply and purely the law of self-sacrifice, which, in union with the Redeemer, and in imitation of Him makes the whole of life a ministration to mankind.—W. B. Pope, D.D.

REASON

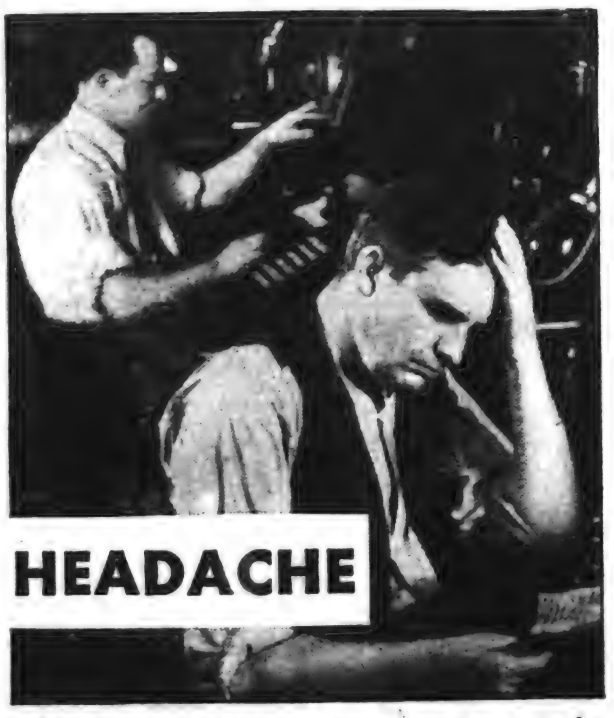
Those who follow the banners of Reason are like the well-disciplined battalions, which, wearing a more sober uniform and making a less dazzling show than the light troops commanded by Imagination, enjoy more safety, and even more honor, in the conflicts of human life.—Scott.

"We are surrounded by traditions that once were living and now are dead."—Havelock Ellis.

PUT HIM OFF HIS PIPE

Indigestion and Acidity

"A few months ago, I had an attack of indigestion, heartburn and acidity, and had no appetite for meals, especially breakfast. I am a pipe smoker, and for several days I felt so ill I could not even look at my pipe. I decided to try Kruschen Salts. A few days afterwards I found that the heartburn and acidity had gone, and for the last five or six weeks I have been in my usual good health. I can now enjoy my pipe-smoking, and in fact feel about 10 years younger."—R. P.



When your digestive juices fail to flow freely your food lies in the system and ferments, thus causing the distress of indigestion. The "little daily dose" of Kruschen first stimulates the flow of the gastric juices, and then ensure complete, regular and unfailing elimination of all waste matter every day.

Castoria

made especially for

CHILDREN

CHILDREN usually hate to take medicine but every child loves the taste of Castoria. And mothers like its action—so gentle, yet so prompt and effective.

Castoria is a never-failing comfort to children and mothers alike because it was formulated expressly for children—to correct their little ills and upsets.

The beauty of it is you can give Castoria to children of all ages with equally sure results. When baby's cry warns of colic, a few drops of Castoria has him soothed and free from pain, he is asleep again in a jiffy.

In an older child when coated tongue or bad breath tell of constipation, a more liberal dose is usually all that is needed to cleanse and regulate the bowels.

Your doctor will tell you Castoria deserves a place in the family medicine cabinet until your children are grown. He knows it is safe for the tiniest baby; effective for a child in his teens.

CALF AND COLT CLUBS WERE PLEASING FEATURE AT BRAMPTON FALL FAIR

Recently Organized Group Captured Surprising Interest

One of the most interesting exhibits at the Brampton Fall Fair were the exhibits by members of the Peel County Holstein Calf Club, Peel County Jersey Calf Club, Peel County Shorthorn Calf, and Peel County Colt Club. And when these boys paraded with their animals in front of the grand stand they were given a hearty ovation for they had worked hard to groom these animals for the fair. Organized this year under the efficient direction of J. C. Shearer, agricultural representative, their show was a pronounced success and great credit must be given Mr. Shearer for his painstaking efforts to assist the boys to put it over.

The show attracted many important personages, who were loud in their praises of the stock by the boys. Among those present were: R. W. Wade, director Ont. Live Stock Branch, J. E. Whitelock, a former agricultural representative for Peel, R. S. Hamer, Chief of Cattle Division of Dominion Live Stock Branch, Ottawa, C. S. McKenzie, Dominion Live Stock Branch, Woodstock, Harry Seymour, Provincial Holstein Fieldman. Another citizen deserving of credit is Chas. Lowe, Brampton, who provided the canvas to house the animals. During the exhibit the Ontario Motion Picture Branch took shots which will be shown later.

The Hon. T. L. Kennedy silver trophy, a magnificent cup standing 26 inches high, was won by Martin Graham, Britannia. It was for the best calf or colt exhibited by a member of one of the clubs and showmanship counted fifty percent. Sixty boys competed for this cup and it was a difficult task for the judges to place the award especially between the winner with his Jersey, Jim Pinkney, Cooksville, with his Shorthorn and Wilson Fraser, Huttonville, who exhibited a fine specimen of a Holstein calf.

Professor W. J. Bell, principal of Kemptville Agricultural School, judged Holsteins and the awards were:

TRINITY CHURCH

The annual harvest thanksgiving services on Friday, Sept. 18, and Sunday, the 20th, were very successful and inspiring. The Ven. Archdeacon Saddington was the preacher on Friday and stressed special reason for gratitude and thanksgiving.

The Rev. Fred Wilkinson, Rector Emeritus of St. Peter's Church, Toronto, was with us on Sunday morning. He spoke of the greatness and wonder of God in His doings with man in the world around us.

The Rector, Rev. R. J. W. Perry, took the evening service, which was a splendid culmination of the former services. He spoke of the fullness and completeness of the redemptive work of God in Jesus Christ.

The church was beautifully and profusely adorned by many willing hands, giving of the first fruits of their labor to the glory of God. The choir, as usual, provided splendid music, which was very devotional and helpful.

On Monday evening at 7 o'clock, a very splendid and bounteous harvest supper was provided in the basement of the new hall, which was used in this way for the first time. Nearly 200 members of the congregation enjoyed this supper and all were very happy. The young men and women did all the organizing, preparing and serving and the verdict of all was that it was most effectively carried out. After supper all repaired to the hall above, where a very informal evening was spent. Songs recitations choruses and the reports of the committee who had charge of the erection of the hall was received with much appreciation.

The rector called attention to the beautiful pictures which adorned the hall, the gift of the Bishop of Toronto, as well as a number by Miss Blacklock, of Meadowvale. A very ha[illegible] evening was spent, closing at ele[illegible] o'clock.

Sunday last were also helpful services. The rector preached in the morning and in the evening took the harvest services at St. Stephen's, Hornby, where the church was nicely decorated and a splendid service took place, which was enjoyed by these splendid people.

Rev. R. S. Boyd took the evening service in Trinity Church and Billie Dale of Holy Trinity Church, Toronto, was in the choir and rendered beautifully two solos.

Every day is washday in this laundry and if you prefer sending your bundle at the latter part of each week we would be very glad to have our driver call. Mrs. L. Schrag Killed in Car

Mrs. Lina Schrag, of Brampton well known throughout this district as reporter for the Telegram, Mail and Empire and other papers, is dead. She and her son Lex, were driving north on Brown's Line in Etobicoke, when their car struck a C.P. R. freight train. Both were badly injured. They were rushed to St. Joseph's Hospital, Toronto by a passing motorist, but the mother was dead upon arrival. The son will recover.

An inquest will be held.

Mrs. Schrag was about 60 years of age, and in her younger days was a school teacher. She had a gift for writing and was generous with her pen in other ways besides writing for newspapers, and will be missed by a host of friends.

Streetsville Fair, Wednesday—Oct. 7th. Remember the date.

Remember the Harvest Home services in the Streetsville United Church on Sunday, Oct. 4th. There will be special preachers at both services.

Mr. A. E. Graydon has rented Mrs. Jean Scruton's house, Queen St. South, for the winter..

Mr. Wm. C. Arch is erecting a garage for Dr. Montemurro, who is now settled in his fine new home on Queen Street, north.

Mrs. W. C. Andrew won one first and 3 second prizes on home made bread made from McCarthy Milling Co. Ltd. "High Loaf" flour, at the Cooksville Fair yesterday. The lady who beat her in the other classes won first prize at the C.N.E.

Mr. W. C. Arch has secured the contract for the erection of a new house for Mr. Ted Sinclair, Erindale. It will be of stucco and brick, and English Colonial design. He will also build a second story on a cement block house owned by Mr. Ramsay of Dixie.

The McFarren Brick Works are operating again, and doing their bit to help the unemployed. Building operations seem to be picking up. We can tell the public that the best brick in the world is made right here in Streetsville—and William Potts is the man who knows how to make it.

This week the surplus stone put on our front street pavement by the County Council, is being scraped up and carted away. The mistake was made by not putting enough binder on the stone to hold it in place. The idea was alright, but not the mixture. The road seems to be very dusty and people are complaining about the dust getting into houses.

Mr. W. C. Arch is making good progress with Mr. J. A. Cook's new house at the south end of the village —the roof was completed in three days after putting in the first joists and the brick work is half done already. Mr. Cook expects to move in shortly, and then we will look for a big "house-warming." Everybody will welcome Mr. and Mrs. Cook and family to the town as they are excellent citizens.

The old town is taking on new life. Several new businesses have come in, new houses are going up and old buildings are being remodelled. When the old boys and old girls come back home next week to attend the Fair they won't know the old town. The latest news is that a new clothing store is to be opened up this week. We don't know who should get the credit for all the improvements, unless its the Village Council—and we believe they are doing their best to make it a better place to live in. The general depression isn't felt very much in Streetsville. We heard a man say the other day that if people would quit talking about it there wouldn't be any such thing as depression. So let's cheer up and be optimistic. Good times are just ahead — all we need is a little patience.

Correction

Last week we stated that Mr Wm Tracy, Sr., had the misfortune to fall downstairs, owing to the lights being off. This was an error, and we regret that it caused Mr. Tracy some annoyance.

It was Mr. Wm. Kemp M.A. who happened with the accident. While he was rather shaken up, he was able to return to his teaching duties last week, and, we believe, has fully recovered.

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS

Don Ellsworth's wife, former actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears. Dr. Cavanaugh criminal psychologist, learns their married life has been unhappy.

Peter Piper, a Herald reporter, while trying to get an interview with Dr. Cavanaugh, meets Barbara, the attractive daughter, and finds she was engaged to Don before his marriage. Dr. Cavanaugh identifies a body burned in the tule marsh outside the city as that of Sheila O'Shay. Barbara faints when she hears this. Mrs. Kane, Sheila's maid, is arrested and Peter learns that Sheila forced Don to marry her by a breach of promise threat. Peter tries to persuade Don to give him an interview.

CHAPTER XXIII.—(Cont'd.)

Peter spoke rapidly, emphatically, but without raising his voice. His head was thrust a little forward, his bright, near-sighted gray eyes steadily fixed on the dark face before him.

He saw that face whiten about the lips, saw the veins bulge at the temples—and stepped back just in time to avoid the lunging sidewise blow whose impetus brought Ellsworth through the open door, which crashed shut behind him.

Don required Peter's steadying touch on his elbow to recover his balance and prevent his plunging forward down the steps. He was not even conscious of that briefly supporting hand.

"I may not keep the public out, but I can keep you out!" he said, turning toward the vague blot of shadow on the darkened porch, which was Peter. "And every other newspaper reporter, too. I've not one single word to give to the press, now or at any other time. That's my answer!"

"Very well," said Peter imperturbably; but he said it to Don Ellsworth's back, rapidly losing its form as a shadow among other shadows as he dashed down the driveway, his feet scuffing with vicious force on the unoffending gravel.

"And the worst of it is," mused Peter as he followed at a more leisurely gait, pausing to light a cigarette from a crumpled package which he exhumed from his overcoat pocket, "he may have to give all those words to men from the district attorney's office, and they'll pass them along to us; and by that time they may not sound so well—not half so well. But Barbara's tip was certainly a good one. I almost think he doesn't like reporters—not one little bit he doesn't!"

Peter's evening assignment was by no means concluded. He returned to the dark and almost invisible Bossy at the corner, and looked carefully up and down both streets before he decided that he might properly venture the glow of his lighted cigarette behind the side curtains.

He did not know precisely what he was waiting for, but he waited in a state of alert quiescence. If the police should force the pace and come with a warrant to search the house, Peter was going to be there.

They might let the Kane woman out—though that was unlikely; she was fairly sure to be held as a material witness, unless Ellsworth gave bail for her, and Peter was of the opinion that Ellsworth would bear with equanimity Mrs. Kane's absence from his house. Or something altogether unforeseen might break. You never could tell. He might better have followed Ellsworth; but after all, he had nothing to go on there—and anyway, his present job was with the house.

It was neither the returning Ellsworth nor Mrs. Kane whose appearance brought Peter leaning forward in the front seat an hour later, but a small black coupe, from which emerged the broad shoulders and rotund form of Dr. Cavanaugh. He walked up the driveway with long, leisurely strides, and stood in parley for some minutes with the maid at the door.

Peter had closed Bossy's door gently behind him and was half way across the street when he paused.

"After all, I can't very well trail the doctor like a faithful pup," he pondered. "He's been pretty good to me, and I don't want to break the charm. It's just possible I might be in the way." While he still hesitated, the front door closed and the house turned to him a shut, impenetrable face.

Peter, however, did not recross the street. Instead, he turned the corner and gazed upward at the dark side of the house. A pergola led to a garden at the rear, and above the pergola to the left a faint bleam of glass indicated what was probably a sun porch.

A few lights still shone on the lower floor at the back—"Servants' rooms," commented Peter—and a dimmer light, as if penetrating a dark room before reaching the street, indicated the front hall.

"Hm," meditated Peter. "Now where the dickens did the great Cavanaugh go to?"

As if in answer a light—bright, definite, unshaded—flashed on in the room over the pergola, on the second floor.

"Now I wonder. Suppose I have a look-see. If it's none of my business, I can just climb down again. If it is, I'll crash the front door, ask for the doctor, and trust to him to let me in on it. Of course, if I'm caught on that pergola-thing, it may take a fair bit of explaining."

It was the idea of that possible explanation that determined Peter. Jimmy would not back him up in any such performance—Jimmy, having told him to cover the Ellsworth house and not come back till he got something, would merely take his copy and read him a lecture if he got into difficulties. But the lecture would not be nearly so hard to take as if he didn't turn in any copy.

He could hear himself arguing with a bevy of frightened, indignant, incredulous servants, thoroughly enjoying the excitement of capturing a burglar red-handed. He could see himself submitting with sang froid to a ride to the station in the jangling patrol wagon, and the confronting the irate, spluttering, and friendly Captain Davis, who would ask him if he expected to get away with murder. Decidedly, such a culmination would not be without its points.

Neither, Peter discovered, was the pergola without its points. They were the sharp, half-inch points of a particularly stalwart variety of climbing rose. They made long claw-marks on his calves and his hands seemed to encounter them with unerring and painful precision.

"Gosh, what a cat-fight!" breathed Peter. "If I don't claim damages under the workmen's compensation act for this—"

He began his climb at the farther, garden end of the pergola, and walked, crouching, along the top, where progress was easier, except when his foot slipped through the squares of the lattice. And then, in a state which it seemed to him must of one of fluttering ribbons, he reached the house wall at last, and, squatting on his thighs, looked into the brightly lighted boudoir of Sheila O'Shay.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Dr. Cavanaugh's broad back loomed directly in the field of Peter's vision. He was seated somewhat absurdly on a very small chair whose long spindling legs and short back gave it the distorted look of something that had started out to be tall and had stopped growing.

It was the sort of chair peculiar to ladies' dressing tables, but as this was the first time Peter had ever seen a lady's dressing table, it appeared to him something of a monstrosity.

Dr. Cavanaugh's solid bulk clad in its usual sober black, projected beyond his insufficient seat; he looked, Peter thought, rather like a block of granite balanced on the top of four far too slender stakes.

The dressing table itself—a glass topped, triple-mirrored affair on which at the present moment the doctor rested a nonchalant elbow—was covered with a surprising multitude of objects, each of which looked like something else.

The glass bottle of rose-colored bath salts had the form of an elephant; a squat object which should have been a jar of cold cream masqueraded as an overblown pink rose.

A long stick with a wide flat circle of powder puff at the end was painted with the face of a black-and-pink, very exotic lady.

The bases of a procession of bottles peeped from the widespread taffeta skirts of a row of dolls.

Peter's entranced gaze veered to a small stand nearby, on which rested a telephone book in a tapestry cover bound in gilt braid, together with another and larger doll concealing the telephone instrument.

The electric light brackets by the dressing table were shaped like candles, with small pointed globes, and the reading lamp by the bed cast its rosy glow through the frosted petals of a cabbage-shaped flower.

Peter shifted his weight from one cramped leg to the other.

"Gosh!" he breathed. "What a way to live! No wonder somebody bumped her off!"

His change of position brought him within sight of the door, where stood a girl in maid's uniform. Her round flushed face was a study in alarm, pleased excitement and admiring awe. It was a larger number of emotions than that ingenious countenance was used to expressing at once, and the effort had widened her eyes to the roundness of very blue marbles. She stood fiddling with the door-knob, obviously seeking an excuse to remain in the room. The stolid set of Dr. Cavanaugh's shoulders and his relaxed attitude before the dressing table indicated bland and patient waiting.

In the darkness Peter grinned.

"She'd give her eye-teeth to stay, and the doctor is calmly sitting her out" he opined.

The window was closed and he could not hear what was said, but in another moment the maid, with a broad smile making her cheeks bulge rounder than ever and a lingering gaze of extreme respect towards the figure at the dressing table, withdrew, closing the door behind her.

Peter eased himself to his knees and reached for the upper ledge of the window. He had no intention of spying. He would open the window and tell the doctor he was there. Then, if he wasn't wanted, he'd depart along the thorny path by which he had come.

You'll love the new skirt cut with its clever diagonal lines to reduce hip bulk. The crossover bodice has applied band trim that is very effective and becoming, besides producing a flat line much appreciated by the larger figure.

Printed crepe silk is an excellent medium for this model. Plain blending shade crepe is used for bands and bow. Eyelet organdie makes the tiny vestee.

Style No. 3173 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 4, 42, 44, 46 and 48 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 4 yards of 39-inch material with ½ yard of 39-inch contrasting and ⅞ yard of 3-inch lace.

Fashioned of black crepe satin, it's stunning with pinkish-beige vest.

Dark green canton-faille crepe is lovely with eggshell crepe used for the tiny vest.

Reverence

There is one thing no one brings with him into the world, and it is a thing on which everything else depends; that thing by means of which every man that is born into the world becomes truly manly. This thing is reverence.—Goethe.

Reverence is fear tempered by love. In the Old Testament, the fear predominated, in the New Testament, the love; but the sentiment of reverence pervades all religion on earth and in heaven. Whether as sacred dread or loving fear, it abideth always.—W. B. Pope, D.D.

The Adventures of Captain Jimmy and his Dog Scottie

What came before: After many adventures, Captain Jimmy lands in his plane at the Island of Formosa. He goes inland to see the camphor camps and the country of the head-hunting savages.

At last we reached a settlement of little huts with a big one for the manager. The camp boss was a young Japanese, who spoke English perfectly. He had a long white scar across his face, which he told us was a souvenir from a fight with a head-hunter.

A group of savage youths had raided his camp at dead of night, eager to bring back heads to their dusky maidens. He objected to having his head cut off and, seizing an iron pot, bounced it off the skull of the leader. Some one threw a knife at him, just grazing his face, and then the soldiers came on the run and the head-hunters vanished into the darkness.

After the camp foreman had told us the story of his fight with the head-hunters, he invited us to visit the camphor camp.

"This is the hut where I slept on the night of the attack", he said, with a grin that showed his white teeth, "and this", he continued, pointing to a large iron kettle that stood on a crude shelf, "is the pot that I bounced off the chief's head. One never knows when it might come in handy again."

What a life! Sleeping and working in the shadow of continual danger. Certainly the camphor camps are no place for a nervous person.

We walked down a trail through trees with big, thick green leaves and finally arrived at a small clearing, where a number of fires were burning. Over each fire was a large pan of water and a barrel. Our guide explained that the barrels were filled with chips from the camphor trees and when steam from the boiling water passed through these chips, it took the camphor with it.

He then showed us how a bamboo pipe caught the steam from the barrels and carried into clay chambers where it was cooled and turned back into water, in the way that steam from a kettle will turn to water on a cold window pane.

Some of the camphor crystalizes on the sides of the clay chamber and some drops to the bottom as oil. After that, they take the crude camphor and heat it again until it turns to vapor and stream and condense it until it is solid.

In another part of the camp they pressed it into little cakes and packed it in lead boxes, ready to send to Japan. The guide told us that most of the world's camphor supply comes from Formosa.

About a quarter of a mile from the camp, we came to a well beaten road, with a high wire fence on the far side of it. This fence was charged with electric current to keep out the head-hunters from the hills. Near the fence, someone had dug up a quantity of fresh earth.

"This", said our guide, "happened last night. The head-hunters tunneled under for a surprise attack when a patrol caught sight of them. We nabbed one, who was not quick enough to get back. We've sent him down to the jail for a while."

Later on we had a good look at him. He was a powerfully built fellow, with a square sort of face and a low forehead. His eyes were shifty, crafty, like those of a fox. He was a hard looking customer and not the sort of person you would care to have prowling around on a dark night.

Record for Longest Flight Set by Arctic Tern in '27; Six Westward Crossings

Paris. — Seven birds are definitely known to have made solo flights across the Atlantic Ocean since 1911, and the record for the longest flight in bird history goes to an Arctic tern banded on July 22, 1927, on the Red Islands, Turnevik Bay, in Labrador. He was picked up near La Rochelle, France, on October 1, 1927, still alive.

Another tern is said to have made a slightly longer flight than the one from Labrador to La Rochelle but he was found dead. The label on his leg indicated that he had left Labrador July 23, 1928, and his body was discovered fifteen miles southwest of Port Shepstone, Natal, South Africa, on November 14, 1928.

There are a few birds banded in Europe that have been recovered on the American side of the Atlantic, as follows: A black-headed gull, labeled at Rossitten, Germany, on the Baltic Sea, on July 18, 1911, was picked up near Bridgetown, Barbados, British West Indies, during November of the same year. Another was retaken in February, 1912, near Vera Cruz, Mexico.

Two kittiwakes, another species of gull, were labeled at islands off the coast of England and recaptured on the American side, one on the coast of Labrador and the other in Newfoundland.

The first American bird for which a definite crossing has been recorded is that of a common tern that was tagged at Eastern Egg Rock, Me., on July 3, 1913, and discovered dead in August, 1917, at the mouth of the Niger River, West Africa.

Life

Me, in the midst of dateless centuries,
By love concealed,
Now, newly swathed in mortal destinies,
Hath Time revealed.

A breathing space, a silence, and behold
What I have been,
Unswathed, the circling centuries unfold,
Again unseen.

With Days and Nights brief fellowship was mine,
But unto thee
I come, a child inseparably thine,
Eternity.

Photography In Color Is Developed Cheaply

Vienna papers are exploiting with illustrations the invention of a local expert, Alfred von Bariss, who says he has perfected a camera and a process which makes color photography simple and cheap.

The camera he manipulated recently before a gathering of reporters is described as "an ordinary press camera with a good, but ordinary, lens." By the aid of mirrors the light coming through the lens is diverted evenly on three plates inside the box—a yellow plate at the top, a red plate at the back and a blue plate at the bottom. The operation took three minutes, during which Herr von Bariss said:

"You may use ordinary panchromatic roll film, film packs, or plates. I am using ordinary films."

He went on to say that the picture could be taken either by snapshot or by time exposure, but that the three negatives must be exposed simultaneously. He then took the negatives to a dark room and developed them, transferring each to specially prepared gelatine sheets, which, he said, could be had for 5 cents apiece.

Next, he placed the gelatine sheets on top of each other over a chemically prepared paper and said:

"It is this paper which is my secret, and on which I have worked for seven years. With it you are able to do away with washing and fixing and can print your colored photographs in ordinary light in three minutes."

He then showed how toning and other artistic effects could be produced on his paper by placing the colored plates at right angles or in different sequence. He added that any number of colored prints could be made from the colored negatives on his paper, which, he said, cost only a cent a sheet.

MOURNING WARDROBE

"A death occurred in our family and I had to go in mourning. I could hardly afford to buy all black clothes, so decided to dye what I had. I consulted our druggist and he advised using Diamond Dyes. Everything came out beautifully; coats, wool dresses, stockings and all. I have since learned to appreciate the excellence of the black Diamond Dyes. I tried another black dye and the results were impossible. I had to get Diamond Dyes and do the work over. Recently I have tinted my curtains a beautiful raspberry shade and dyed a rug a lovely garnet with Diamond Dyes. They are real money savers—the finest dyes money can buy—I truly believe."

Sunday School Lesson

October 4. Lesson I—The Macedonian Call—Acts 16: 6-15; Romans 15: 18-21. Golden Text—Go ye therefore, and teach all nations.—Matthew 28: 19.

ANALYSIS

I. A DISSOLVED PARTNERSHIP, Acts 15: 36-41.

II. GALATIA REVISITED: TIMOTHY, Acts 16: 1-5.

III. HOW PAUL TURNED WEST, Acts 16: 6-15.

INTRODUCTION—We come now to Paul's second missionary journey. Had Paul gone East instead of West, Chinese churches would probably be sending missionaries today to evangelize the natives of Britain and America. As it is, into our western hands has been committed the missionary enterprise.

I. A DISSOLVED PARTNERSHIP, Acts 15: 36-41.

After accepting the Jerusalem compromise, the church in Antioch had peace. Paul was again free for mission work. He longed to see the Galatian converts once more, v. 36. This personal affection and concern for his converts was one of the most attractive features in Paul's character. It appears in the letters which he wrote afterwards. "With great desire" he would see their faces (1 Thess. 2: 17), "night and day praying exceedingly" that he might see them, 2 Tess. 3: 10. Also, he recognized the importance of "following up" work begun.

Then came the unhappy disagreemens between the two leaders. Barnabas would take John Mark again. Paul, setting out upon a journey likely to be difficult and dangerous, would have nothing to do with one who had already failed him. Barnabas, perhaps unconsciously placing his kindly feelings toward his nephew before the interests of the work, was adamant. Unable to agree, they divided the field between them. Barnabas could take Mark and go to Cyprus. Paul, selecting Silas (15: 22), would go north overland to the cities previously visited.

Barnabas now disappears from the record. The church at Antioch agreed with Paul, v. 40. It seems inexpressibly sad. Paul owed a great deal to Barnabas, 9: 27; 11: 25, 26. His affectionate nature must have been deeply pained. It was a time when he felt that for Christ he must suffer loss of everything—even friendship, Phil. 3: 7, 8. That friendship, however, was restored later, 1 Cor. 9: 6. Even Mark eventually won his confidence (2 Tim. 4: 11), but the two leaders never worked together again.

God makes the wrath of man to praise him; two missionary enterprises, instead of one, were thus set on foot.

II. GALATIA REVISITED: TIMOTHY, Acts 16: 1-5.

After winning his fight for Gentile freedom from circumcision, Paul circumcized Timothy. Why? Timothy (v. 1), whom he himself had been the means of converting and of whom he was very fond, Paul would take with him, v. 3. But Timothy was uncircumcised. Being part Jew, he could reasonably be expected to come under the Jewish requirements. The missionaries would generally lodge in the Jewish quarters of the cities they would visit. They would begin their work in the synagogues. The presence of the uncircumcised Timothy would be offensive to the Jews, embarrassing to Timothy himself, and a hindrance to the work. Paul, therefore, since no principle was at stake, had Timothy circumcised, v. 3.

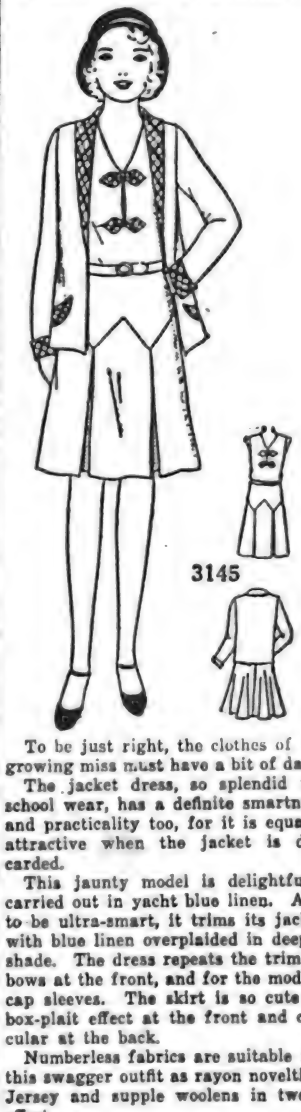
III. HOW PAUL TURNED WEST, Acts 16: 6-15.

To the north lay Bithynia with its populous cities. Thither Paul turned. Again the "Spirit of Jesus" (the correct reading of v. 7) forbade. The harvest of Bithynia was not for Paul, but for Peter, 1 Peter 1: 1. The only course left open for the missionaries now was westward to Troas, v. 8. Forbidden to preach there—for it was part of the forbidden Asia, they had not much choice; it was either to return home or cross the sea to Macedonia, which is today part of modern Greece. At the critical moment came a turning point in history. Paul's vision was the birth-hour of western civilization and western Christianity. Paul was evidently thinking and praying about Macedonia. Perhaps, as Ramsay suggests, a Dr. Luke meeting the travelers in the hotel at Troas, had suggested Macedonia to him. In any case, falling asleep to the swish of the sea, Paul dreamed a dream, v. 9. He took it to be a divine guidance. So did they all, v. 10.

After a good passage, carefully reported by Luke, who is now one of the party and acquainted with the sea, the missionaries arrived in Philippi early in the week. Philippi had few Jews and no synagogue. Paul found some women holding a prayer-meeting by the river. Among them he began his "venture of faith." Lydia became one of his famous converts. The evangelization of Europe had begun. So, by hindrances, embarrassments, apparently sinister experiences, God "sets our feet in steps that lead us upward yet."

Enter the Provost

A new ecclesiastical title is to make its appearance—that of "Provost," which is to be borne by the incumbents of parish church cathedrals, such as Birmingham, Bradford, Leicester, Newcastle, Portsmouth, and Sheffield.



The title is to carry with it the precedence accorded to the dean of a cathedral.

Although new in this connection, the title of provost is an old one. It is applied to the heads of certain colleges, such as Eton and King's College, Cambridge, and to the chief magistrates of cities and boroughs in Scotland. There the title is equivalent to that of mayor in England, and that of Lord Provost to Lord Mayor. There are five lord provosts—the chief magistrates of Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen, Perth and Dundee.

What New York Is Wearing

Illustrated Dressmaking Lesson Furnished With Every Pattern

BY ANNEBELLE WORTHINGTON

To be just right, the clothes of the growing miss must have a bit of dash.

The jacket dress, so splendid for school wear, has a definite smartness and practicality too, for it is equally attractive when the jacket is discarded.

This jaunty model is delightfully carried out in yacht blue linen. And to be ultra-smart, it trims its jacket with blue linen overplaided in deeper shade. The dress repeats the trim in bows at the front, and for the modish cap sleeves. The skirt is so cute in box-plait effect at the front and circular at the back.

Numberless fabrics are suitable for this swagger outfit as rayon novelties, Jersey and supple woolens in tweed effect.

Style No. 3145 may be had in sizes 6, 8, 10, 12 and 14 years.

Destructive Floods Cause of Erosion

China's Diaster Warning to Countries Being Denuded of Forests

One of China's greatest scourges—the flood—is again spreading death and destruction over a wide area, writes Hugh Hammond Bennett in The N.Y. Times. What is the reason for these periodic visitation entailing great loss of life and vast property damage? In China's recurring misfortunes there is a warning to younger civilizations, especially to America; for although in China with its densely populated lands the flood waters are more appalling in their results, the processes which are there at work are also to be found as a menace to the future of the United States.

China's history of floods is voluminous beyond comprehension. After 4,000 years of building levees and digging canals, the great Yellow River broke over its banks in 1877 in an appalling overflow that brought death to 1,000,000 human beings. In 1852 this swollen Titan changed its lower channel to enter the ocean 300 miles north of its mouth on the Yellow Sea.

The Yellow Sea, a part of the Pacific Ocean, is colored with silt swept down from slopes far up the Yangtse Kiang and Whang Ho, whose watersheds once were clothed with forests and grass. Stripped of these stabilizing agencies in nature, countless sloping areas were cultivated without protection against the evils of rain-wash, a process which has altered the surface of the earth more than the combined activities of volcanoes, earthquakes, tidal waves, tornadoes and all the excavations of mankind since the beginning of history. Every rain heavy enough to cause water to run downhill carries its toll of suspended soil, eating away the substance of the land down into the less stable substrata, where the destructive process speeds on at accelerated pace. Under nature's stabilizers of forest, shrubbery and grass, erosion works slowly; with these removed by man and his domestic animals the wastage is vastly increased.

There have always been floods and there always will be. There is evidence, nevertheless, that no such mighty flood ever before marched down the Mississippi as the one of four years ago. And now the Yangtse is reported to have surpassed its own long record of deluges, covering more than 4,000 years of recorded history.

What Wasteful Erosion Means

When soil is washed out of fields it cannot be hauled back, nor can it be restored with fertilizers or soil-improving crops. It can be improved, to be sure, but soil like the virgin surface layer, which averages only about nine inches deep over the uplands of the country, cannot be built back to its original condition. With some of the important agricultural soils of the country it has taken nature not less than 400 years to build one single inch of this productive humus-charged surface material, the principal repository of available plant food and the abiding place of incredible hosts of beneficial micro-organisms.

Not only is the more productive layer removed by unchecked washing, but the exposed subsoil which now must be farmed, or abandoned, is more difficult to till because of its usual high content of stiff clay; it absorbs moisture slower than the mellow loam now gone and gives it up faster with the increased baking of dry weather. Moreover, the washing is speeded up in many localities; and it is at this stage of land depletion that gullying usually sets in. Over the less absorptive eroded slopes water flows away with increased rapidity to augment floods.

It takes just seven years under continuous corn cultivation in Northern Missouri and Southern Iowa for one inch of an important type or rolling corn-belt soil to wash off land of gently sloping topography. On steeper land, that having a fall of eight feet in a linear distance of a hundred feet, the rate of removal is one inch in one year. In other words, under the prevailing system of corn production in this region the most productive part of the land, the seven inches constituting the top-soil, is being washed away within from seven to forty-nine years. Here the virgin soil produced in good years seventy-five bushels of corn per acre; the exposed subsoil produces at the rate of about twenty bushels per acre.

The plant food removed from the fields and pastures of America every year by erosion exceeds by twenty-one times that removed by the crops harvested. That taken by crops can be restored in the form of fertilizer, but that removed by erosion cannot be restored, because this malevolent process takes the whole body of the soil, plant food and all.

Notwithstanding the vast continuing losses caused by erosion, we are not yet on the verge of a land shortage. In spite of the appalling wastage, we are confronted with the anomalous situation of having on our hands large crops surpluses. With increasing use of fertilizers and soil-improving crops, together with the abandonment of worn-out land for land still retaining some of its top-soil, we continue to produce abundantly. In many localities, however, yields have dwindled markedly. With all the improvement which has been made with corn varieties and the widespread betterment of cultural methods, our acreage yield of corn has not increased. This means, obviously, that we are still cultivating much land of inferior quality.

The United States Department of Agriculture, co-operating with the States, has recently inaugurated a national program of soil conservation. Already much has been accomplished with field terraces, and experiments under way indicate that strip-cropping—that is, the growing of soil-saving crops in strips along the slopes, alternately with the clean-tilled crops—will prove tremendously important. A soil-saving cultivator recently devised at one of these experiment stations digs 10,000 holes to every acre, while operating as rapidly as any practical farm implement. These excavations hold on each acre of land aproximately 50,000 gallons of water, thus preventing run-off and erosion from numerous rains.

South Africa's Hippo Passes

Huberta, Whose Long Trek Through Town and Country Endeared Her to Thousands, Rests in a Museum

Cape Town.—In the Kaffrarian Museum at King Williams Town there stands a hippopotamus that gave South Africa thrill after thrill for more than two years. For this enormous stuffed hide was once Huberta the Hippo—the famous roving animal that was looked upon by white South Africans as a friend and by natives as the reincarnation of a great chief.

Flags were flown at half-mast in Durban on the tragic day when the "assassination" 'of Huberta became known. Four farmers convicted of the deed were each sentenced to a fine of £25 or three months' hard labor. A wave of protest swept through the country, and a museum director wrote: "I have entirely despaired of human nature. There are some people who cannot see an interesting specimen without itching to take a pot shot at it."

How did Huberta the Hippo capture the affection of the whole of South Africa? It is a diverting story. To realize the sensation caused everywhere by the appearance of Huberta, it must be understood that South Africa—apart from a few game preserves—is no longer a wonderland of big game. Thousands of people living in the cities have never seen game animals except in captivity. So when, in November, 1928, a full-grown hippopotamus strolled into the village of New Guelderland, fifty miles from Durban, the event received large headlines in all the newspapers.

Huberta Makes Debut

Indians and natives working in the fields of sugarcane were the first to raise the alarm. They heard a snorting and a bellowing, and ran for safety. The hippo remained until hundreds of people were staring wide-eyed with astonishment; then retreated into the thicket.

Undoubtedly this adventurous beast had wandered from the Umfolosi sanctuary, near Lake St. Lucia, Zululand—the last known breeding place of the hippo within the borders of the Union. At first she was named Billy by correspondents who rushed to the spot, but it was as Hubert the Hippo that she became a national character. It was not until after her death that the mistake about her sex was discovered, and she was renamed Huberta.

From the day of her first appearance until her death Huberta was a marked hippo. After she had startled the plantation workers at Guelderland she quickly achieved notoriety. An enterprising press photographer went out among the sugar-cane, but when he leveled his camera Huberta charged him.

Curious crowds flocked to see her. As they grew larger they annoyed Huberta more and more, and finally she moved off. From that moment began her journeyings, which were to last two years and make her the most famous hippo that ever lived.

She moved first in the direction of Durban. As she approached the city she passed through areas which grew more and more thickly populated with every mile. Naturally, the sensation she caused was enormous.

As she approached Durban, which is one of the largest cities in South Africa, the excitement grew. "Hubert on His Way," said the headlines (they thought she was a bull then), and people waited eagerly to see where the animal would make its next appearance. Of course, had it been necessary, an organized hunt could have put an end to her career then and there. But by this time Huberta was a public character. She had roused the amusement, even the affection, of the entire population. It had been proved that she was quite harmless. Occasionally she charged people who were too inquisitive.

An Unwelcome Visitor

Her greatest escapade followed. She called at a hotel just outside Durban one night, appeared suddenly and gave some of the habitues a severe nervous shock. After this, however, she decided that she was coming too closely into contact with civilization. She made a wide detour and was not heard of again until she reached the coast twenty miles south of Durban. Journeying on, she came to the mouth of the Umzimvubu River near Port St. John. There she settled down for a time and lived happily in the river. But again her fatal curiosity got the better of her and one night she visited the village of Port St. John. A town counselor, so it is said, was crossing the square to a meeting. He flashed his electric torch in front of him and saw the yawning mouth of a hippo. He did not attend the meeting!

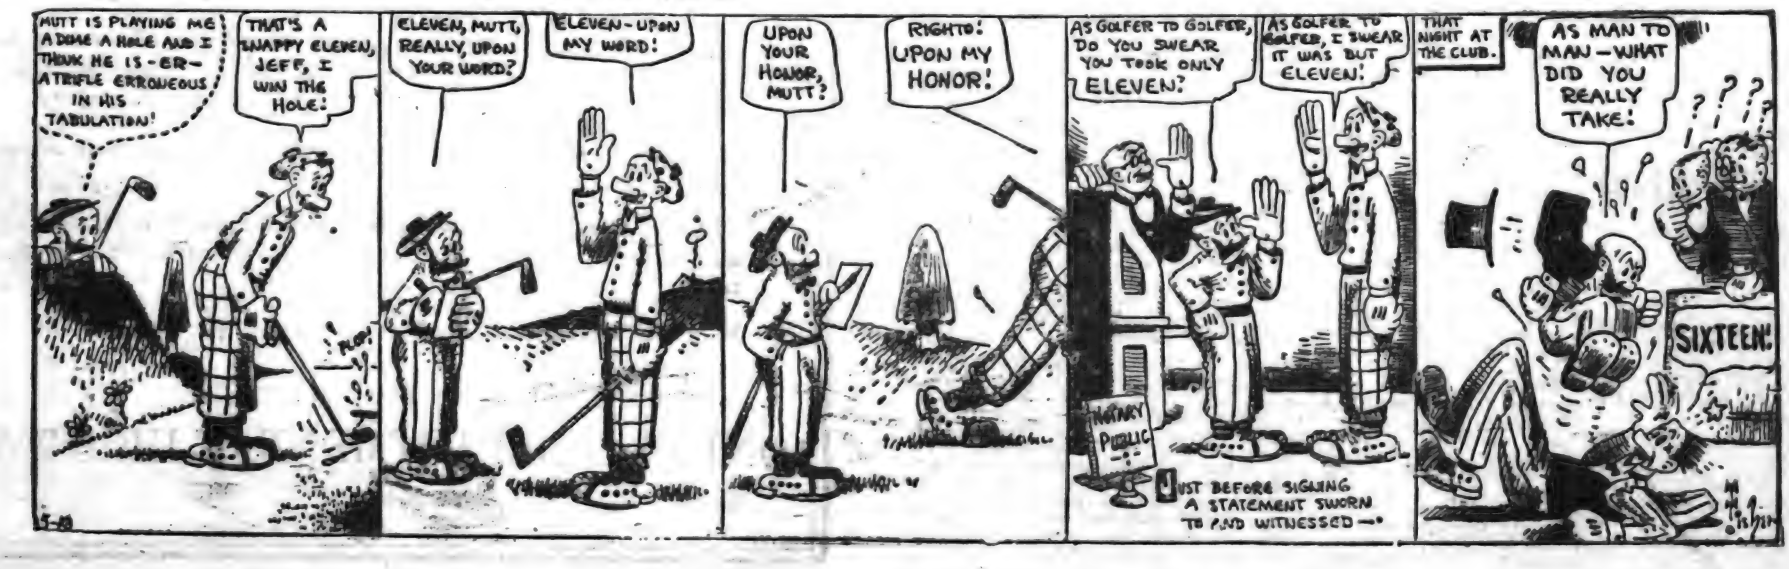
Huberta sat down in the square and soon the entire population of the village turned out to see her. It was the most exciting thing that ever happened in Port St. John or is ever likely to happen there. Huberta bore the shouting of men and women and the barking of dogs for half an hour. Then she left Port St. John never to return. Her wanderings had begun again.

Huberta's odyssey now became a less pleasant one. The Bloomfontein Zoo had sent a party out to capture her alive. They were hard upon her trail. But Huberta by this time had lived upon the fringes of civilization for nearly two years. She had developed amazing cunning. She passed through areas inhabited by natives and they saw not the least sign of her.

Then one day a farmer reported to the magistrate at Peddie, near King William's town, that he had seen a dead hippo in the river. Men went to the spot and, with eighteen oxen and chains, hauled out the body. It was Huberta, with bullet holes above her eyes. She was a full grown cow hippo 9 feet 2 inches in length and with a girth of 8 feet 1 inch. She must have weighed nearly four tons.

Every paper in South Africa published an obituary. Museums quarreled for the right to preserve her hide. There was a popular outcry against the unknown marksmen who had shot her. Eventually, four men made voluntary confessions. They were charged under the game laws and fined $125 each.

Huberta will always be remembered with affection in South Africa. To the natives the stuffed carcass will remain an object of awe for generations. While she lived they quickly surrounded her with legends. To many of them she was the reincarnation of one of the great chiefs of the past who had come back to earth to lead the Bantu Nation to the greatness that once was theirs.



Wheelbarrows should have legs eighteen inches long, according to British experts in industrial health research.

COMMUNITY CLUB

Our last meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Saul Cordingly, Sept. 22, with a good turn-out of members and several visitors.

A new Flower and Fruit Committee was appointed, Mrs. W. Cook, Mrs. T. A. Leslie and Mrs. W. Leslie, to look after the sick and "shut-ins" in our neighborhood.

Our Sewing Committee is the same as last year, Mrs. C. May, Mrs. W. E. W. Steen and Mrs. H. Lee and a busy season is being planned.

Our future meetings and programs were discussed and arranged; our business part was then over.

Mrs. Will Cook was called upon to read an address to our retiring president, Mrs. W. Hamilton, and to Mrs. B. Fullerton, who, owing to a painful accident, was forced to resign.

To Our Past President:

Dear Mrs. Hamilton, now that another annual meeting has passed and we are about to start a new year in the history of our club, we, the members, wish to thank you for your faithful attendance, and for the successful manner in which you stepped into this position in the emergency and presided during the past few months.

As a token of our appreciation, we wish you to accept this water set, which, we hope, will always remind you pleasantly of your first term as President of The Community Club.

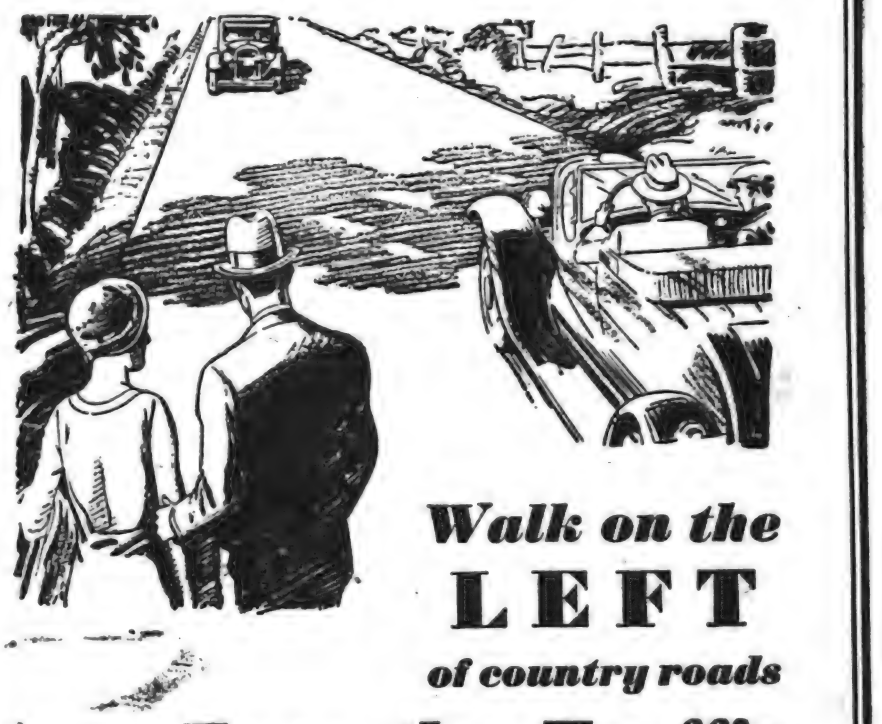
Signed on behalf of the Club.

Dear Mrs. Fullerton, we, your friends and members of the C.C., wish to express our appreciation of your efforts during the few months you were our President. We regret deeply that you were not able to continue in office for the entire year, and have missed your cheery presence at all our meetings.

We are sorry that you must be a shut-in, but hope it will not be long until you will be in our midst again and enjoying the fellowship of our meetings. We also wish you to accept this sweater as a token of our gratitude and love for you, and we hope while wearing it, it will be a source of comfort as well as a reminder of your many friends in the C.C.

Signed on behalf of the Club.

Mrs. Hamilton, though taken by surprise, made a very fitting reply and thanked the club for their kindness.



The hostess then served a dainty lunch, assisted by Mrs. W. Sanford.

Our next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. W. E. W. Steen on October 14 at two thirty. A splendid debate has been arranged, Resolved, that the woman's place is in the home. Four of our witty and able speakers are taking part and those who are not present will miss a treat.

BRING CATTLE EAST

Hon. Thomas L. Kennedy has announced that under arrangements with Western Provinces and Dominion authorities, the best Western cattle at the lowest possible prices are to be made available for purchase in Ontario where feed, which the Prairies lack at the present time, is to be had in abundance. The Minister went West to personally inspect the type of cattle which will be shipped east. The ultimate goal in the negotiations is the British overseas market. It is hoped to have the co-operation of railways and banks. Colonel Kennedy hopes that the Ontario farmer, with financial aid that may be forthcoming, will take to the new arrangements. Feed is plentiful and cheap in Ontario and the British market for finished steers was never better.

. . . Face the Traffic

This rule is important at all times, but especially so at dusk and at night.

At such times, no matter how careful the driver of a car is, he may not see you until he is very near to you and it may be impossible for him to stop in time to avoid inflicting serious injury.

Should he swerve to avoid hitting you, though you may escape injury others may be hurt.

Of the 524 fatalities on the highways of Ontario last year a large number were caused by persons walking with rather than against traffic.

ABDOMINAL P AIN

As long as the body is functioning normally, we are, as a rule, unaware of the activities which go on within it. It is only after extra exertion that we are made to realize that we breathe. After exertion too, and on a hot day, we notice the excessive perspiration, for while we perspire under ordinary conditions, we do so in moderation so we scarcely notice it.

In a similar way, we digest our food without realizing that process goes on, or that the intestines are contracting and moving their contents along.

It is when an abnormal condition develops, when the usually smooth-running efficient body is upset, that we become aware of and notice the existence of our body functions.

Pain is a real signal. It warns us that there is something wrong, something which requires attention. Nature is not helpless in the presence of abnormal conditions. She knows for example, that rest is an effective manner of dealing with certain conditions. The bowel is placed at rest, a movement stopped and the abdominal muscles contracted, so that a rigid wall protects the motionless parts, all these being nature's method of protection against certain abnormal abdominal conditions.

Pain in the abdomin is generally blamed for something which has been eaten, and believing this to be true, a purge is usually taken to get rid of the food which is supposed to be responsible for the trouble. However, pain in the abdomin is not by any means always due to such a simple cause. It may be caused by inflammation of one or other of the abdominal organs, such as the appendix. The pain may also be due to a ruptured ulcer of the stomach.

In such cases, rest of the part is imperative. The use of laxatives breaks down the protection set up by nature. The movements of the intestine are again set up and may cause the inflamed appendix to rupture, which results in a peritonitis.

Many persons with abdominal pain have taken a laxative without serious results. However, it is true that many lives are lost each year because laxatives are used to relieve abdominal pains.

It is not our belief to cause alarm, but we feel that it is our responsibility to inform the public that appendicitis is responsible for several hundreds of deaths in our country each year. These deaths occur at all ages, many of them being those of children and the number is not decreasing, but is rather on the increase. The reason for this is that abdominal pain is not regarded seriously and that when it does occur, a dose of some laxative, such as castor oil, is thoughtlessly given.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Many at Funeral of Mrs. Schrag

With heads bowed in sorrow, men and women in all walks of life, attended the funeral of Mrs. Lina Schrag in Brampton Saturday. Among those present were members of the Dominion and Provincial parliaments, County, Township and town councillors, members of the staffs of city and county newspapers, who mourned the passing of one who had won the friendship and high esteem of multitudes.

In the words of Rev. C. H. Soper, pastor of St. Paul's United Church, who conducted the service, "Mrs. Schrag had faced life's problems and difficulties with sublime courage and triumphant faith. With spirit not embittered but with a grim determination, she won out and forgot herself in unseeking service for her community and her church.

"Mrs. Schrag had a keen interest in the sorrows and tragedies of this whole community but brought to the dark places of life an interest in the things of nature. She allowed her mind to range to the most distant needs of humanity."

Mr. Soper used as a text: "The Triumph of a Great Courage," and stressed the point that Brampton and Peel County had lost one who had been of great service to the entire community.

A private service was conducted at the Brampton Funeral Service Parlors, followed by a service in St. Paul's United Church, during which H. Higgins sang "Crossing the Bar."

At the graveside a brief service was conducted by members of L.O.B.A. No. 470, under the direction of Jean Moore, W.M.; Mrs. W. J. Wilson, D.M., and Mrs. W. J. Galbraith, Chaplain.

Pallbearers were J. A. Mitchell, a nephew; W. J. Mitchell, G. L. Mitchell, D. A. Mitchell, brothers; C. J. Bamfort and C. L. Daly, brothers-in-law.

Among the many floral tributes were wreaths and sprays from the Trustees of The Evening Telegram, city Editorial Department, Evening Telegram; suburban Editorial Department, Evening Telegram; city Editorial Staff, Mail and Empire; L.O.B.A., No. 470; Copeland-Chatterson employees; Mayor and Council of Brampton; Peel County Council; Officers of the Victorian Order of Nurses; Cooksville Agricultural Society; Canadian Legion; Peel and Dufferin Regimental Band; Peel Junior Farmers' Institute; brothers and sisters; Dr. and Mrs. Edwards; Mr. and Mrs. David Kissock; Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Foster; Mr. and Mrs. Lou Marsh; Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Graydon; Mr. and Mrs. William Copeland; Mrs. R. Williamson; Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Adams; Mrs. C. H. Gill.

Mrs. Schrag was killed early Thursday morning. She and her son Lex were driving home to Brampton after leaving some news copy at The Evening Telegram office, where she was a staff writer. Their car, with Lex at the wheel, rammed the side of a train at Hollywood crossing near Long Branch.

Terribly injured, she was pronounced dead upon arrival at St. Joseph's Hospital, where Lex is now recovering from severe cuts and shock.

DRUMQUIN

A Bad Smash

While John Dunn and Sons were filling Mr. A. R. Lunau's silo, a horse shoe, which in some way was picked up with the corn, went into the machine, doing considerable damage. Luckily, however, no one was hurt. If it had not been for the belt coming off, there is no telling what might have happened.

Mrs. Snider, of Port Credit is visiting with her brother, Mr. D. Turner, and other friends in the neighborhood.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Hayward have returned from their wedding trip and taken up residence at Milton.

Mr. Oscar Clifton has been indisposed during the past week with a light attack of blood poisoning. His many friends hope to see him around again soon.

Last Sabbath, Oct. 4th, was observed at Bethel as Rally Sunday. The Sunday school and choir carried out a good programme.

Mr. Patterson is now operating the gas station at our burg and getting a fair share of the trade.

The continued warm weather of the past week is enabling agriculturalist to garner his vegetables and fruit and many a housewife is rushed these days canning her supply of peaches and tomatoes, while silo filling and threshing add also to the employment of the men

Little Ann Calverly, who has been so badly hurt by a kick from a horse and rushed to the Hospital for Sick Chilldren, is improving slowly. It is hoped that her complete recovery may be soon and she able to be brought home again.

IMPORTANT MEETING

On Wednesday night, October 14th, at 7.30 o'clock there will be a public meeting in the Town Hall to discuss ways and means for procuring a skating rink for Streetsville this winter. This meeting is public and we would like everybody who has children and also those who have not, to make it a point to be present. You cannot do your children any good by staying at home. Those of you who followed up last winter's skating should realize that it is not only important, for the good times that your children have, but it also keeps them in a safe place.

We are not going to ask you to donate a lot of money, nor are we going to put you on committees, all we want is some moral support, some enthusiasm, if you do not think we should build a rink, come and say so, we won't throw you out.

If there are any private patrons who were thinking of building an open air rink, we want them there because so far there have been no plans made about a rink. Now remember, you are doing this for your children so please make a special effort to be present on Oct. 14th in the Town Hall.

We are also winding up the softball season the same evening, so all you softball players turn out and find out all the news.

Cook also appeared on the drunk list and was assessed $10 and costs with the alternative of thirty days in jail. Three Caledon youths, Ernest Scott, William Hay and Kenneth Cox, who were recently arrested for breaking into a store at Caledon, were also sentenced. Scott got six months, Hay four months, and Cox 30 days in jail.

World Jamboree

It has been decided that the next Boy Scout World Jamboree will take place in 1933 at a place called Godollo, about 15 miles from the city of Budapest, in Hungary.

This was decided by the International Conference of Boy Scout Leaders held recently at Vienna, Austria.

When the Canadian contingent was chosen for the last Jamboree, which was held in England in 1929, the condition was that all candidates should be First-Class Scouts.

Wouldn't it be a fine thing if, at the next 1933 Jamboree, some Ontario Lone Scouts were included in the contingent? If you are keen to take the trip to Europe, therefore, you should get busy in order to obtain the necessary qualifications well in advance.

Parents' View of Scouting

The July issue of the "Miami Lonie" contains a short article written by the parents of a Lone Scout in that district, in which the following statements are made:

"Scout work is one of the best things for boys. It offers great possibilities for practical education as well as recreation. It develops observation and alertness, a desire to gain facts and methods of doing things most effectively. It encourages the exchange of ideas so that the boy may have the benefit of the experience of others. Also it affords a sensible form of recreation, which is eagerly looked forward to as a break in the steady routine of school work.

Scout training must and will tell upon the general habits, the character and manners i nthe years to come.'

Parents are becoming more and more alive to the value of Scout Training to their sons, and we had very practical demonstration of this at the Scout Booth at the Canadian National Exhibition this year, where the grown-ups showed almost as much interest in the display as the boys themselves.

Preparedness

"Be Prepared!" Are you prepared, Lone Scout?"

What would you do if you were suddenly called upon to help fight a forest fire, or a burning haystack? What would you do in case of severe storm, flood, or automobile accident? Would you be able to demonstrate that a Scout is really "prepared?"

See therefore Lonies that you take all the interest you possibly can in your Scout work, so that you can always conscientiously say "I am Prepared."

If you are not a Scout, and if you are unable to join an ordinary Scout Troop, perhaps you would like to be a Lone Scout.

If so, write to The Lone Scout Department, Boy Scouts Association, 330 Bay Street, Toronto, tell them why you want to be a Lone Scout, and ask them for particulars of this movement. They will be glad to hear from you.—Lone E.

Wheat Situation — Strong in Canada

Carryover May be Reduced to Normal If Exports Continue

Ottawa.—World wheat shipments for the first eight weeks of the present crop year were the largest in the history of the grain trade, the Department of Trade and Commerce reported Friday. Despite depressed economic conditions, drastic restrictions against grain imports into European countries and other unfavorable factors, wheat movements were abnormally heavy.

In commenting on the Canadian situation, the department's bulletin said it "remains very strong by virtue of the small volume of the 1931 crop. If Canada exports 200 million bushels this year, the entire 1931 surplus will be sold and the carry-over reduced to normal. This involves monthly exports of approximately 17 million bushels. August exports amounted to 14½ million bushels and export clearances in September indicated a higher figure for that month—possibly 17 or 18 million bushels. Thus, in the face of Russian competition of the past two months, Canada has practically maintained her export quota."

Figures released by the Trade and Commerce Department showed the extent to which Russian exports increased during the past two months United States and Canada, during the first eight weeks of the crop year sold 38.3 per cent. of the world's demands. The corresponding figure last year was 63.3 in 1929 44.1 and in 1928 70.2 per cent. On the other hand, Russian exports of wheat increased from 11.4 per cent. of the world movement last year to 30.4 per cent., which more than counterbalanced the drop in North American sales.

The department bulletin noted the discrepancy between the predictions made by two leading grain authorities, one that Russia would desert the market by the end of October and the other, that its holdings would permit it to continue in the export field until November.

Two Trains a Day To Carry Unemployed

Toronto—Governmental machinery for the handling of the unemployed will be speeded up this week when it is hoped to dispatch two trains a day to Northern Ontario carrying men to be employed on the Trans-Canada highway, Hon. Dr. J. D. Monteith said.

"Good progress is being made with the plans for these men and word received that additional batches can be accommodated allows us to speed up our arrangements for the sending of men northwards," said Dr. Monteith. "We hope to be able to take care of a portion of the unemployed in the Border Cities."

A supply of radios for use in the camps has been purchased by the government and will be sent on immediately. The appeal made by Hon. W .G. Martin, minister of public welfare, for a supply of books for the workmen has been quickly answered and to date more than 6,000 books, many of them from the public libraries and social bodies, have been received. As this number will be ample for all requirements, Hon. Mr. Martin said that no further contributions were necessary.

$46,110,000 Loss By Fire in 1930

Annual Fire Waste in Canada at Rate of $200 Per Minute

Ottawa—During the past ten years 386,000 fires in Canada have destroyed property valued at $413,000,000, and in addition 3,926 lives have been lost and 9,858 persons seriously injured by fire. These figures were given out here by J. Grove Smith, Dominion fire commissioner, in the course of an appeal for observance of fire prevention.

Last year 39,200 fires were reported, with a property loss of $46,110,000.

"If we analyze these figures," Mr. Smith says, "we can better grasp the magnitude of the problem. The average annual waste by fire in Canada represents an expenditure of $280,000 daily or roughly $200 for every minute throughout the year. Capitalized at five per cent. it represents the gigantic sum of over $2,000,000,000 which is only a little less than our present national debt."

Continuing, the Dominion Fire Commissioner makes the following suggestions:

"Let the owners and occupants of property insist upon clean premises and clean communities. Every neglected pile of rubbish is a potential fire-breeder and disorder invariably is a sign of fire hazard. Then, let every individual recognize his responsibility towards the common causes of fires.

"Cities, towns and villages everywhere need better building laws and proper ordinances for the removal of fire hazards and for the correction of dangerous conditions in buildings and many of them need better equipped fire departments. It is to the interest of everyone to urge public action in respect to these things, thus improving conditions in the communities in which they live."

Canadian Gold Output Exceeds U.S. For 1930

Toronto.—Canada definitely passed the United States in gold production in 1930, officials of the statistical branch of the Ontario department of mines declared recently, in answer to a Washington despatch which said that in all probability the Dominion would rank higher than the U. S. A. next year.

"In 1930 Canada produced in round figures, $43,500,000 worth of gold," said the official of the branch. "In the same year the United States produced $42,800,000. In the first half of 1930 the United States' output was $20,000,000 or less than Ontario's production for the first half of the current year. It may be conservatively estimated that Ontario will produce over $41,000,000 during the 12 months of 1931 and Canada more than $53,000,000."

Octopi Caught

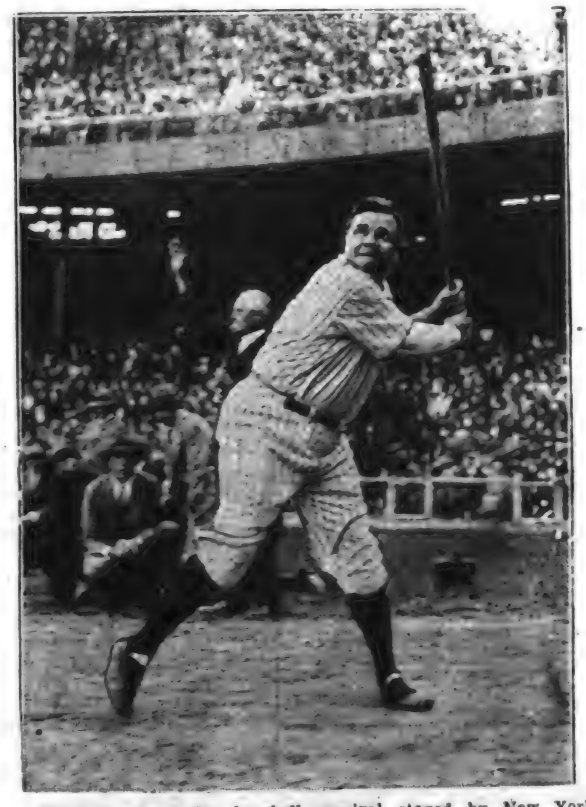
Dump Heaps Turned Into Rose Gardens



Bridlington, Eng.—Evidence that unsightly refuse dumps can be turned into rose gardens and playing fields was presented at a conference of sanitary inspectors here in the form of a film illustrating the different stages in the transformation.

The film significance lay in that it showed how, by the expert manner in which the refuse was piled, it could be quickly turned into sandy soil.

Mrs. Watson was running across the road to the grocery store when struck by an eastbound street car. She was dragged more than 50 feet, according to the police. At the hospital doctors claimed she must have died instantly.

An inquest will be held at the Windsor police station. Mrs. Watson is survived by her husband and three children.

Mitchell Girl Killed

Stratford.—Following a fatal accident on No. 23 highway north of Mitchell, early Saturday morning, in which Miss Irene Collins, aged 17, of Mitchell, was instantly killed, R. A. Benneteau, of Mitchell, driver of the car in which the girl was riding, appeared before Magistrate Makins here on Saturday on a charge of criminal negligence and was remanded until October 12.

Miss Collins, an employee of the Royal Hotel at Mitchell, met death when the sedan driven by Benneteau, proprietor of the Royal Hotel, crashed into the rear of a steel box gravel truck. Mrs. R. A. Benneteau, wife of the driver, suffered painful cuts about the head and face, but her inpuries are not considered serious.

Coroner Dr. W. J. Armstrong's jury viewed the remains and an adjournment was then made until Thursday evening at 7.30 in the town hall in Mitchell.

This is the third fatality in the vicinity of Mitchell within a few days.

Fatal Collision

London, Ont.—As the result of injuries sustained in a collision between his own machine and one driven by Frank E. Taylor of this city, on the Asylum Sideroad early Thursday morning, Chester Walters, 20-year-old son of J. H. Walters, a farmer of the Thorndale district, died Saturday morning in St. Joseph's Hospital.

In an ante-mortem statement Walters, who was riding with a younger brother, said that when he saw the Taylor car approaching he ran his car almost in the ditch, but that Taylor struck him head on, on the wrong side of the road.

Taylor was badly hurt, was not arrested until Friday night when a warrant charging criminal negligence was sworn out. He is now held on bail.

An inquest on Walters was opened Saturday and adjourned until Tuesday.

Famous Yachtsman Passes at 82

Sir Thomas Lipton Dies Quietly—End of Eventful Career

London.—Sir Thomas Lipton, "perfect sportsman" and one of the most engaging figures in the world's of commerce and yacht racing, died quietly during his sleep Friday night, cheated of his heart's desire—to win back the America's Cup for England.

His life ran coincidentally with the history of that cup. He was born the year before the little America sailed across the Atlantic and snatched the ungainly $500 vase from the hands of amazed British yachtsmen. His avowed purpose in life, during the past 30 years, was to recover "the old mug." Five times he challenged, and five times he failed. Had he lived, he would have challenged again.

If his name, however, is closely linked by Americans and Britishers to the America's Cup, it has also stood for something else in commerce. It has meant new methods, novel methods, sometimes startling methods, of business and advertising

Born in 1850 of poor parents, Thomas Lipton ran his father's little grocery and tea business into a gigantic concern dealing in millions. In part, this success, or the inspiration for it, came from America, for it was in the United States that he discovered "modern" business methods and it was there that he saved $500, which was to launch his first "company."

The last 30 years of his life was spent—outside of business hours—in a sporting quest which, with each failure, was to endear him further to the sporting public of two continents. Each of his five yachts was a Shamrock. From his first, in 1899, to his last, in 1930, Lipton refused to change the name, refused to bow to superstition. Each time he said: "Well, you had the best boat. I'll try again."

It was a courage, a spirit of sportsmanship, which struck a chord of nation-wide response in America, and last year, when Shamrock V. lost to Harold S. Vanderbilt's trim Enterprise, Sir Thomas had most Americans on his side of the contest and was honored with trophies such as no loser ever before had received. A handsome cup for "The World's Gamest Loser" was presented to him at City Hall, in New York.

He meant to try again; in fact, only one thing could ever halt his challenges for "the old mug." He had planned to sail for New York on a short visit, with the possibility of another challenge within a year or so, after the business depression had lifted. But death, the only thing that could stop him, came too soon.

Put New Ideas Into Business

Sir Thomas had gone to America when he was 15 years old, leaving his home in Glasgow, where his parents had migrated from Ireland. He worked on a farm in New York and then went to New Orleans, where he drove a horse car. Later he went to South Carolina to work on a rice plantation. Returning to New York he was penniless and slept on park benches until he could find a job. At last he got a start and saved his money for several years, returning to Glasgow to work in his fathers' shop.

He put new ideas into the business, advertising widely. Once he advertised a special cure for hams by leading two large hogs through the streets with a banner saying, "Lipton's Orphans.' His slogans caught on with the public and business prospered. Although the steady growth of his tea and other enterprise: brought him great wealth, it was the manner in which he informed the public of his business that later kept him out of the aristocratic yacht clubs.

After accumulating a fortune, he was made a Baronet and at the turn of the century had become a confirmed yachting enthusiast.

On his last birthday he smiled as he recalled his challenges for the America's Cup. "I must get the old mug back again," he said.

New Type Lamp Used in Europe

Powerful Device Using Ionized Gas Connects With Any Socket

In Europe a new type of electric lamp has made its appearance, which marks an important development in the art of illumination. It combines the advantages of the mercury-vapor arc and of the neon tube and, unlike either, can be connected directly with any socket. The inventors are Dr. H. J. Spaner, U. W. Doering and Dr. Edmund Germer.

The mercury-vapor arc lamp is one of the most efficient known; that is, it light than the ordinary incandescent, converts more electric energy into tungsten-filament lamp. Unfortunately, it has marked disadvantages. In the first place, it has a ghastly, greenish-blue color, as any one can testify who has ever seen it in a composing room or photographic studio.

Furthermore, the mercury vapor can be electrically excited to glow only with direct current. If alternating current is supplied, which is usually the case, expensive additional services must be used. In addition, the difficulty of starting the tube by shaking it, together with the impossibility of using one device for both alternating current and direct current and the possibility of moving the arc lamp during he operation, has limited its use.

Disadvantages of Neon

Neon lamps seen in advertising signs are also efficient, but restricted in their applications. They operate only on alternating current at very high voltage. The rare gases in the tube are excited by the electric current. Different gases or vapors give different colors, which explains the red, blue and other lights that we see.

Moreover, like mercury arcs, these gas tubes cannot be connected directly with a socket because of the high voltages required.

What is wanted is a lamp which will have all the advantages of the mercury and neon lamps, which can be made to glow with any color, even if the desired color is an approximation of daylight, and which can be screwed directly into any socket. Dr Spanner is of the opinion that the filament lamp has been developed as far as possible.

The German invention is a natural evolution of existing vapor lamps. It depends for its success largely on the use of an electropositive metal in the cathode. When electrically excited this metal ejects large quantities of electrons from the atoms of the vapor or gas. Atoms thus deprived of electrons are called ions.

Lights of Many Colors

The Spanish-Doering-Germer lamp can be made in the form of the usual long tube or in the form of a very short tube curved back on itself to produce a U-shaped bulb which can be screwed into any household socket—something not possible before. Moreover, in it mercury vapor can be mixed with any other desired metal vapor to produce light of almost any color. Thus a mixture of the vapors of mercury, zinc and sodium at high pressures, comparable with atmospheric pressure, gives a light much like daylight.

The new lamps glow almost immediately after the current is switched on. After about one minute the light intensity increases to the maximum value. There is no liquid in the lamp, nothing that resembles the old mercury lamp. Moreover, it is about three times as efficient as the best filament electric lamp of equal candle-power, which means that, for the same amount of current, three times more light is obtained. What is most important, the color is nearly that of daylight.

One of the main features of the new lamp is to be seen in the possibility of using any kind of glas from the softest glass to quartz. Especially in using "uviol" glass, so called because it transmits ultra-violet radiation, the new lamp is very like a little sun so far as the color of its rays is concerned. These new lamps can be installed in windowless offices and factories because they give daylight illumination with an amount of ultra-violet rays equal to that in sunshine on a mountain 6,000 feet high.

Through the dark wood, where each

From the old sycamore's embraces,
And there a crooked satyr fled. . . .
Oh dim rain-shadowed places,

And sunlight, mocking necromancy,
Upon a silver lake of sky. . . .
Shows me a crooked branch and old;

DRAPERIES MADE NEW

"When we resumed housekeeping a month ago I found my draperies had become creased from packing. I hung them out on the line, hoping to remove the creases. Then I forgot them. The result was they became badly faded and sun-spotted.

"I was heartsick until the happy thought struck me to dye them. I just dyed them a deeper green, and as I used Diamond Dyes they look gorgeous and new. I have never seen easier dyes to use than Diamond Dyes. They give the most beautiful colors—when used either for tinting or dyeing—and never take the life out of cloth as other dyes do."

Mr. Perkins—"No, but I heard you and your wife rehearsing it."

Small Brother—"Sometimes, when mother ain't there."

The Golfer—"They're all afraid to play me. What do you think my handicap is?"

The Girl—"Oh, I don't know. It may be your face."

It may have been an apple that caused Adam's downfall, but these days men fall mostly for peaches. A nervous breakdown seems to be a luxury in which only the rich indulge. The man who is only a follower can't see where he is going for the dust in his eyes. It takes a genuine genius there do to tell the difference between a luxury and an absolute necessity. It takes big men to do big things; this holds especially true in public office, big men have a hard time getting public office, true as this is. Perhaps every man at one time makes a fool out of himself over a woman. The lucky ones are those who do it early in life and get it over with. We are quite sure if we did smoke we would be courteous enough when in a private home to at least ask if there was any objection to smoking before we would light up and try to stink everybody out of the house. We would also jump into the first deep puddle we came to if we could not do without smoking for a few minutes.

"Rain" From a Cannon

An ingenious device known as the "rain cannon," used for watering fields, was displayed at Hanover, Germany. It consists of a jet mounted on a cylindrical pressure tank. The upper portion of the tank is filled with air, which is compressed by the water until there is equillibrium. When this is attained a valve located in the nozzle opens an orifice. Owing to the sudden release, the air pressure ejects the water in a powerful jet and throws it a considerable distance and at the same time moves it around slightly.

This method is considered a great improvement on the old sprinkler and pipe-line methods. A small rain cannon, requiring only a pressure of two of three atmospheres, is finding a ready market.

Virtue

The world admires those who speak to it of virtue eloquently; but God loves those only who know how to practice it with courage and perserverance.—L. Pichot.

Peace

Peace cannot be established on the point of a sword. It must be broad-based upon the will of the people.

Every noble crown is, and on earth will forever be, a crown of thorns.—Thomas Carlyle.

When TEETHING makes HIM FUSSY

One of the most important things you can do to make a teething baby comfortable is to see that little bowels do their work of carrying off waste matter promptly and regularly. For this nothing is better than Castoria, a pure vegetable preparation specially made for babies and children. Castoria acts so gently you can give it to young infants to relieve colic. Yet it is always effective, for other children, too. Remember, Castoria contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics—is absolutely harmless. When your baby is fretful with teething or a food upset, give a cleansing dose of Castoria. Be sure you get genuine Castoria with the name:

TIRED AFTER 10 HOURS SLEEP

After Lunch Would Sleep 3 Hours

NOW SHE HAS "THAT KRUSCHEN FEELING"

Everyone knows the meaning of the famous phrase: "That Kruschen feeling." Well, here is a typical instance of the extreme reverse of that condition. This woman had a perpetual tired feeling. See how it affected her:—"I am 34 years old, and the mother of two small sons. So my life is a very busy one. Ever since I can remember, I have always suffered with a feeling of tiredness, and never felt ready to get up in the morning, even after 10 hours sound sleep. I have often felt so tired after lunch, that I have slept for 3 and 4 hours, having to do the work in the evening. I took Kruschen Salts for a fortnight—and lost the tired feeling completely. I feel fresh and wide awake, and I have never felt better in my life."—Mrs. E. M. W.

Millions of men and women all over the world take Kruschen Salts daily—not because they are really sick, mind you—but because they know the little daily dose of Kruschen keeps them always fit and energetic, and also keeps the system free from poisonous matter caused by irregular or insufficient elimination.

People who take Kruschen Salts every morning don't have headaches, and are always free from constipation, depression, dizziness, coated tongue and unpleasant breath. They have no poisons in their system because the action of Kruschen Salts on the liver, kidneys and bowels causes perfect and regular elimination. If you want joyous health and glorious vigor—to sleep soundly and arise in the morning fit and refreshed—if you want to work hard and enjoy your work—try taking Kruschen Salts every day. Millions of people are enjoying their daily labours, thanks to the "little daily dose" of Kruschen. Kruschen Salts is obtainable at all Drug Stores at 45c, and 75c. per bottle.

MUCH SUFFERING FOUND IN SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN

Ontario farmers may be in an unfortunate position at the present time, but, according to Hon. Thomas L. Kennedy, Minister of Agriculture, who returned to Toronto this week from a two weeks' visit to the West, their conditions cannot begin to compare with those faced by the farmers of the 76 municipalities of Southern Saskatchewan.

"I went through all those municipalities," Colonel Kennedy told the press, "and, were it not for the 100 per cent. relief given by the Dominion Government, the farmers would starve to death. They have nothing to live on in the way of farm produce. Food and clothing and seed are supplied them on long-term notes without interest. I went there fully prepared to find matters in a bad way, but they were far worse than I expected."

In the northern part of Saskatchewan and in Alberta, Colonel Kennedy found comparatively good crops and little evidence of such suffering as existed in Southern Saskatchewan.

Colonel Kennedy's mission to the Western Provinces, and to Saskatchewan in particular, was to complete on the field, so to speak, the first step in an arrangement whereby Western cattle would come east to Ontario for fattening and then proceed to the British Isles, where good prices for beef are now available. The movement from Saskatchewan will necessarily be delayed for a time because of the depressed agricultural conditions in the South, and because no reduction in shipping rates, as had been anticipated by the Minister, could be expected under such conditions. From other sections of the West, however, cattle will be moving to Ontario this fall in numbers which Colonel Kennedy estimates roughly at 50,000.

The Minister was delighted with inquiries he received all through the West for Ontario fruits. Cheese and apple-cider were other products of this Province which evidently, he states, are much in demand out there. "When they get back on their feet again," said he, "we will have a great market in the West. Their purchasing power is pretty low now. But wait until the depression passes; then you will see Ontario develop a great market in Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan.

United Church Minister's Wife Passes Away

Following a prolonged illness Mrs. Geo. Purchase, wife of the United Church minister, died at her home here on Monday, Oct. 15th. Born in Pembroke, Mrs. Purchase, formerly Ruth Howard, was educated at Pembroke Collegiate and Moulton College, Toronto. Later graduating from Toronto General Hospital, receiving the gold medal for general proficiency,. The graduation was followed by a post-graduate course at Royal Victoria, Montreal. She was appointed superintendent of her hospital, which position she held for some time. Twenty years ago she married the Rev. Geo. H. Purchase. Shortly after their marriage she shared with her husband the work of an itinerant minister, serving at Singhampton, Mono Road, Crawford St. Church and Bellefair Church of Toronto. Then four years at Hunts ville and two years ago coming to Streetsville, where she has endeared herself to the hearts of so many. Mrs. Purchase took a very active interest in the work of the W.M.S. being honored by being elected one of the principal officers of the Toronto Conference. When her health permitted she was frequently called upon to address public gatherings in various phases of missionary work. Her platform ability was fully recognized. Since coming to Streetsville Mrs. Purchase was teacher of the adult Bible Class of the United Church and built up a very large class. Shewas considered a very excellent Bible student. It can be said of her she was interested in all good works and lived a life of unselfish service.

Besides her husband, and one son Howard, there survive, two sisters Mrs. Goldie Wright of Toronto; Mrs John Orr, of Montreal, and one brother, Hiram Howard, Chapleau, Ont.

The numerous floral tributes were evidence of the great esteem in which Mrs. Purchase was held.

The funeral took place this Thurs day afternoon. Service at the home was in charge of Rev. W.N.Chantler of Dixie, and at the Church and grave in charge of Rev. C. S. Jones of Cooksville. The following assisted —Rev. R.J.W. Perry (local Anglcan clergyman), Rev. R.A. Spencer of Clarkson; Rev. E.Forbes of Weston: and Rev. Geo. Barker, Chairman of Toronto West Presbytery. The address was given by Rev. Dr. Chas. W.Bishop, Principal of Albert College, and a close friend of the family. Mrs. Frank Reid sang very effectively, "Some day we'll Understand." Herbert Falconer presided at the organ.

Interment was made in the Park Lawn Cemetery, Toronto. The funeral was one of the largest ever held in this vicinity. Pallbearers were—Messrs. Cecil Dynes, Toronto; Will Cook, C.H. Falconer, O. S. May, J.D.Steen, John Wagner.

Members of the W. M. S. carried the floral tributes.

Musical Cruisaders to Resume Travels

With its network of twenty-six broadcasting stations linking Halifax, Nova Scotia, with Victoria, B.C., the Canadian Pacific Railway hour of music on Friday evenings gives a very complete coverage of Canadian radio listeners. The programmes planned for the winter season 1931-1932 will consist chiefly of musical travelogues, interpreting the music of various European and Mediterranean countries. Programmes on similar lines were provided last winter by the celebrated Ensemble known as the Musical Cruisaders, and these brought in so many letters from intending visitors to Europe who desired further information on this subject, and also from new Canadians of European origin settled in Western Canada, that this type of programme has been selected for the coming season as being useful as well as entertaining.

ALFRED HEATHER

This has necessitated a vast amount of research which has been undertaken for the Canadian Pacific Radio department by George M. Brewer, well-known organist and composer of Montreal. Each hour of music includes approximately 20 selections, so that for the series of 18 musical travelogues which has been planned, Mr. Brewer has had to select a total of 360 numbers, each with its special interest and each illustrating some particular phase of the country concerned.

These musical travelogues will be interpreted by the Musical Cruisaders, under the direction of Alfred Heather, assisted by Rex Battle's Royal York Concert Orchestra, supported by a specially designed studio organ built by J. E. Pepin, of Montreal. There will also be guest artists of various nationalities for certain of the programmes.

This series commences on October 2, with a programme of music from Norway, followed on October 9 by a programme of Danish and Icelandic music. There will be programmes of Spanish, French and German music, and concerts illustrating the music of Sweden, Finland, Italy, Belgium, Austria, Czecho-Slovakia, Greece, Turkey, Poland, Hungary, Egypt, Scotland and Ireland. Interspersed in these musical travelogues will be other general programmes—for instance, a programme of music rendered by a choir in London, Ontario, on November 20. This series of programmes will be of great educational interest as well as being highly entertaining, and will undoubtedly prove one of the major attractions of the coming season.

Winter Bulbs

Success with bulbs depends more than anything else on proper root growth, and most of the failure and disappointment amongst those who have potted up a few bulbs and grown them on, with the only result a few leaves of stunted growth and no bloom can be traced to this cause. If the plants were turned out of the pot it would be found in many cases that there were very few roots. Some varieties of bulbs will not stand forcing at all, others will stand a certain amount and some can be forced to come into bloom several weeks ahead of time. The easiest grown and the ones that offer the most chance of success when grown in the house are the Paper White Narcissus and the Chinese Sacred Lily, which can be grown in pots in the usual manner or in flat bowls of water, the bulbs being kept in place by pebbles—these bowls or pots should be kept in a dark cool place until roots have been formed, and when brought to the light they should be placed where they can get the most sunshine, otherwise the leaves and flower stalks will grow very tall and weak. These bulbs are for indoor use only, not being suitable for outdoor planting in Canada. If bulbs are planted in succession a week or two apart the period of bloom can be lengthened considerably.—T. R. in the Montreal Star.

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS

Don Ellsworth's wife, former actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears. Dr. Cavanaugh criminal psychologist, learns their married life has been unhappy.

Peter Piper, a Herald reporter, while trying to get an interview with Dr. Cavanaugh, meets his daughter, Barbara, and finds she was engaged to Ellsworth before his marriage. Dr. Cavanaugh identifies a body burned in the tule marsh outside the city as that of Sheila O'Shay. Barbara faints when she hears this. Mrs. Kane, Sheila's maid, is arrested. Peter sees Dr. Cavanaugh enter the Ellsworth house and, climbing up the porch, finds the doctor in Sheila O'Shay's boudoir.

CHAPTER XXIV.—(Cont'd.)

Dr. Cavanaugh's eyes reflected in the wide mirror of the dressing table suddenly met Peter's—met them without change of expression, but with an unmistakable glance of recognition. In another instant the window was quietly opened from within.

"You might as well come in—you seem to be a fairly ubiquitous young man, by the way."

Peter felt exactly like a small boy caught in the farmer's apple orchard and required to make an ignominious descent from the tree. Stiffly he thrust his long legs over the window sill. His first words seemed to himself absurdly inadequate to the situation.

"But—but you couldn't possibly have seen me in that mirror!" he stammered. "I was behind a window at least fifteen feet away, and in the dark."

The doctor gently closed the window before turning to the astonished and shame-faced Peter.

"You have a good mind," he said gravely. "You have seized on the one factor that seemed inexplicable. As a matter of fact, I didn't see you. I merely looked encouragingly in the direction where you were most likely to be."

"Most likely—!" Peter flopped heavily on the lace-spread bed in his astonishment. He completely forgot that he might have been expected to make rather than to ask for explanations.

"There's no 'quick, Watson, the needle' about it."

The doctor's heavy face was illumined by one of his rare and genial smiles.

"I saw you start to follow me across the street, and then think better of it. Well, I've observed that you are a young man who never thinks better of getting things—only of the best means of getting them.

"You didn't follow me in at the front door; therefore you would follow me at the rear. I've known Don Ellsworth for years.

"I've walked under that pergola—though I never tried your mode of progress along the top. From the looks of you, I don't think I ever shall."

"I'll go if you say so." Peter strove to keep his tone matter-of-fact, but there was no banishing the wistful eagerness from his shining, expectant eyes

"It's housebreaking, you know. God and the police look with disfavor on it."

Peter leaped to his feet, his stiffness forgotten.

"God and the police may not like it, but Jimmy surely will!" he chortled. "Gee, what a tragic waste of talent it is that you're not on a newspaper, Dr. Cavanaugh! You'd be a wow as a reporter."

There was not a trace of irony in Dr. Cavanaugh's response to Peter's earnest tribute—the highest it was in his power to pay.

"We're both very lucky men," he said. "We're doing the thing of all the things in the world that we'd choose to do. Most men are less single-minded—or less lucky. Which reminds me that you haven't asked me what I'm doing at this moment in the boudoir of a lady with whom I am only slightly acquainted. Has it occurred to you that we may be just two housebreakers together?"

"At least I can be flattered to meet such a distinguished fellow burglar," Peter said with cheerful impudence. "I'll bet a dollar you thought you'd come around before the police got to it and take a look at those breach of promise papers!"

"I hope most of your investments are sounder than that one," said Dr. Cavanaugh. "Because in this instance you'd lose at least fifty cents of your dollar."

"But what about the other fifty cents?" inquired the unchastened Peter.

CHAPTER XXV.

"The other fifty cents," said Dr. Cavanaugh, "is safe. I did come, among other things, to look into the matter of those papers. But Captain Camberwell is responsible for my presence in this unconventional fashion. He didn't quite fancy leaving the survey of the last spot where, so far as we know, Mrs. Ellsworth was seen alive, to the estimable detectives promoted from the traffic squad. And the rest of the department, in a rare burst of diplomacy, backed him up. It's rather a ticklish case, this, from their point of view. Mr. Ellsworth has not given them what you'd call co-operation. He was not at all cordial to the sergeant who came in response to Mrs. Kane's call. To be exact, he turned him out of the house."

"Yes," Peter agreed with a reminiscent grin. "He's rather good at that. I'd like to have been present at the interview—it must have had its dramatic moments."

"Doubtless. At any rate, Ellsworth has them rather baffled. The department is shy about sending a couple of uniformed policemen to batter in the door of a prominent millionaire, flourishing a search warrant unless they have something more definite to go on than they have with Ellsworth. He might make things too uncomfortable later, if they were on the wrong track. And yet it is obviously necessary that a thorough investigation be made of the scene of Mrs. Ellsworth's disappearance.

"Camberwell is thoroughly competent to undertake the job himself, of course; but Ellsworth, I'm afraid, would not have greeted him with the respect his very high talents deserve."

"No," Peter grinned again. "Respects for people who come to interfere with what he regards as his private affairs is hardly one of Mr. Ellsworth's outstanding traits. I've noticed that myself."

"Well, the upshot of it all was, that at Camberwell's request I was called upon to fill the breach. Camberwell has an all too flattering opinion of my abilities. But at least I have the advantage of personal acquaintance with Ellsworth.

"He'd hardly shut the door in my face—provided I arrived when he was here to shut it at all, which, in the circumstances, I thought would be hardly tactful.

"I'm armed with a deputy sheriff's badge and a search warrant to use as a last resort—but I rather think our police friends had faith that I'd manage to get along without what I believe are sometimes referred to as strong arm methods. In return I stipulated that my services, such as they are, must be taken strictly as a favor. I prefer to have an entirely free hand: and the police accept that little idiosyncrasy, albeit with a certain reluctance."

"I'll bet they do!" Peter looked across at the doctor, who had resumed his somewhat precarious seat on the dressing table chair, with a very boyish enthusiasm. "They're like the transcendental female who told Carlyle she 'accepted the universe,' and the old bird said, 'Egad, she'd better!' The police, if I know them, will take whatever you choose to give them, and be grateful. But what's your idea about Ellsworth, anyway? Does—this—er, visit mean that we're getting the dope on him?"

"'We' haven't what you call the dope on anybody yet; and I make it a point not to have too many ideas in advance of the evidence."

The faint emphasis on that "we" brought a quick embarrassed flush to Peter's cheeks.

"You know I didn't mean—" he faltered, feeling more than ever like a small boy.

"Quite. You wouldn't be here at this moment if the "we" were disallowed. I did my own bit of housebreaking precisely because I haven't a fixed idea about our young friend. But I don't want him to run into more trouble than is strictly necessary, so I was willing to take the part assigned me in conducting this more or less official preliminary survey, at the same time following a little idea of my own. If he's left those papers alone well and good. If he's taken them away, he may be a panicky fool or—something else. In either case, I can do more good by taking my time looking about before the police wind the whole place up in yards of red tape and regulations. By the way, at the present moment you're not representing a newspaper. That's understood?"

"I'll take back to the office exactly what you give me permission to take," Peter assured him.

"We might as well begin, then. The safe won't be locked, so that part will be simple."

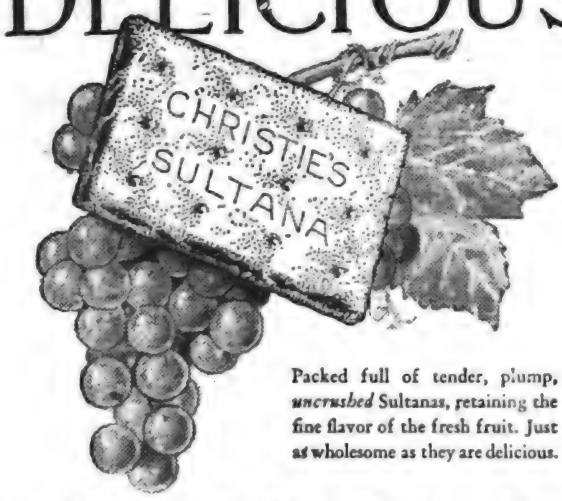
"But you haven't tried it yet!"

"No, but look at this." Dr. Cavanaugh turned to the dressing table and lifted the ornate roof from a box which was a replica of a French cathedral. Peter leaned over his shoulder. The chest was filled with a higgledy-piggledy assortment of jewels—a strand of pearls entangled in the points of a diamond and platinum brooch, bracelets and rings piled in a helter skelter mass.

"You see, she didn't even turn the key in her jewel case—the sort of person, I fancy, whose possessions were usually in a state of confusion. She gave up keys, because she always lost them. She had no fear of thieves, because the things that people are robbed of came easily to her. She could always get more. I'll put a nickel on the safe being unlocked—just a little private bet with my own judgment." Dr. Cavanaugh drew out the nickel and laid it on the smooth glass top of the dressing table.

"But mightn't Ellsworth have locked it?" Peter suggested.

"If he came here, he'd be in a hurry—and it would be his instinct to leave things as nearly as possible as he found them." Dr. Cavanaugh rose to his feet with a little sigh. "I suppose we might as well find out. It's always more interesting to work out a problem than to check it. But facts must have their day."



The doctor walked to the wall safe and confidently pulled at the handle, reached behind him with his free hand and pocketed the nickel.

The door swung open.

The safe was empty.

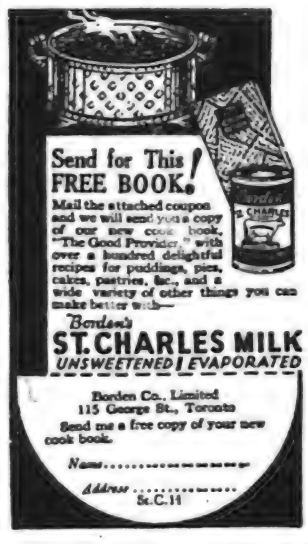
Can and Cannot



Astronomers can weigh a star,
  And tell a planet's girth,
And bring the moon from skies afar
  Well nigh in touch with earth.
But who can tune the throstle's throat
  Or match the streamlet's song,
Or estimate the joyous note
  Upon the skylark's tongue?

By mathematics men can count
  The motions atoms make,
And calculate the vast amount
  Of force when billows break.
But love's equation cannot be
  By sign or figures given,
For, boundless as eternity,
  It touches earth and heaven.

Ocean Bed at Deepest Point Remains Unsolved Mystery

While man continues his conquest of the air and the upper atmospheric regions by means of airplanes and balloons, the vast depths of the ocean remain inaccessible, except to sounding instruments. A diver in a suit has touched fortysix fathoms, or 276 feet, and lived. William Beebe and Otis Barton descended last year to a depth of 1,426 feet off Bermuda in a steel sphere, and various specimens of multi-colored and illuminated fish have been obtained from a mile below the surface, but the rest of the underwater world is impenetrable.

Yet an ocean depth of ground 35,000 feet has been reported, a distance which exceeds the greatest known height above sea level—Mount Everest in the Himalayas, which is more than 29,000 feet high. Ocean depths greater than 18,000 feet are called deeps and have names, as do mountains. The 35,000-foot measurement was made in Mindanao Deep, between the Philippines and Japan.

Nearly sixty deeps have been charted, more than half of them in the Pacific. The largest, the Valdiva, extending around Southern Africa partly beneath the Indian Ocean, covers an area caluculated to be 1,136,000 square miles, while the Murray, in the Northern Pacific, have reaches almost as great. Very deep soundings have been made comparatively near land, particularly off the western coast of South America, off Japan and off the South Sea Islands. The Nares Deep, the greatest lying wholly in the Atlantic, has a very irregular outline, and in the vicinity of the West Indies sinks to depths of more than 30,000 feet. It has an area of nearly 700,000 square miles.

A hundred miles southeast of New York City, lying a mile below the surface, is Hudson Gorge, the nearest deep-sea canyon. Twenty-five thousand years ago, when the ocean's level was 300 feet lower than now, man could have walked the 100 miles out to sea dry-shod. A million years ago, scientists estimate, the whole region was dry soil.

To Wage War On Insect Pests

An appeal to take up the cudgels of war against flies, mosquitoes and other insect pests is made by Wade Morrow, Canadian Director of the Rex Research Foundation, of Toronto, Ontario.

The Rex Research Foundation is an international organization devoted to warfare on harmful insects. Mr. Morrow stated that, since the severe outbreak in 1912, the public has been lax in keeping down these pests.

Warm, moist weather in many sections has aided a widespread increase of flies and mosquitoes. He urged that an extermination campaign be undertaken, not alone for its immediate results but as a precaution against larvae deposits that will result in hordes of insects infesting this locality next year.

"Best authorities agree that there are about 6 species of mosquitoes in Canada which feed on the blood of human beings," said Mr. Morrow. "Although a majority of them are most annoying in the woodlands, they often cause people considerable trouble indoors. In autumn they are generally found in cellars and basements.

"Too many of us are inclined to think of flies in terms of personal discomfort and annoyance. There are no other insects that spread so much disease—they are known to carry germs of 30 different ailments, many of which are very often fatal. The yearly toll of life from "fly borne diseases" is more than the annual automobile fatalities. One fly can carry as many as 6,000,000 germs on its body from its common breeding place in the most filthy places.

"Now is the time to exterminate both these dangerous and deadly pests. The best and most efficient method is for every householder, storekeeper or farmer to spray homes, stores and barns twice daily with good insecticide. Swatting the fly or the use of flypapers in homes is inefficient, destroying only a few.

"Spraying not only destroys flies and mosquitoes present; it will keep other insects from entering for a period of time.

"Cool weather causes insects to hide in places inaccessible to extermination methods other than a mist spray. And fall flies are a greater menace than those in summer because of their propagation possibilities for the following season. Exterminate one fly this fall and you prevent millions from hatching in the spring."

To Make Their Own

The "Sturmvogel," organization of young German workers interested in aviation, is not only teaching its members how to fly planes, but also how to make their own. According to Berlin papers, unemployed members of the Friedrichshain group have built a one-passenger plane, with a 14-horsepower motor, at a total cost of 95 marks (worth 23.8 cents each), of which 550 went for the motor.

October 11. Lesson II—Paul In Philippi—Acts 16: 22-34; Philippians 4: 4-7. Golden Text—Rejoice in the Lord always and again I say, Rejoice.—Philippians 4: 4.

ANALYSIS

I. HANDS OFF PROFITS, Acts 16: 16-24.

II. THE REWARDS OF COURAGE, Acts 16: 25-34.

III. DEMANDING ONE'S RIGHTS, Acts 16: 35-40.

INTRODUCTION — Christianity was now confronting a new situation—a paganism that knew nothing of Judaism. Philippi was inhabited by Italians and Greeks, who owned and worked the gold and silver mines in the neighborhood. The missionaries, thus unhindered by the usual Jewish hostility, were quietly proclaiming the new gospel of salvation by faith. Soon the incident occurred which brought Paul's activities suddenly to a close.

I. HANDS OFF PROFITS, Acts 16: 16-24.

The trouble began over the curing of a mentally-unbalanced slave girl. She was supposed to have supernatural knowledge, and her masters, taking advantage of her condition, made a good business out of her fortune telling, v. 16.

She became convinced that these missionaries were the inspired slaves of the "Most High God," a widely known title for the chief deity; and also the agents of "salvation," a desire for which was wide-spread throughout the region. Her continual shoutings greatly embarrassed Paul and the others. Nor could they permit their message to be advertised by such means. Paul, invoking divine help, restored her to normal health. This, of course, ended her profit-making powers.

When Christianity began to interfere with profits, the antagonism of the vested interests was at once aroused. The owners of the slave girl thought more about their financial success than about the means by which that success was won. They saw in the girl, not an unfortunate member of the human family, but a means to private gain. They recognized that the principles of Jesus were antagonistic to the exploitingof human beings for profit. Appealing to anti-Jewish prejudices, they trumped up a disloyalty charge (v. 21) against Paul and Silas. Luke and the others were evidently unmolested. The "we" passage ends with v. 17 The scourging and imprisonment which followed are the first recorded instances of persecution by Roman authorities.

II. THE REWARDS OF COURAGE, Acts 16: 25-34.

In prison, the courage of one strengthened the other. The two men prayed—and sang. Their trials had left them undaunted. Their religion enabled them to rise above their circumstances. No wonder that the other prisoners "were listening earnestly" to them, v. 25.

At midnight an earth-tremor (v. 26) threw open the prison doors and loosed the prisoners. We are not to think of the locked doors of the modern prison. Dr. Ramsay says that "any one who has seen a Turkish prison will not wonder that the doors were thrown open. Each door was merely closed with a bar. The tremor as it passed along the ground would force the posts apart so that the bars would slip from their hold and the doors would swing open. So, too, the chains would fall from the loosened stones of the walls.

The prisoners, probably for the moment panic-stricken, and restrained by Paul—as v. 28 implies, made no attempt to escape. The jailor, whose own life, according to Roman law, was held responsible for his prisoners (12: 19), was about to commit suicide in order to escape the disgrace of a court-martial death, when Paul assured him that all were safe.

As the jailor was making the prisoners fast, he recalled, doubtless, what the slave girl had been shouting,—the "slaves of the Most High God," she had called them. They brought "salvation," she said. After the astounding events of the night, there could be little doubt of it. His inquiry brought salvation to himself and his household, 29-34. The evangelists thus won the usual rewards of courage; hostility and suffering, an untroubled mind in spite of apparent defeat, souls for their hire.

III. DEMANDING ONE'S RIGHTS, Acts 16: 35-40.

The magistrates, too, had felt the earthquake, and, like the jailor, had connected it with the preachers. In the morning they sent a message ordering their release, v. 35. Paul's turn, however, had now come. One of the most valued privileges of a Roman citizen was immunity from corporal punishment. He, a Roman citizen, had been beaten publicly—by order of these magistrates—and without a hearing.

Why did Paul, a Christian, demand his rights? More was involved than his personal privileges. For the success of his work, his Roman citizenship was most valuable. Its rights, unclaimed now, would be of little value again. Also a public vindication would strengthen the position of those whom he would leave behind when he went away. Therefore he insisted on his rights for the sake of the Cause.

Hogs Deplete Grasshoppers

In the past few weeks quite a number of clover and alfalfa fields and even corn fields have disappeared via the hopper route, says the American Hampshire Herdsman, hence making the grasshopper situation a matter of grave concern for the Nebraska farmers. Various methods of control are being tried, some of which are successful, some not. One farmer, however, continues the writer, had brought to his attention an entirely new idea on pest control when he started out bright and early one morning to round up his cows. Off to the south in his pasture he noticed what appeared to be a game of indoor baseball, participated in by some 175 agile Hampshire shoats. Closer investigation proved that these pigs were merely gathering their morning rations of tankage in the form of luscious grasshoppers. G. Lockhart of Syracuse, Neb., also reports that his Hamps are making rapid gains and slowly the grasshoppers are disappearing.

Preserve Canada's Forests

Toronto Telegram: One Canadian who has earned the admiration of thinking Canadians is Frank J. D. Barnjum. Year after year he has put up a heroic fight for the preservation of Canada's forests. Making wildernesses where once magnificent forests stood results in droughts, floods, forest fires, insects and erosion, the losses from which are increasing year by year at an appalling rate. Moreover, as Mr. Barnjum points out, the prodigality with which pulpwood concessions have been handed out may have helped the promoters, but has resulted in the loss to the public of hundreds of millions of dollars. It is time that the public of Canada rose in their might and gave needed assistance in his campaign to stop this imbecile waste of the country's resources.

Magnetic Sweeper Salvages Fortune in Precious Metal

When the housewife uses the carpet sweeper she is not trying to recover some missing pieces of costly platinum. However, in factories where lamps for switchboard signals are manufactured, this is one of the jobs the sweeper must do.

Platinum wire is used in this manufacture and some of the platinum gets lost in handling, particles dropping on the floor. One way of getting them is with a small magnet, but a magnetic sweeper is also used. The sweeper consists of several individual magnets placed side by side on a frame which has wheels and a handle. Several times a day the sweeper goes over the floor collecting bits of platinum.

Gulf Stream Grows Colder, French Meteorologists Suspect

Dinard, France. — Fishermen and meteorologists are going to determine whether the Gulf Stream is growing colder or whether currents from the northern ice shelf have shoved it out of its usual path.

The disappearance of certain fish which formerly abounded in the stream and reports of bathers that sea water is colder than usual have led to the decision to sink thermometers over a twenty-mile strip of the stream.

Contract Plan Proposed As Farmers' Solution

London.—A suggestion that farm crops be produced on contract, much like shoes or shaving soap is manufactured on dealers 'orders, was made at the centenary meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science.

It was made by Sir John Russell, whose paper on "The Changing Outlook in Agriculture" sought to answer the British farmer's question of supplying food requirements to the country without piling up surpluses which injure the grower without benefiting the consumer.

Paradox in Britain's Population Rate

Excess of Births Over Deaths, It is Argued, May Yet Mean an Actual Decline in Population

Although births have exceeded deaths in England by more than 100,000 a year for several years, it is still argued that the country is threatened with an actual decrease in population. Analyses by several competent statisticians are interpreted by Professor S. J. Holmes, of the University of California,to bear out this contention.

If we disregard migration, a population in which births exceed deaths is obviously increasing. If the birth rate were twenty-five per 1,000, and the death rate twenty per 1,000, the population would be increasing at the rate of five per 1,000 each year. But to infer that, if the present fertility and mortality were to remain the some, the population would keep on increasing at the same rate, would constitute a serious error. Curiously enough, a surplus of births over deaths does not insure a rate of reproduction that will continue to maintain a stock at its presen level.

To explain this paradox, suppose that a population contains relatively few children and a large proportion of women between the ages of 20 and 40, when child-bearing is most frequent. The birth rate of this population would be high. Consider the same population twenty years from now when the women are older and only a small number of children are born. Then, as the age composition of the population would be unfavorable for rapid increase, the birth rate would be bound to fall.

When the birth rates and death rates are known for the various age groups, it is possible to estimate what the natural increase of a population would be when the anomalies of its age composition are outgrown. It has been estimated, by studies in the United States, that the true rate of increase is only about half of what is indicated by subtracting the death rate from the birth rate.

The statistician, Kuczynski, in his volume, "The Balance of Births and Deaths," has estimated the population growth of northern and western Europe. To obtain a satisfactory index of what he calls the net fertility rate, M. Kuczynski has calculated the extent to which women give rise to other women to replace them. In 1916, he finds that the rate for the whole region did not exceed 0.93, which means an actual loss, and for the various countries: Finland, 1.09; Denmark, 1.097; Sweden, 0.95, and France, 0.937. Germany's rates, in 1926 and 1927 were lower than those of France.

In England and Wales, he estimates, the net reproduction rate, which in 1921 was 1,087, was 0.88 in 1926, and 0.82 in 1927. This would seem to mean that the rate of those countries will not maintain the present population when the age composition of the people adjusts itself more nearly to the present rate of propagation.

Cheap Student Rates Offered in Germany

In order to promote air-mindedness among the rising generation in Germany and at the same time help keep the seats in its passenger planes filled, the Lufthansa recently announced that it would carry college students at special rates, approximating the third-class railroad fare. Applicants for these rates must have vouchers proving their identity and make their requests for passage just before the scheduled departures of the planes, as passengers paying the regular prices must all be taken care of before room is made for the students.

This rule is important at all times, but especially so at dusk and at night.

At such times, no matter how careful the driver of a car is, he may not see you until he is very near to you and it may be impossible for him to stop in time to avoid inflicting serious injury.

Should he swerve to avoid hitting you, though you may escape injury others may be hurt.

OUR MINERAL NEEDS

When speaking of our national wealth and resources, the abundance of minerals in our country is generally referred to. Minerals are of great value because they are used so widely in our modern civilization to provide the things we use in our daily life.

Minerals are important not only because they are useful, but because some of them are an essential part of our food. We may indeed wonder what we could do without, for instance, the copper which enters into so many things which seem to require, and as for the minerals in our food, we see no possibility of a substitute; they are apparently indispensable.

About six per cent of the body weight is made up of minerals which enter into the composition of all the tissues. Calcium is the mineral used most extensively by the body; it is the chief constituent of bones and teeth.

Minerals are present in varying amounts in a wide variety of foods. Calcium is found in abundance in cabbage, lettuce, water-cress, Brussels sprouts and onions. Sodium comes in apples, strawberries and spinach. Iron is present in spinach, lettuce and strawberries.

An adequate supply of minerals is secured by those who use fruits and vegetables each day. The most common error made in selecting foods is not to choose a sufficient quantity of vegetables and fruits. Many individuals would enjoy a greater measure of health if they were to give some thought to what they eat.

It is certainly not suggested that we become food faddists. It is, however, quite reasonable that some attention be given to foods, for the foods we eat determine, in large measure, to what extent health will be enjoyed.

In order to make sure of a properly-balanced diet, which means a diet containing a sufficient amount of all the substances which the body requires and which it secures from the food eaten, a wide variety of foods should be used. It is not necessary to know just what elements this food or that contains if a wide variety is used, because the variety assures a sufficiency of the essentials.

The wide variety will include milk products, green leafy vegetables and fresh fruits. When such variety is used, there will be a sufficient supply of minerals and all other food constituents in the diet..

Eat a wide variety of foods. Use milk and milk products daily and make sure that fruits and green leafy vegetables form a regular part of the diet.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Streetsville Fair Best on Record

In spite of the superstition that a postponed event is never as successful as one carried out, the annual show of the Toronto Township Agricultural Society went over on Monday with a better attendance, more entries, and more interest than for some years past. Keen competition was shown in all classes, the r aces were hotly contested, and special events provided exceptional entertainment for everyone. Orangeville Citizens' Band, supplemented by the Kansas Farmer, appealed to those not greatly interested in the large array of exhibits.

An adequate midway was in attendance for those with a few spare quarters. One "faker" who was not giving the crowd a square deal, at the request of the Fair committee, backed by Provincial Constable Joseph Allen, moved rapidly out of the grounds.

The Baby Show, an annual feature, drew eighteen mothers anxious to secure one or other of the prizes offered by Dr. Montemurro. Winners were: 1st, Douglas Pinkney, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Pinkney, Alton, Ont., aged one year; 2nd, Billy Portiss, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Portiss, Jr., Streetsville, aged two months; 3rd, Donald Evans, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. D Evans, Streetsville, aged six months.

The horse classes were well filled, and a feature of the competition was the driving of Miss Eva Wolfe in the open race buggy. Results in the special classes were:

Buggy race, A. B. Webber, Kitchener; Miss Eva Wolfe, Erindale; A. Clark, Norval. Potato race, A. Clark, Norval; J. Scott and J. Devlin, Streetsville. Horseshoe pitching, I. McEachern, Woodbridge, 158 points; D. Hamilton, Woodbridge, 148 points; J. Miller, Streetsville, 141 points. Bicycle race, Ben Madill, Brampton; John Scott, Streetsville; C. E. Hersom, Streetsville.

Miss Pearl Crozier, on "Rosalind," secured first place in the competition for lady riders.

Although the classes of harness races had only three entries in each, both showed clever driving. The performance of Dr. Hopkins with a horse in first place in one race, and another in second in the other class was the most notable of the meet. Results were:

2.28 class—Sparkle, Dr. Hopkins, Cooksville, 1, 1, 1; Dame Chilcoot, Dr. F. Hutchinson, Brampton, 2, 2, 2; Flossy Todd, Gooderham, Meadowvale, 3, 3, 3. Woods; judges, B. Chester, Brampton, Dr. Hyslop, Milton, D. McClure, Brampton.

In all the animal classes, local exhibitors took high standing, in spite of competition from some of the best known showmen of the county and of some from distant points. Horse and stock winners, briefly, were:

Although many of the exhibitors who had planned to show flowers, baking, etc.,had to throw away their articles, and prepare others, the hall was completely filled with exhibits. The weather does not seem to have affected the quality of fruit, vegetables nor flowers in the Streetsville neighbourhood judging by the display in the hall on Monday.

In the hall classes, as well as in the show ring, local exhibitors met competition from a distance, and on the whole, defeated the invaders by a large margin.

In the enormous number of special prizes offered, the local exhibitors found prizes worthy of their mettle, and carried off a large percentage of the prizes . A few of the winners in the various classes shown in the hall were:

Ready for school! Well I guess! It's so thoroughly smart and typically French. The front panel extends into the circular skirt at the front and makes it very easy to fashion.

Isn't the neckline smart with turnover collar and bow tie?

A fine triped woolen tweed effect in rich brown made the original. the pockets, belt and sleeve cuffs were vivid red woolen. The tie in crepe de chine matched the plain red woolen. The collar of white pique was made detachable so as to be readily laundered.

Easy for Him

She was telling her girl friend of her great heart-break.

"Yes, Mary," she said, "when the brute proposed he said he was prepared to live on bread-and-cheese and kisses."

The other nodded knowingly.

"And you didn't take him at his word, I suppose?" she put in.

The disappointed girl nodded.

"He expected my father to supply even the bread-and-cheese," came the reply.

SAVED IMPORTED DRESS

"After a little wearing, a lovely green voile—an imported dress—lost color so completely that it was not wearable. A friend who had admired it asked me why I wasn't wearing it any more. On hearing the reason, she advised dyeing it and recommended Diamond Dyes. To make a long story short, it turned out beautifully. I have a lovely new dress that really cost just 15c—the price of one package of Diamond Dyes.

"I have since used Diamond Dyes for both tinting and dyeing. They do either equally well. I am not an expert dyer but I never have a failure with Diamond Dyes. They seem to be made so they always go on smoothly and evenly. They never spot, streak or run; and friends never know the things I dye with Diamond Dyes are redyed at all!"

All Square

He was a stout man, and his feet were large in proportion. He wore stout boots, too, with broad sensibly-shaped toes. When he came into the shop to buy another pair, he had some difficulty in getting what he wanted.

A dozen pairs were shown to him.

"No, no! Square toes—I must have square toes," he insisted.

"But, sir," replied the shop assistant, "everybody is wearing shoes with pointed toes. They are fashionable this season."

"Well," said the stout man, gravely, as he prepared to leave the shop. "I'm sorry to have troubled you. But, you see, I'm still wearing my last season's feet."

"Oh, we found 'em in your trunk in the attic, all tied up with blue ribbon."

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS

Don Ellsworth's wife, formerly the actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, learns their married life has been very unhappy.

Peter Piper, a Herald reporter, while trying to interview Dr. Cavanaugh, meets Barbara Cavanaugh and finds that she was engaged to Don Ellsworth before his marriage.

Dr. Cavanaugh identifies the the burned remains of a body found in the tule marsh outside the city as that of Sheila O'Shay. Barbara faints when she hears this. Mrs. Kane, Sheila's maid, is arrested. Peter climbs up the porch of the Ellsworth house and finds Dr. Cavanaugh in Sheila's boudoir, and is invited in. They find that the breach of promise papers with which Sheila forced Ellsworth to marry her, have been taken from the safe.

CHAPTER XXVI.

"Whew!" Peter exhaled his pent breath in a long, whistling sigh. "So Ellsworth's made off with the evidence that his marriage wasn't precisely a love match. Not that I blame him for disliking the lady. I think I'd have disliked her considerably, myself."

"It looks that way." Dr. Cavanaugh stared gloomily into the empty cavity. "I'm sorry. It doesn't prove anything, of course."

"Well, it's rather an indication, isn't it? It shows that Ellsworth thought the information contained in those papers was dangerous—and it wouldn't be dangerous unless it led to something he wanted to hide. He wasn't aware that the Kane woman knew about it, of course."

"Precisely," Dr. Cavanaugh agreed wearily. His face with its deeply graven lines looked suddenly older. "I wish he'd thought of that. It's the mistake so many people make—the mistake of not realizing that concealment, whatever the motive, is bound to be taken as you've taken it. And it makes it impossible for me to help him. If he hadn't already taken those papers, I was going to warn him for heaven's sake to leave them alone. I've known him a long while, you know. I wanted to prevent his doing a foolish thing—if I could. But now it's out of my hands. I can't go to a man who's possibly guilty and tell him the way he ought to proceed to establish the appearance of innocence."

Peter, his hands thrust deep in his pockets, strode to the window and stared out into the darkness. Warning? The doctor had meant to warn Ellsworth.

Had he been warned already—warned that the papers revealing his forced marriage still existed and were likely to be found unless he got them out of the way? Who could have warned him—except Barbara? Barbara, who fainted when she learned that Sheila O'Shay's body had been found—Barbara, who had once been, and perhaps still was, in love with Ellsworth—Barbara, whom Peter himself had told of the breach of promise threat—Barabra, with the candid brow and the shining eyes of a child, Barbara with that wary, withdrawn look that defied interpretation.

Peter's shoulders dropped dejectedly. He felt an irrational indignation against Sheila O'Shay for getting herself murdered and dragging Barbara into it. The sharp sound of the safe door closing recalled him.

"We'd better see what else there is while we're here," the doctor said with a slight shrug of his shoulders, as if he were shaking off an intangible weight. "We'll leave Don out of it for the present, and concentrate on Mrs. Ellsworth. She seems a person who might have left considerable traces behind her."

"I don't like her," Peter announced with great definiteness. "Too much fussiness." He thought suddenly of a girl whose clothes were slim and straight, in a room full of firelight and orange marigolds. "I wouldn't have married her if she'd bluffed me with a dozen breach of promise suits."

"Nevertheless, several men did."

"Did—?"

"Marry her. She was a woman of very devastating charm, and if she had no conspicuous force of intellect, she had an unusual force of will. She always got what she wanted—until, poor lady, some one rebelled and gave her what she wanted least of all. I did not know her very well, but you hardly needed to know her to see that."

"But a woman who kept all that junk!" Peter's voice vibrated with youthful and uncompromising distaste. He waved a hand toward the dressing table mirror, whose edges were completely bordered with old invitation cards, dance favors, dinner place-cards, even the stubs of theatre tickets.

"Precisely," the doctor said drily. "Nothing eclouds the judgment like moral disapproval. If you're interested in finding out who murdered Sheila O'Shay, it's just possible that you ought to be grateful for her passion for hoarding souvenirs."

He bent forward across the dressing table, made a quick and thorough survey of the various bits of paper at the mirror's edge, and turned to the small ornate desk with a drop-leaf lid which stood against the wall.

As he lowered the flap which, when opened, formed a shelf for writing, a veritable avalanche of letters, bills, envelopes and programs cascaded from the bulging interior.

"I rather thought she was like that," the doctor mused, with a glance at the crammed holes. "When Mrs Kane mentioned that she had saved the breach of promise papers. That was a rather motiveless thing to do, except for the uncommon type of person who has a sort of collectors' mania for preserving every momento of her past life. And in that case there may be other significant mementos. I think we'll have to look them over. Rifling a lady's desk is not a very nice occupation; but then, we're investigating the lady's murder, and murder is not a very nice occupation either. I hardly think we can afford to stand on etiquette."

Peter sat astride the dressing table chair, his long legs twisted about the rungs, his folded arms resting across its low back, and watched the doctor's deft fingers rapidly unfold sheet after sheet of folded or crumpled paper and toss them in a mounting pile on the floor at his feet.

"By the way, where's Ellsworth?" he asked after an interval. "Or am I interrupting."

"Not a bit. A glance is quite enough for all of this stuff, so far. I'll tell you if I find anything." Dr. Cavanaugh's hands did not hesitate in their task of extracting and casting aside the contents of the desk. "Don is engaged in a very quiet poker session in a private room at his club. I unofficially escorted him there myself, although he did not know it."

"With the whole countryside moving heaven and earth to find his wife's murderer? Well, I thought I was beyond being surprised at anything." Peter's capacity for astonishment was obviously not entirely exhausted.

"Not the whole countryside, my lad. Only a few policemen and reporters and people like that. And Don Ellsworth, who faced with a disagreeable situation does not sit down and contemplate it, even when that is precisely what he needs to do. All his life he has sought distraction—escape. Always he has found it easily enough. Fate needn't be too hard on him. With his upbringing, it was almost inevitable. Probably Sheila O'Shay, in the beginning, was one of those distractions. He may not find his diversion so easily this time, but the impulse to seek it was the most natural thing in the world for him. You might be grateful for that, too. He won't be until the small hours of the morning—which gives us this very opportune leisure."

"He didn't know you were coming, then?"

"No. He's an irascible young man, and I didn't want to upset him unnecessarily."

"Yes," agreed Peter with a grin, "I've noticed the irascibility."

"I told you I was a housebreaker, too, you know. I owe my presence in the house to Ethel. I'm rather elderly for pergolas—and perhaps just a shade too conventional."

"Ethel?" Peter rested his chin on the chair-back and grinned an impudent question at the doctor's imperturbable back.
